MINOIA, Ambrogio (b. Ospitaletto nr. Lodi, 22 Oct. 1752; d. Milan, 3 Aug. 1825).

Italian composer. He was a pupil of Anselmi at Lodi and of Nicola Sala at Naples. From 1781 to 1801 he was maestro al cembalo at the Teatro alla Scala, Milan, where he produced his first opera, 'Tito nelle Gallie', on 26 Dec. 1786. This was followed in Rome by 'L' Olimpiade' on 26 Dec. 1787. In 1795 he was maestro al cembalo at the Parma theatre, afterwards again at the Scala and director of the Milan Conservatory. He composed masses and other church music, coronation music for Napoleon and music for members of his court, etc.; orchestral and chamber music and a book of solfeggi which were largely used for a long time. He also wrote 'Letters on Singing' (addressed to Bonifazio Asioli), which were translated into German. The manuscript of an autobiographical sketch by Minoia was in the former Heyer Museum at Cologne. A. L.

MINOR CANON. See CATHEDRAL MUSIC.

MINOR INTERVALS. See INTERVALS.

MINOR SCALE. See SCALE.

MINORE (Ital.) = minor. A term used as a warning sign in music which changes suddenly into the tonic (or sometimes the relative) minor of the original key, and in which the change of signature might escape the observation of the performer. It is most commonly found, like its counterpart, maggiore, in variations.

J. A. F.-M.

See also Maggiore.

MINSTREL (Fr. ménétrier). The name so vaguely used in modern romantic language as the equivalent of musician, had originally a far more definite signification. Its most probable derivation is from minister, and at first the minstrels seem to have been employed by the troubadours as their attendants, possibly in order to accompany them on some stringed instrument. Through all the development of music the idea of an instrumental performer has clung to the name minstrel, who appears to have corresponded in the north of France to the jongleur of the south and to have performed the same functions. The name minstrel has undergone no such debasing change of meaning as has been the fate of jongleur in its modern form of juggler.

J. A. F.-M.

MINSTRELLE GRAND. See PIANOFORTE.

MINUET (Fr. menuet; Ger. Menuett; Ital. *minuetto*²; Spa. minuete, minué). A dance the name of which is derived from the French menu (small) and has been attributed to the short steps of the dance. They are not conspicuously so, however. The chief characteristics of the dance are nobility and the grace which comes from performing slow steps with balance and control. The mincing and ogling seen in modern theatrical revivals are grossly unhistorical.

Practorius ('Terpsichore', Wolfenbüttel, 1612) was probably in error in deriving the minuet from the branle de Poitou, though Rameau ('Le Maître à danser', Paris, 1725) follows him, adding the plausible detail that Beauchamp, Lully's choreographer and dancing-master to Louis XIV, effected the transformation. There is virtually no point of resemblance between the two dances. The galliard is a more likely source. Like the minuet, it is in triple time, its steps fall into two-bar units, it is for a single couple requiring the entire floor for comparable figures and it had followed the opening pavan as the courante at first but thereafter the minuet followed the opening branle.

¹ Doubtless using material from the abandoned opera-ballet of 1872.

² Not menuetto, a hybrid form which frequently, not to say regularly, appears as the title of minuet movement in non-Italian works of the classical period.

The minuet was not fashionable before the middle of the 17th century. Its pace in 1703 was rapid, as the Abbé Brossard insists :

One ought, in imitation of the Italians, to use the signature 3-8 or 6-8 to mark its movement, which is always very gay and very fast. But the custom of marking it by a simple 3 or 3-4 has prevailed.

By 1750 the 'Encyclopédie' of Diderot and d'Alembert describes it as "of a noble and elegant simplicity; the movement is moderate rather than quick". The passepied is virtually a minuet taken at a quicker tempo, and therefore easier to dance with good balance.

R. D.

In its earliest form the minuet consisted of two eight-bar phrases in 3-4 time, each of which was repeated, sometimes beginning on the third, but more frequently upon the first, beat of the bar. As a complement to the short movement a second minuet was soon added, similar in form to the first, but contrasted in feeling. This was mostly written in 3-part harmony, whence it received its name "trio", a name retained down to the present time, long after the restriction as to the number of parts had been abandoned. A further enlargement in the form of the minuet consisted in the extension of the number of bars, especially in the second half of the dance, which frequently contained sixteen or even more bars instead of the original eight. It is in this form that it is mostly found in the suite.

SUITES.—In the works of the composers of the 18th century, especially Handel and Bach, the minuet is by no means an indispensable part of the suite. As compared with some other movements, such as the allemande, courante or saraband, it may be said to be of somewhat infrequent occurrence. Its usual position in the suite is among the miscellaneous dances to be found between the saraband and the gigue, though we exceptionally meet with it in the third Suite of Handel's second set as a final movement, with three variations. In Handel, moreover, it is very rare to find a second minuet (or trio) following the first. On the other hand this composer frequently gives considerable development to each section of the movement, as in the eighth Suite of the second set, where the minuet (written, by the way, as is frequently the case with Handel, in 3-8 as advocated by Brossard) contains thirty-four bars in the first part and seventy-one in the second. This piece has little of the character of the ordinary minuet excepting the rhythm. Handel also frequently finishes the overtures of his operas and oratorios with a minuet; one of the best-known instances occurs in the overture to 'Samson'.

Bach's minuets are remarkable for their variety of form and character. In the Partita in B♭ major (No. 1) the first minuet contains sixteen bars in the first section and twenty-two in the second; while the second minuet is quite in the old form, consisting of two parts of eight bars each. The minuet of the fourth Partita (D major) has no trio, and its sections contain the first eight and the second twenty bars. In a Suite for clavier in E♭ major (B.-G., XXXVI, p. 12) we find an early example of a frequent classical practice. The first minuet is in E♭ major and the second in the tonic minor. It may be remarked in passing that Bach never uses the term "trio" for the second minuet unless it is actually written in three parts. In the fourth of the six sonatas for flute and clavier we meet with another departure from the custom of the day which ordained that all movements of a suite must be in the same key. We here see the first minuet in C major and the second in A minor—a precedent often followed in more modern works. Another example of the same relation of keys will be found in the fourth of the so-called "English" Suites—the only one which contains a minuet. Here the first minuet is in F major and the second in D minor. Of the six "French" Suites four have minuets, two of which are worth noticing. In the second minuet of the first Suite the latter half is not repeated—a very rare thing; in the third Suite we meet with a genuine trio in three parts throughout, and at the end the indication "Menuet da capo". Though it was always understood that the first minuet was to be repeated after the second, it is very rare at this date to find the direction expressly given. One more interesting innovation of Bach remains to be mentioned. In his great F major Concerto for solo violin, two horns, three oboes, bassoon and strings (Brandenburg No. 1) will be found a minuet with three trios, after each of which the minuet is repeated. We shall presently see that Mozart, half a century later, did the same thing.

THE SYMPHONIC MINUET.—The historic importance of the minuet arises from the fact that, unlike the other ancient dances, it did not become obsolete, but continued to hold a place in the symphony (the descendant of the old suite) and in other large instrumental works written in the same form, including chamber music, especially the string quartet. The first composer to introduce the minuet into the symphony appears to have been Stamitz, but its chief early exponent is Haydn; for in the works of this class which preceded his (those of C. P. E. Bach, Sammartini and others) we find only three movements. And even with Haydn (as also in many of Mozart's works) we find the minuet at first by no means of invariable occurrence. On the other hand we sometimes see in the same work two minuets, each with a trio, one before and one after the slow movement. Examples will be met with in Haydn's first twelve quartets (Opp. 1 and 2) and also in some of Mozart's serenatas and divertimenti, e.g. K. 63, 99, 204, 247.

While in general retaining the old form of the minuet, Haydn greatly changed its spirit. By his time the dance had become stately in character and somewhat slow. With Haydn its prevailing tone was light-hearted humour, sometimes even developing into downright fun. The time became quicker again. While in the earlier works the most frequent indications are allegretto, or allegro ma non troppo, we find in the later quartets more than once a presto (Opp. 76 and 77). These minuets thus become an anticipation of the Beethoven scherzo. Curiously enough, in one set of quartets, and in one only (Op. 33), Haydn designates this movement "scherzando" in Nos. 1 and 2 and "scherzo" in Nos. 3 to 6. As the tempo here is not more rapid than in the other minuets, it is evident that the term refers only to the character of the music and is not used in the modern sense. As we learn from Pohl's 'Haydn' (p. 332) that the composer carefully preserved the chronological order of the quartets in numbering them, we are in a position to trace the gradual development of the minuet through the entire series. We find one of Haydn's innovations in some of the later works to be the trio in a key more remote from that of the minuet, instead of in one of those more nearly related (Quartet in F, Op. 72 No. 2 — minuet in F, trio in D \flat ; Quartet in C, Op. 74 No. 1 — minuet in C, trio in A major). This relation of the tonics was a favourite one with Beethoven. In only one of Haydn's quartets (Op. 9 No. 4) do we find a trio in three-part writing, though the name is always given to the second minuet. A curious departure from the ordinary form is to be seen in the Quartet in E \flat major, Op. 2 No. 3. Here the trio of the second minuet has three variations, one of which is played, instead of the original trio, after each repetition of the minuet.

It is no uncommon thing in the works of Haydn to meet with another variety of the minuet. The finales of his smaller works are often written in a "tempo di minuetto". Here the regular subdivisions of minuet and trio, sometimes also the double bars and repeats, are abandoned. In the pianoforte sonatas and trios many examples will be met with. An instance of a similar movement by Mozart is furnished in the finale of his F major violin Sonata. Haydn's predilection for the minuet is further shown by the fact that in several of his sonatas in three movements the minuet and trio replace the slow movement, which is altogether absent.

With Mozart the form of the minuet is identical with that of Haydn; it is the spirit that is different. Suavity, tenderness and grace rather than overflowing animal spirits are now the prevailing characteristics. It is in Mozart's concerted instrumental works (serenatas, etc.) that his minuets must be chiefly studied; they are singularly rare in his pianoforte compositions. Of seventeen solo sonatas only two (those in E \flat major and A major) contain minuets; while out of forty-two sonatas for pianoforte and violin minuets are found in only four as intermediate movements, though in the earlier works a "tempo di minuetto" often forms the finale. In many of the earlier symphonies also we find only three movements, and even in several of the later symphonies (e.g. K. 297, 338, 444, 504) the minuet is wanting. On the other hand, in the serenades and divertimenti especial prominence is given to this movement. Frequently two minuets are to be found and in some cases (K. 100, 203, 250) three are to be met with. The variety of character and colouring in these minuets is the more striking as the form is approximately the same in all. In the Divertimento in D major (K. 131) for strings, flute, oboe, bassoon and four horns there are two minuets, the first of which has three trios and the second two. The first minuet (in D major) is given to strings alone; the first trio (also in D major) is a quartet for the four horns; the second (in G) is a trio for flute, oboe and bassoon; while the third (in D minor) is for the seven wind instruments in combination. After the last repetition of the minuet a coda for all the instruments concludes the movement. The three trios are as strongly contrasted in musical character as in orchestral colour. Many similar instances might easily be given from Mozart's works.

To Beethoven we owe the transformation of the minuet into the scherzo. Still Beethoven does not entirely abandon the older minuet. Out of sixty-three examples of the minuet or scherzo (not counting the scherzos in common time) to be found in his works, seventeen are entitled "Minuet" or "Tempo di minuetto". Besides this, in two works (the violin Sonata in G, Op. 30 No. 3, and the pianoforte Sonata in E \flat , Op. 31 No. 3) the "tempo di minuetto" takes the place of the slow movement; in the Sonata Op. 49 No. 2 it serves as finale (as with Haydn and Mozart); in the Sonata Op. 54 the first movement is a "tempo di minuetto". In these minuets we sometimes find a grace akin to that of Mozart (Sonata Op. 10 No. 3; Septet), sometimes, as it were, a reflection of the humour of Haydn (Sonata Op. 22), but more often the purest individuality of Beethoven himself. In some cases a movement is entitled "Minuet" though its character is decidedly that of the scherzo (e.g. in the first Symphony). The only one of the nine symphonies in which a minuet of the old style is to be seen is No. 8.

The transformation of the minuet into the scherzo has had an important influence on subsequent composers. In the large majority of works produced since the time of Beethoven the scherzo has replaced its predecessor. E. P.

THE DANCE IN ENGLAND.—The minuet was introduced at the court of Charles II by the Marquis de Flamarens, but only gradually became fashionable, as Charles, not an outstanding dancer, preferred the somewhat easier passepied. Minuets began to appear in English musical publications in the latter part of the 17th century; one is in Salter's 'Genteel Companion for the Recorder' (1683). In the first half of the 18th century they were a feature in English dancing. The period of their greatest popularity was about 1730–70, owing, no doubt, to their court patronage. Annually, on the king's birthday, a special minuet was composed for the occasion, and this, with the other French dances, was published in a small oblong volume issued yearly by such publishers as Walsh and Wright. Later, other music sellers brought out similar yearly collections. The earliest of these issues of minuets appears to be for 1716 and the latest, Thompson's, for 1791. After that date the decline of the minuet as a dance caused such yearly sets to be abandoned. Though so greatly in favour, much of this minuet music was decidedly uninteresting, and as an example of the type common at the middle of the 18th century the following is appended; it is notable as having been used at the Coronation ball of George III in 1761:

THE CORONATION MINUET

From 'Thompson's Minuets for 1762'.

Other minuets of greater musical quality were Martini's, that from Handel's 'Arianna', Foot's, etc.; these were in great favour for flute and fiddle pieces. F. K., rev.

BIBL.—ADRIO, ADAM, 'Menuett und Scherzo' ('Der Musikerzieher', Year XXXV, Bk. viii, 1940).
BLOM, ERIC, 'The Minuet-Trio' (M. & L., XXII, 1941, p. 162).

GUTHRIE, JOHN, 'Historical Dances for the Theatre' (Worthing, 1950).

See also Form (Minuet and Scherzo). Scherzo.

MINUTA (Ital., ornamental division). See ORNAMENTS, D.

MIOLAN. French family of musicians.

(1) Marie (Caroline Félix) Miolan (-Carvalho) (b. Marseilles, 31 Dec. 1827; d. Puys, Seine-Inférieure, 10 July 1895).

French soprano singer. She received instruction from her father, François Félix Miolan, an oboe player, and from Duprez at the Paris Conservatoire (1843–47), where she obtained the first prize in singing. She made her début in the first act of Donizetti's 'Lucia' and in the trio of the second act of Halévy's 'La Juive', at Duprez's benefit on 14 Dec. 1849. She appeared at the Opéra-Comique, on 29 Apr. 1850, in Auber's 'L'Ambassadeur', on 22 May in A. Thomas's 'Le Caïd' and on 20 July in Adam's 'Giralda', and made her reputation as Isabelle in Hérold's 'Le Pré aux clercs', as the heroines on the respective productions of 'Giralda' and Massé's 'Les Noces de Jeannette', 20 July 1850 and 4 Feb. 1853. In the latter year she married Léon Carvalho, then engaged at the same theatre. From 1855 to 1866 she sang at the 'Théâtre-Lyrique' during her husband's management, first in two successful creations, 'La Fanchonnette' (Clapissou) and 'La Reine Topaze' (Massé). She made a great effect as a Mozart singer, e.g. Cherubino, Zerlina and Pamina, and by her creation of the heroines in Gounod's operas. Chorley said of her:

'The opera stage has rarely seen a poet's imagining more completely wrought than in the Marguerite of Mme Miolan-Carvalho . . . I had . . . watched the progress of this exquisitely finished artist with great interest . . . finding in her performances a sensibility rarely combined with such measureless execution as hers . . . but I was not prepared for the delicacy of colouring, the innocence, the tenderness of the earlier scenes, and the warmth of passion and remorse and repentance which one then so slight in frame could throw into the drama as it went on. . . . Those know only one small part of this consummate artist's skill that have not seen her in this remarkable 'Faust'.

From 1868 to 1883 she sang alternately at the Opéra and Opéra-Comique (as Isabella in 1872 on the 1000th performance of 'Le Pré aux clercs', one of her greatest successes) until her retirement on 9 June 1883. She first appeared in England at the Royal Italian opera as Dinorah, with great success, on the production of that opera (Meyerbeer's 'Pardon de Ploërmel') on 26 July 1859. She sang every season until 1864 inclusive, and again in 1871–72, and worthily maintained her reputation—viz. as Margaret on the production of 'Faust', Oscar ('Ballo in maschera'), the Zerlinas (Mozart and Auber), Matilde, Donna Elvira, Rosina ('Barbiere' and 'Nozze'), Catarina ('L'Étoile du nord'), etc., and in the small part of the Happy Shade in 'Orfeo'. She also sang in Berlin, St. Petersburg, Brussels, Marseilles and elsewhere.

BIBL.—SPOLL, 'Mme Carvalho: notes et souvenirs' (Paris, 1885).

See also Bizet (deds.).

(2) Amédée Félix Miolan (b. ?; d. New Orleans, ?), orchestral conductor.

(3) Alexandre Miolan (b. ?; d. Paris, 26 Apr. 1873), teacher of the organ and harmonium, and as such attached to the Théâtre-Lyrique for several years. A. C.

"MIRACLE" SYMPHONY. The distinguishing name of Haydn's Symphony No. 96, in D major, written for Salomon's concerts in London in 1791. The name is due to an accident which happened at the first performance, when a chandelier fell into the auditorium, but the audience miraculously escaped injury.

MIRECKI, Franciszek (b. Cracow, 1 Apr. 1791; d. Cracow, 29 May 1862).

Polish composer. He began his career at a very early age in 1800. In 1814 he went to Vienna and became a pupil of Hummel. In 1820 he returned to Poland, and after many attempts his operetta 'Cyganie' ('The Gypsies'), to a libretto by Kniaźnin, was performed in Warsaw. But the musical atmosphere of his native country did not suit him, and he moved to Italy. Shortly after his arrival there he was commissioned to write three ballets ('Octavia', 'Castle at Kenilworth' [after Scott] and 'Baccanali aboliti') and in 1824 to compose an opera for Genoa. This was 'Evandro in Pergamo' (libretto by A. Peracchi), produced there on 26 Dec. that year. It was received with great enthusiasm and given for twenty-six nights running.

Mirecki became conductor of an Italian opera company, with which he went to Portugal and produced his new opera, 'I due forzati'. In 1831 he settled at Genoa as a teacher of singing. In 1838, however, he returned to Cracow, where immediately after his arrival he founded a private school of singing. The suggestions he submitted to the town council of Cracow were for many years ignored, but at last he succeeded in his attempts and the council organized a school and bursary consisting of both vocal and instrumental classes. The rules allowed the management of the school to accept twenty pupils as stipendiaries and forty students paying for their course. During this troublesome period Mirecki composed an opera, 'Nocleg w Apeninach' ('A Night in the Apennines'), to a libretto written by N. Ekielski, an adaptation of a comedy by Count Fredro. It was performed by Mirecki's pupils in 1845. Shortly afterwards a vocal score of this opera with Polish and Italian words was published at Milan.

Mirecki's operatic works were greatly influenced by the Italian masters. Besides operas he wrote some church music and numerous pianoforte pieces such as polonaises, krakowiaks and mazurkas, sonatas and sonatinas, also some compositions for violin and pianoforte. His music is now completely forgotten. He also wrote a musical treatise published at Milan in 1825 under the title of 'Trattato intorno agli stromenti ed all' istruimentazione'.

C. R. H.

MIREILLE. Opera in 3 (orig. 5) acts by Gounod. Libretto by Michel Carré, based on the Provençal poem 'Mirèio' by Frédéric Mistral. Produced Paris, Théâtre-Lyrique, 19 Mar. 1864. 1st perf. abroad, London, Her Majesty's Theatre (in Italian), 5 July 1864. 1st in U.S.A., Chicago (in English), 13 Sept. 1880.¹

MIRITU (Instrument). See BABYLONIAN MUSIC.

MIRROR CANON or FUGUE. A canon or fugue in which two parts, or more than one pair of parts, are so devised as to appear simultaneously upside down as well as right side up, their appearance on paper being that of a thing reflected in a looking-glass.

MIRY, Karel (b. Ghent, 14 Aug. 1823; d. Ghent, 5 Oct. 1889).

Belgian composer. He was a pupil of Martin - Joseph Mengal at Ghent and of Gevaert in Brussels. At the age of twenty-two he suddenly sprang into fame with his patriotic song 'De Vlaamse Leeuw'. He became professor of composition at the Ghent Conservatory and on the retirement of Jean Andries in 1859 he succeeded him as director.

Miry was one of the earliest Belgian composers who set Flemish words and wrote music of a folkly character in the manner later cultivated by Peter Benoit. His opera 'Bouchard d'Avesnes', produced at Ghent on 5 Feb. 1864, had an enormous success in its time. He wrote 17 other operas and operettas, including 'Wit en zwart', 'Brigitta', 'Annemie', 'Karel V', 'Maria van Burgondie' and 'Brutus en Cesar'. He also produced many choruses and songs.

E. B.

See also National Anthems (Belgium).

Mirza-Schaffy. See Franz (4 songs). Frid (chorus).

MISERERE. Psalm LI in the Hebrew and English reckoning, or L in the Latin, "Miserere mei Deus", has special musical importance in the Roman liturgy from its position at the end of the Office of Tenebrae.

There is reason to believe that the idea of adapting the Miserere to music of a more solemn character than that generally used for the psalms, and thus making it the culminating point of interest in the service of Tenebrae, originated with Pope Leo X, whose Master of Ceremonies, Paride Grassi, tells us that it was first sung to a faburden in 1514. No trace of the music used on that occasion can now be discovered. The earliest example we possess was composed in 1517 by Costanzo Festa, who distributed the words of the psalm between two falsi-bordoni, one for four voices and the other for five, relieved by alternate verses of plainsong — a mode of treatment which has survived to the present day. Festa's Miserere is the first of a collection of twelve, contained in two celebrated manuscript volumes preserved among the archives of the Pontifical Chapel in Rome.

¹ Ther. had been a performance of the first two acts only, in German, at Philadelphia on 17 Nov. 1864.

The other contributors to the series were Luigi Dentice, Francesco Guerrero, Palestrina, Teofilo Gargano, Francesco Anerio, Felice Anerio, an anonymous composer of very inferior ability, Giovanni Maria Nanini¹, Sante Naldini, Ruggiero Giovanelli and lastly Gregorio Allegri, whose work is the only one of the twelve now remaining in use in the papal chapel. Later works by Tommaso Bai (produced 1714) and Giuseppe Baini (1821) have shared in the fame of Allegri's Miserere as performed by the Sistine choir.

W. S. R., rev.

MISKIEWICZ, Maciej Arnulf (b. ?; d. ?; c. 1685).

Polish composer. He became a substitute at the Capella Rorantistarum in 1651. Two years later he was promoted to the post of a Roratist and soon afterwards became the Praepositus of the chapel. In the archives of the Cracow Chapter one of Miskiewicz's works was found: 'Jesu dulcis memoria' for mixed chorus, dated "3. Junii 1668". G. R. H.

MISSÓN, Luis. See MISSÓN.

MISSA. See MASS.

MISSA DE ANGELIS. See MASS.

MISSA, Edmond (Jean Louis) (b. Rheims, 12 June 1861; d. Paris, 29 Jan. 1910).

French composer. He was a pupil of Massenet at the Paris Conservatoire, where he took the Prix de Rome in 1881, also the Prix Cressent. His works include choruses, orchestral works, pianoforte pieces, songs and especially works for the stage: pantomimes, operettas ('La Belle Sophie', 1888), incidental music for Shakespeare's 'King Lear' and the following operas:

'Juge et partie', Paris, 1886.

'Lydia', Dieppe, 1887.

'Le Chevalier timide', Paris, 1887.

'La Princesse Nangara', Rheims, 1892.

'Mariage galant', Paris, 1892.

'Dinah' (founded on Shakespeare's 'Cymbeline'), Paris, 1894.

'Ninon de Lenclos', Paris, 1895.

'L'Hôte', Paris, 1897.

'Babette', London, Covent Garden Theatre, 22 Oct. 1900.

'Muguette' (based on Ouida's 'Two Little Wooden Shoes'), Paris, Opéra-Comique, 18 Mar. 1903.

'Maguelone', London, Covent Garden Theatre, 20 July 1903.

A. L.

MISSA PARODIA. See PARODY MASS, also PAIX (? first use term).

¹ Nanini's work is little more than an adaptation of Palestrina's with an additional verse for nine voices.

MISSA SOLEMNIS (or Solemnis) (Lat. = solemn Mass, high Mass). A title used by various composers for a mass of a particularly elaborate or festive kind (also in French, as Messe solennelle), but now particularly associated with Beethoven's Mass in D major, Op. 123, of which the history is as follows:

It was known in 1818 that the Archduke Rudolph was to be appointed to the Moravian see of Olomouc (Olmütz), and in that year Beethoven began to compose this Mass with a view to its performance at the ceremony of installation. When the ceremony took place in Mar. 1820 the composition had proceeded no farther than the Credo. In 1821 Beethoven opened dealings with Simrock as if the Mass were a completed work; but two more years passed before he ceased to revise and reshape it. During this time Beethoven was negotiating the sale of the Mass to six publishers; promises and even contracts were made, and then ignored or forgotten. In the end the work went to a seventh publisher, Schott, who brought it out in 1827. Publication was delayed in order that Beethoven might drive a quick trade in manuscript copies. These were offered at fifty ducats to a number of European courts, and there were ten purchasers, including the courts of Russia, Prussia, Saxony, Denmark and France (Louis XVIII also sent a gold medal inscribed "Donnée par le roi à Monsieur Beethoven"). A letter to Goethe asking him to interest the Duke of Saxe-Weimar in the purchase of the Mass brought no reply. No invitation was sent to the court of England.

The first performance took place in Vienna on 7 May 1824, without the Gloria and Sanctus, at the concert which also saw the first performance of the ninth Symphony.

W. M.

MISSÓN (Misón), Luis (b. ? Barcelona, ?; d. Madrid, 13 Feb. 1766).

Spanish woodwind player, conductor and composer. In 1748 he was admitted to the royal orchestra in Madrid as a player on the flute and oboe, and he soon gained a reputation for virtuosity, especially on the flute. He became conductor in 1756. He is regarded as the inventor of the tonadilla. His first stage piece of the kind dates from 1757. It is a duet between the landlady of an inn and an itinerant Bohemian, and was so successful that it was followed by many others, for various numbers of voices and written by various composers. Missón takes as his subject some simple scene of popular life (usually in Madrid) and draws out of it all the music of which the scene is capable. His writing is strongly national and inspired by popular songs (e.g. seguidillas); his works are genre pictures, the musical counterpart of the paintings and tapestries of Goya.

The Bibl. del Ayuntamiento, Madrid, contains four manuscript scores of Misión, including 'Lo que puede verse . . .' (for 5 voices), which may be translated 'Things seen in the street on a public holiday'. Misión also composed 3 comic operas, one in Italian and two in Spanish: 'La festa cinese', 'El tutor enamorado' and 'El amor a todos vence', zarzuelas (lost) and 6 sonatas for flute and bass (Library of the Duke of Alba, Madrid).

J. B. T., adds.

MISTER WU (Opera). See ALBERT, (E. D').

MISTICANZA (Ital., lit. mixture). An old Italian term for a quodlibet.

Mistler, Jean. See Milhaud ('Conquérant', incid. m.).

Mistral, Frédéric. See Bizet ('Calendal', opera project). Gounod ('Mireille', opera). Milhaud (voc. duets). Mireille (Gounod, opera).

MISURA (Ital., lit. measure = time; also bar). The word appears mainly in the direction senza misura (without time), and indicates that a given passage is to be performed without strict regard for the prescribed tempo.

Misura is also the American "measure" and the English "bar" in the same sense.

Mitchell, Clement (Clement Mitchell's Virginal Book). See Virginal Music.

MITCHELL, Donald (Charles Peter) (b. London, 6 Feb. 1925).

English critic. He attended Dulwich College in 1939-42 and did military (non-combatant) service in 1943-45. He is largely self-taught in music, but studied for a year at Durham University under Arthur Hutchings and A. E. F. Dickinson (1949-50). Meanwhile, from 1945, he taught at a private school in London, his numerous subjects including music, but since 1950 he has been exclusively occupied with music criticism, broadcasting, lecturing, etc.

Mitchell's chief musical interests include modern music (especially Benjamin Britten) and Austrian and German composers of the late 19th century and their 20th-century followers. He has made a special study of Max Reger and devised twelve programmes of works by that composer for the B.B.C. Third Programme in 1951. In 1947 he founded the quarterly review 'Music Survey', which he edited, from 1949 in collaboration with Hans Keller, until its cessation in 1952. His book on Mahler's life and works was in the press late in 1953 and his published writings include the following:

BOOK

'Benjamin Britten: a Commentary on all his Works from a Group of Specialists', ed. with Hans Keller (London, 1952).

ARTICLES

'Gustav Mahler and Hugo Wolf' ('Chord and Discard', Vol. II, No. 5, New York, 1948).

A Note on "St. Nicholas": some Points of Britten's Style' ('Music Survey', Vol. II, No. 4, London, 1950).

'Kurt Weill's "Dreigroschenoper" and German Cabaret-Opera in the 1920s' ('Chesterian', Vol. XXV, No. 163, London, 1950).

'Max Reger: an Introductory Musical Portrait' (M. Rev., Vol. XII, No. 4, Cambridge, 1951).

'Some Observations on William Walton' ('Chesterian', Vol. XXVI, Nos. 160-70, London, 1952).

'The Later Development of Benjamin Britten: Texture, Instrumentation and Structure' (ibid., Vol. XXVII, Nos. 171-72, London, 1952).

'Delius: the Choral Works' ('Tempo', No. 26, London, 1952-53).

'Bruckner, Mahler and Reger' ('Listener', Vol. XI, IX, No. 1260, London, 1953).

E. B.

Mitchell, Joseph. See Ballad Opera ('Highland Fair').

MITCHELL, William (John) (b. New York, 21 Nov. 1906).

American musicologist. He studied at the Institute of Musical Art from 1925 to 1929 and in 1930-32 had lessons privately with Dr. Hans Weisse. At Columbia University, where he was a Clarence Barker Fellow, he won the Joseph H. Bearns Prize in musical composition and obtained the A.B. in 1930 and the A.M. eight years later. He has been associated with that University ever since, being appointed an assistant in 1932, lecturer a year later and instructor, in Barnard College, from 1934 to 1940. In 1941-46 he was an Assistant Professor there and since 1947 he has been an Associate Professor and Assistant to the Dean of the University. In 1933 he was an instructor at the Surette Summer School of Music and in the spring of 1950 was appointed a special lecturer at the University of California. He has been Secretary of the American Musicological Society since 1949 and in that year also became a member-at-large of the Society for Music in the Liberal Arts College. In 1950 he was appointed a member of the Board of Directors of the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation.

Mitchell has written a technical book, 'Elementary Harmony', published in 1939 (2nd ed. 1948) and translated and edited Herriot's 'The Life and Times of Beethoven' (1935) and C. P. E. Bach's 'Essay on the True Art of Playing Keyboard Instruments' (1949). He has also published articles, including 'H. Schenker's Approach to Musical Detail' ('Musicology', 1946), 'C. P. E. Bach's Essay: an Introduction' (M.Q., 1947) and an article and review on H. J. Moser's 'Bernhard Ziehn' (M.Q., 1951). His detailed review of Einstein's 'The Italian Madrigal' ('Romanic Review', 1950) also amounts to a considerable piece of scholarly work.

M. K. W.

Mitchison, Naomi. See Easdale ('Corn King', opera).

Mitford, Mary Russell. See Rienzi (Wagner, opera). Wagner (R., do.).

MITHOU. See CHAMPION (3).

MITJANA Y GORDON, Rafael (b. Málaga, 6 Dec. 1869; d. Stockholm, 15 Aug. 1921).

Spanish diplomat and musical historian. He studied music with Pedrell and Saint-Saëns; but his importance lies less in his operatic works (e.g. 'La buena guarda') than in his historical research. A far better writer than Pedrell, hardly less learned and more accurate, he was able to give a clearer account of the course of Spanish musical history, while his diplomatic appointments enabled him to discover in foreign libraries new information of great importance. He was particularly fortunate in his discoveries in Sweden, where he found and described an unknown cancionero (song-book) dating from the mid-16th century: 'Villancicos de diversos autores' (2-5 voices), printed at Venice by H. Scotus, 1556 (Univ. Lib., Uppsala). He also discovered two early and unknown secular cantatas by Morales and published a catalogue of printed music at Uppsala.

Mitjana was responsible for the Spanish volume of the 'Encyclopédie du Conservatoire'; but owing to unforeseen causes his manuscript, dated 1914, was printed only in 1920. Many printers' errors remained uncorrected, especially in the musical illustrations, while the indispensable index and table of contents were omitted. The final results of his researches will be found in the following, published subsequently:

'Estudios sobre algunos músicos españoles del siglo XVI' (Madrid, 1918), including Morales and Victoria.

'Don Fernando de las Infantas' (Madrid, 1918).

'Francisco Guerrero' (Madrid, 1922).

Mitjana also wrote valuable articles on secular music in Spain in the 16th and 17th centuries for the 'Revista de Filología Española' and a short life of Morales. This, however, has not been published. J. B. T.

MITRIDATE EUPATORE (Opera). See SCARLATTI (A.). ZENO.

MITRIDATE, RE DI PONTO (Opera). See MOZART.

MITROPOULOS, Dimitri (b. Athens, 1 Mar. 1896).

Greek conductor, pianist and composer. He studied at the Athens Conservatory under I. Wassenhoven (pianoforte) and Armand Marsick (harmony and counterpoint), graduating in 1918 with a gold medal for the pianoforte. Mitropoulos showed exceptional gifts in composition and while still a student he composed, among other works, the symphonic poem 'La Mise au tombeau du Christ', given in 1916 under his own direction. In 1920 his opera 'Sœur Béatrice' was performed in Athens. Soon after he went to Brussels and studied composition with Paul Gilson for one year (1920-21). He continued his studies at the Berlin High School for Music in Busoni's master class (1921-24), serving at the same time as coach at the State Opera.

In 1924 Mitropoulos returned to Athens and was appointed conductor of the symphony orchestra of the Hellenic Conservatory (1924-1925) and afterwards of the orchestra of the Concert Society (1925-27), being at the same time director of studies of the Hellenic Conservatory. After the dissolution of the Concert Society in 1927 he was appointed conductor of the orchestra of the Athens Conservatory — which in 1943 became the State Symphony Orchestra — sharing the direction for the first two years (1927-29) with Jean Boutnikoff. From 1929 he became sole permanent conductor, exercised considerable influence in raising the standard of orchestral playing in Greece and contributed greatly to the musical education of the public by introducing a great number of important works by old and modern composers.

In the meantime he continued composing, and in 1927 he introduced at one of his concerts a 'Passacaglia e fuga' for pianoforte, an 'Ostinata' in three parts for violin and pianoforte and the cycle 'Hedonica'. In 1928 Boutnikoff conducted his 'Fête crétoise', orchestrated by N. Skalkotas, and in 1929 his important symphonic work 'Concerto grosso' was given its first performance.

In 1930 he was appointed professor of composition at the Athens Conservatory and on 6 Mar. 1933 he was elected extraordinary member of the Academy of Athens.

The year 1930 marks a turning-point in Mitropoulos's career as a conductor: on 27 Feb. he conducted with great success the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, appearing at the same time as soloist in Prokofiev's C major pianoforte Concerto. Since then he has appeared as guest conductor in many countries of Europe; in 1934 he made a very successful tour of 24 concerts in Italy, France, Belgium, Poland and U.S.S.R. In 1936 he made his American début as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and in 1937 he was appointed permanent conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, a post he kept until 1949; in the meantime he conducted concerts in New York, Philadelphia and other cities of the U.S.A. In 1949 he was invited to share with Stokowski the direction of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, and after the resignation of Stokowski (Dec. 1949) he became its sole permanent conductor. In 1950 he appeared at the Edinburgh Festival.

Mitropoulos received the honorary degree of Ph.D. from Harvard University.

The following is a catalogue of the principal compositions by Mitropoulos:

OPERA

'Sœur Béatrice', setting of Maurice Maeterlinck's play (1920).

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

'Electra', Euripides.

'Hippolytus', Euripides.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

Symph. poem 'La Mise au tombeau du Christ' (1916).
'Concerto grosso' (1929).

CHAMBER MUSIC

String Quartet 'The Fauns'.

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

Sonata, C ma.
'Ostinata' (1927).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

'Béatrice' (1915).
Scherzo, F mi. (1919).
'Fête crétoise' (1919).
3 Dances of Kythera.
'Passacaglia e fuga' (1927).
Sonata, E♭ ma.

SONGS

'Hedonica', cycle of inventions, canons and fugues (Costas Kavafis) (1927).
'Kassiani' (1936).
'Pan.'
'Virgin Mary of Sparta.'

ARRANGEMENTS

Bach's organ Fantasy and Fugue, G mi., for orch.
Bach's organ Prelude and Fugue, B mi., for orch.
S. M.

MITSCHA. See Ми́сча.

MIZLER. See MIZLER.

MITSUKURI, Shukichi. See JAPANESE MUSIC (MODERN).

Mitusov, Stepan Nikolayevich. See Stravinsky ('Nightingale', lib.).

MIXED CADENCE. See CADENCE.

MIXED MODES. Writers on plainsong apply this term to tonalities which embrace the entire compass of an authentic mode in combination with that of its plagal derivative. (See MODES.) W. S. R.

MIXED VOICES. The English term for a combination of women's and men's voices in works for vocal solo teams or for chorus. E. B.

MIXOLYDIAN MODE. See MODES.

MI'ZAF (pl. Ma'ázif). An Arabic name for an "instrument of open strings", later used sometimes for a string instrument in general. Al-Laith b. al-Muẓaffar (8th cent.) calls it an instrument of "many strings". Al-Mufaḍḍal b. Salama (9th cent.) says that the mi'zafa was "not common with the Arabs, except among the people of the Yemen, Sana, the Janad, Nejran, Tabala and Juraish". Al-Khwārizmī (10th cent.) describes it as an "Iraqian string instrument". More precise is Al-Fārābī (d. c. 950), who includes ma'ázif among the two classes of instruments with "open strings", which Kosegarten guesses to be phorminges in one place and nablia in another, both terms leaving us as wise as before. Since Al-Fārābī's other class concerned harps (sumij, sing. sanj), it is not unlikely that ma'ázif were psalteries. The word itself belongs to the primitive past, since 'azf and 'azif stood for the "voice of the jinn and the sand"; hence an instrument which produced such sounds was a mi'zaf and a psaltery was just the kind of instrument that could function as an aeolian harp. The name did not survive long after this. Both Ibn Sīnā and Ibn Zaila (11th cent.) ignore it. Only the puritanic contemners of music use the word as one of the signs of "the end of the world".

H. G. F.

BIBL.—FARMER, HENRY G., 'Mi'zaf' ('Encyclopaedia of Islam', Leyden, 1913-38, III, 528).

See also Canon (2). Qánún.

MIZLER (Mitsler) VON KOLOF, Lorenz (Christoph) (b. Heidenheim, Württemberg, 25 July 1711; d. Warsaw, Mar. 1778).

German writer on music. He was educated at the "Gymnasium" of Ansbach and the University of Leipzig. He was one of Bach's scholars. In 1734 he became a magistrate, and he was generally a cultivated and prominent person. His claim to perpetuity is his connection with the "Association for Musical Science" which he founded at Leipzig in 1738 and kept together. Among its members were Handel, Bach and Graun. Bach composed a 6-part canon and the canonic variations on 'Vom Himmel hoch' as his diploma pieces.

Mizler edited a periodical, the 'Neueröffnete Musik-Bibliothek' (1739-54), and wrote a treatise on thorough-bass, 'Die Anfangsgründe des Generalbasses', in which he seems to have pushed the connection of music and mathematics to absurdity.¹ He translated Fux's 'Gradus' into German (1742). G.

BIBL.—WOHLKE, FRANZ, 'Lorenz Christoph Mizler: ein Beitrag zur musikalischen Gelehrten-geschichte des 18. Jahrhunderts' (Wurzburg, 1940).

See also Art of Fugue (Bach). Bach (J. S., 32) passim. Bach (W. F., 33).

MIZMAR (Instrument). See ZAMR.

MLADA. Opera in 4 acts by Rimsky-Korsakov. Libretto by the composer, based on an earlier libretto for a joint opera to be written with Borodin, Cui and Mussorgsky. Prod. St. Petersburg, 1 Nov. 1892.

See also Minkus (for ballet music).

MLYNARSKI, Emil (b. Kibarty, 18 July 1870; d. Warsaw, 5 Apr. 1935).

Polish violinist, conductor and composer. He studied under Auer (violin), Rimsky-Korsakov (theory) and Liadov (composition) at the St. Petersburg Conservatory in 1880-1889. He made his début there as a violinist in 1889 and then toured in Germany. In 1890 he appeared for the first time in London, giving a violin recital at the Prince's Hall. After his return to Poland he became assistant conductor at the Warsaw Opera, where he remained for only two seasons, moving on to Odessa to take up the post of teacher at the Music School there. In 1899 he returned to Warsaw, being appointed the first conductor of the Opera. From that time he ardently participated in the foundation of the Warsaw Philharmonic Orchestra; he also became its principal conductor (1901-5). He was appointed director of the Warsaw Conservatory (1904-9).

¹ See Spitta, 'Bach', English trans., III, 22-25.

Młynarski again appeared in England in 1907, this time as conductor, giving a series of concerts in London and other towns with the London Symphony Orchestra. In 1910 he became director of the Scottish Orchestra, with which he did much important work. He gave symphony concerts in London (June 1914) and a concert of British composers in 1915. During the first world war he lived in Russia, but in 1919 he returned to his native country and became director of both the State Opera and the Conservatory. Three years later, however, he relinquished both these posts after having introduced many important innovations in the curriculum of the Conservatory. As guest conductor he visited England and Scotland (for the last time), Paris, Vienna and other European cities. In 1929 he was engaged by the Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia, also as conductor of the Philadelphia Grand Opera. On account of ill-health he returned to Warsaw in 1931, where he died four years later.

Młynarski was undoubtedly among the best conductors of the time. His compositions include a Symphony in F major (Op. 14) based on many national airs (e.g. Bogurodzica¹), two violin concertos, the first of which, in D minor, was awarded first prize at the Leipzig Paderewski competition in 1898, a comic opera, 'A Summer Night', which was performed in Warsaw in 1923, and many pieces for violin and pianoforte.

C. R. H.

MOBERG, Carl-Allan (b. Östersund, 5 June 1896).

Swedish musicologist. He studied history of music with Tobias Norlind at Uppsala in 1920-23 and afterwards held a Gunnar Wennerberg stipend which enabled him to study counterpoint with Alban Berg in Vienna in 1924, Latin paleography with Franz Steffens in 1924-25 and Gregorian chant with Peter Wagner at Fribourg in 1924-27. He has also carried out bibliographical studies in several European countries and has lectured extensively at home and abroad. He graduated Ph.D at Uppsala in 1928. In 1927 he became lecturer in history and theory of music at the University of Uppsala and in 1946 was appointed to the newly founded professorship of musical research at the same University. He took part in an expedition to Runö (Gulf of Danzig) to note down folk variants of Swedish chorales (1938) and went with Professor Collinder's expedition to Lapland in 1943 to investigate native music. He is a member of the Academy of Music (1943) an honorary doctor of theology (1945) and a corresponding member of the Société Française de Musicologie. In Sept. 1948 he represented Sweden at the first general conference of the International Folk Music Council at Basel and in 1949 he was appointed an active member of the Gesellschaft zur Herausgabe von D.T.Ö.

His many writings include studies of Swedish choral music, Gregorian music and the history of music and musical instruments. Some have appeared in German and Swiss musical journals. He published 'Die liturgischen Hymnen in Schweden' (1947) and 'Bachs Passioner och Höga Mässa' (1949).

K. D.

BIBL.—DAVIDSSON, A., 'Svensk Musiklitteratur 1800-1945' (Uppsala, 1948), containing a full list of publications up to 1945.

MOBERG, Ida (Georgina) (b. Helsingfors, 13 Feb. 1859; d. Helsingfors, 2 Aug. 1947).

Finnish composer. She studied music in St. Petersburg (1883-84) and Dresden (1901-1905). Her compositions are an opera, 'Asiens ljus' ('The Light of Asia'), a Symphony, orchestral pieces, choruses and songs.

A. R.

Moberg, V. See ALFVÉN ('Manskinna', film m.). Anderberg ('Rid i natt', incid. m.).

MOCK TRUMPET. See TRUMPET MARINE.

MOCKE (Mooke), Marie. See PLEYEL (3).

MOCQUEREAU, (Dom) André (O.S.B.)

(b. Tessoualle nr. Cholet, 6 June 1849; d. Solesmes, 18 Jan. 1930).

French musical scholar. He was educated in Paris and joined the Benedictine Abbey at Solesmes in 1875. There he studied plainsong under Dom Joseph Potier (1835-1923), author of 'Les Mélodies grégoriennes' (1880), editor of the new 'Liber Gradualis' (1883) and, a few years later, of the 'Liber Antiphonarius'. These editions differed melodically and rhythmically from the 'Editio Medicea', then in use, which was mistakenly believed to have the authority of Palestrina. Dom Pothier's editions were heavily criticized by the adherents of the old chant-books, but in 1889 Dom Mocquereau came to his aid by founding the 'Paléographie Musicale', which has been appearing in quarterly fascicles since its foundation. Fifteen of the seventeen volumes of this series (thirteen of the main series and two of the second) were published under the editorship of Dom Mocquereau. His most important theoretical work is 'Le Nombre musical' (Vol. I, 1908; Vol. II, 1927).

Dom Mocquereau's musical theory is based on the fact that a number of early plainsong manuscripts from the Scriptoria of St. Gall and Metz contain a large number of signs and letters as guides to the singers' execution. All these signs indicate rhythmical nuances, the neumes without signs being of equal value.

In addition to these major works Dom Mocquereau started, in 1910, a series of

¹ See BOGURODZICA.

'Monographies grégoriennes', in which he and his principal collaborator, Dom Joseph Gajard, developed the methods of the school of Solesmes in detail. In 1911 he also started the 'Revue Grégorienne' with the object of popularizing the ideas which were expounded in the 'Paléographie Musicale'.

Dom Mocquereau had the good fortune of seeing the results of his work put into practice. The need for a new edition of the chant-books, based on the manuscripts which were nearest to the time of Gregory the Great, was generally recognized. The privilege of the so-called Neo-Medicea had expired and the newly crowned Pope Pius X was personally interested in the revival of plainsong and entrusted to the monks of Solesmes the new 'Editio Vaticana'. In preparing this, Dom Mocquereau collected photographs of the earliest plainsong manuscripts and came to the conclusion that those deriving from the Scriptoria of St. Gall and Metz represented the best melodic tradition. Moreover, some of them, particularly the 10th-century Hartker Codex, showed a great number of rhythmical, dynamic and agogic signs directing the execution of the singers. These St. Gall manuscripts, therefore, were chosen as the basis of the 'Vaticana', but the commission appointed by Pope Pius was afraid to introduce the rhythmical signs intended by Dom Mocquereau. They are omitted in the 'Vaticana' and are to be found only in the Solesmes editions, which, however, are widely in use. The exclusion of the rhythmical signs from the official 'Vaticana' did not deter Dom Mocquereau from continuing his work. In the last twenty-five years of his life he produced innumerable articles and essays in which he discussed the question of the rhythmical nuances in plainsong. These studies were based on an unsurpassed knowledge of the manuscripts and of the various types of neumes, to which he drew the attention of his collaborators, stimulating them to study them in detail. Some of the work he planned was published only after his death, for example the 'Antiphonale monasticum' (1934), which will be followed by a new Gradual on which work is now (1954) being done.

Dom Mocquereau's share in the reform of plainsong is important enough to secure him a place among the leading musicologists of our time, but his influence reaches far beyond. His method of studying the manuscripts and tracing out the significance of each neume in the course of the melody is now generally accepted by students of early medieval music, and there is no doubt that it inaugurated a new phase in the study of Christian chant, both Eastern and Western.

E. J. W.

See also Paléographie Musicale.

MOCZYŃSKI, Zygmunt (b. Bydgoszcz, 1871; d. Germany, 1941).

Polish organist, chorus master and composer. He wrote many partsongs, of which his 'Hymn pomorski' ('Hymn of Pomorze') enjoyed great popularity; also a Mass for a mixed chorus and organ. For his pedagogic and musical activities the Gold Medal of Merit was conferred upon him. He died in a German concentration camp during the second world war.

C. R. H.

MODAL AND TONAL DEGREES.

Terms used by Walter Piston (and worth adopting) for the degrees of the major and minor scales. He calls the degrees which are common to both scales "tonal" and those which differ — and which therefore determine the mode — "modal", though he does not go all the way, calling only the fourth and the fifth "tonal" and the third and sixth "modal". The second, being also constant, may be added to the "tonal" degrees and is therefore marked (T) in the diagram below. The seventh, on the other hand, though clearly "tonal" in the major scale, is doubtful in the minor, since in the harmonic and in the ascending melodic minor scale it is a major interval, while in the descending form of that scale it is a minor one. If we wish to resolve the doubt, we may say that in the melodic minor scale the major seventh is a "tonal" degree and the minor seventh a "modal" degree, since it is the latter which, by flattening the leading-note, differentiates minor from the major at that point. The following sketch, where T stands for "tonal" and M for "modal", will make the matter clear:

MODENA. The musical life of this Italian town, once the capital of the Este family's duchy, was centred in the past in the ducal court and the musical establishment at the cathedral. To either or both of these some of the most notable composers, performers and musical scholars were attached, among the most important of whom, from the 15th century onward, were the following:

Giulio Segni, called Giulio da Modena (1498–1561), organist, harpsichordist and composer.

Jacobo Fogliani (1468-1548), composer, brother of Lodovico Fogliani (15th-16th cent.), theorist ('Musica theorica').

Orazio Vecchi (1550-1605), master of polyphony, composer of sacred music, madrigals and canzonets for several voices. His "madrigal opera" 'L'Amfiparnaso' (1594), 'Le veglie di Siena' (1604) and various dialogues ('Cicirlanda', 'I vari linguaggi', etc.) were the first attempts at comedy in music, musical character-drawing and a buffo style.

Giovanni Maria Bononcini (1642-78), theorist ('Il musico pratico') and composer of instrumental music.

Giovanni Bononcini (1670-1755), composer of symphonies, duets, cantatas, oratorios and operas; Handel's rival in London.

Giuseppe Colombi (1635-94), violinist and composer.

Alessandro Stradella (1642-82), considered the creator of the form of the concerto grosso, who also wrote intermezzi, oratorios, operas, symphonies and about 200 cantatas. His opera 'Il trespole tutore' (posth. p.c.f. 1686) is regarded as the first complete example of opera buffa.

Antonio Maria Pacchioni (1654-1738), composer of church music and oratorios.

Luigia Boccabadati (1800-50), famous soprano singer and teacher.

Antonio Sighicelli (1802-83), violinist and conductor.

Luigi Gordigiani (1806-60), composer of operas and 'Canti popolari toscani'.

Giuseppe Sgarbi (1818-95), renowned violin maker.

Carlo Andreoli (1835-1908), pianist and composer; founder of the Concerti Popolari at Milan; the first to introduce Bach to Italy.

Rodolfo Ferrari (1865-1919), distinguished orchestral conductor.

Not born at Modena, but attached to the service of the court or active as maestri di cappella at the cathedral, were the following:

Benedetto Ferrari (1597-1681), famous poet and composer, author of the libretto of Manelli's opera 'Andromeda' with which the first public theatre at Venice (San Cassiano) opened in 1637.

Don Marco Uccellini (? 1603-80), famous violinist and composer.

Giovan Battista Vitali (c. 1644-92) and his son

Tommaso Vitali (1665-?), both famous violinists and composers.

Musical life at Modena flourished with particular splendour in the second half of the 17th century under Duke Francesco (II) d'Este. During that period, too, the musical presses (Cassiani, Soliani, Torri) made great progress.

The first operas by Paisiello were produced at Modena.

The Modena of to-day possesses two theatres: the Teatro Municipale (1841) and the Teatro "Storchi" (1895). The teaching-institution is the Liceo Musicale bearing the name of Orazio Vecchi. There is also a flourishing concert society, Amici della Musica, founded in 1919.

The Biblioteca Estense possesses some thousands of compositions of every kind and period, some of them extremely rare, and a rich and very valuable collection of anti-phonaries and choir-books. G. R. (ii).

BIBL. — FERRARI-MORENI, G., 'Cronistoria dei teatri di Modena dal 1873 al 1881' (Modena, 1883).

GANDINI, A., 'Cronistoria dei teatri di Modena dal 1539 al 1871' (Modena, 1874), supplemented to 1873 by Ferrari-Moreni and Valdrighi.

PANGALDI, E. & RONCAGLIA, G., 'Maestri di cappella del duomo di Modena' (Boll. Deput. St. Patr., 1937-48).

TARDINI, V., 'I teatri di Modena' (Modena, 1899-1902). For bibliographies of the musicians mentioned above see their own entries.

MODERATO (Ital., moderately). This direction is used either singly as a mark of time or as qualifying some other mark of time, as in allegro moderato, adagio moderato, etc., when it has the result of lessening the force of the simple direction. Thus allegro moderato will be slightly slower than allegro alone, and adagio moderato slightly faster than adagio.

Andante moderato, however, is ambiguous, since andante (going, walking) is not, properly speaking, an indication of speed.

J. A. F.-M., adds.

MODERNE, Jacques (b. ? Pinguente¹, Istria, ?; d. Lyons, ?).

French 16th-century composer and music publisher, (?) of Italian birth. He was maître de chapelle at the church of Notre-Dame du Confort at Lyons, where he established a music-printing business and published between 1532 and 1567 several books of masses, motets, chansons, including motets and chansons of his own composition which appear to be lost. E. v. d. s.

MODES. All medieval art-music is based upon a system of eight modes. Since these modes bear in seven cases names (Dorian, Hypodorian, Phrygian, Hypophrygian, Lydian, Hypolydian, Mixolydian), which are found in the musical theory of the ancient Greeks and the name of the eighth is adapted from the Greek (Hypomixolydian), it has been assumed by many authorities that the medieval modes, often called church or ecclesiastical modes, were lineal descendants of Greek scales. This view finds support in the fact that the church modes are octave scales, differing in their series of intervals, and the names Dorian, Phrygian, etc., are applied by Greek theorists to the species of the octave. It is true that the names are differently em-played in Greek and in medieval theory, as the following table shows:

¹ He was nicknamed "Pinguente", apparently after this town in Istria. Another nickname was "Grand Jacques", on account of his stoutness.

Greek octave-species (diatonic)		Medieval modes
B-b	Mixolydian	g-g'
c-c'	Lydian	f-f'
d-d'	Phrygian	e-e'
e-e'	Dorian	d-d'
f-f'	Hypolydian	c-c'
g-g'	Hypophrygian	B-b
a-a'	Hypodorian	A-a
	(Hypomixolydian)	d-d'

The difference can, however, be explained by an error, through which the names were applied in descending instead of ascending order. Such an error was certainly made, and the cause of it was probably a confusion between octave-species and tonoi, the seven tonoi of Ptolemy having the same names and the same pitch-order as the medieval modes, but being essentially different scales.¹ Whether the responsibility for the confusion rests with the 6th-century Latin writer Boethius or with the medieval theorists who derived their knowledge of Greek theory from his work may be regarded as uncertain.

The use of Greek names for octave scales does not in itself prove an historical connection, nor does the confusion of nomenclature in itself disprove it. But, as will be seen, the medieval modes possessed not only a certain range of notes and sequence of intervals but fixed points which served as final and dominant (a modern term, to which some writers prefer "tenor", "tuba" or "reciting-tone"). The octaves could be analysed into pentachords and tetrachords and were related in pairs (Dorian and Hypodorian; Phrygian and Hypophrygian; Lydian and Hypolydian; Mixolydian and Hypomixolydian); of each pair one mode was authentic, the other plagal, according as the pentachord lay below or above the tetrachord; authentic and plagal shared the same final, but had different dominants. If it could be shown that the same or similar relationships prevailed among the Greek scales also, the case for lineal descent would be greatly strengthened. But the evidence on the Greek side is scanty. Such as it is, it hardly squares with the medieval system. For instance, the analysis of the octave-species into tetrachords and pentachords which is found in one late Greek theorist does not agree with the medieval analysis. Such evidence as is provided by extant Greek musical documents suggests that the tonal centre of the Greek diatonic E and D octaves was the fourth note ascending, not the fifth. The whole question is, however, obscure and controversial², and a fuller discussion is perhaps out of place in a dictionary.

R. P. W.-I.

THE ROMAN SCHOOL.—The developments

¹ See GREEK MUSIC (ANCIENT).

² See (e.g.) A. Auda, 'Les Modes et les tons de la musique'; O. Gombosi, 'Studien zur Tonartenlehre des frühen Mittelalters', I-III, 'Acta Musicologica', 1938-42; G. Reese, 'Music in the Middle Ages', 149 ff.

in the West between the 6th and the 9th centuries are bound up with the great music school (Schola Cantorum) of Rome. They go forward in silence; for it is only when the Roman chant reaches the Frankish Empire that the silence is broken by fresh writings of theorists, called forth here, as in the case of the liturgy, by the new ways recently imported from Rome. The early Roman Church was pre-eminently Greek in character and personnel; therefore its church music was not different in this respect from the Roman secular music which clung closely to the Greek traditions. From the 6th century onwards the music school of the Roman Church grew in importance and organization. The bulk of the so-called Gregorian music was composed in these surroundings, and whatever importations there were at this period from outside were from Greek sources. Full discussions of the character of this music will be found elsewhere³, but one or two points must be taken into account here.

The bulk of the music falls into two classes and is either responsorial or antiphonal in its style. Now the responsorial music, which is the older class of the two, is characterized by a dominant note, which serves as the note on which the greater part of the text is recited; but it sets no great store on the final. The antiphonal style was of later introduction, coming from the East in the 4th century. Here the final is of greater moment, for the antiphon consists of a melody which has no reciting-note and in which, therefore, tonality is largely determined by the close. It is safe, therefore, to suppose that with the progress of the antiphonal style there went along a growth in the conception and importance of the final.

Meanwhile a transformation from simple to elaborate music was taking place, as musical proficiency grew within the Roman school. The responsorial class of music was more affected by it than the antiphonal. The elaborate embroideries which decorated the chant of the graduals and other responds tended to obscure the primitive reciting-note; the final, however, was only brought into greater prominence by the process of elaboration. Consequently, as the music grew more ornate, tonality came to depend more upon the newly conceived final and less upon the older conception of the dominant. This change is one which may safely be said to have come about during this intervening period from the 5th to the 8th centuries in which the theorists are silent.

A more difficult change to account for is that by which the so-called "plagal" modes came into existence in their medieval form, since the Greek "Hypo" scales were not accounted of a different class from the rest, the prefix merely denoting that they were in pitch a fourth removed from the scale with the simple designation. Each plagal mode depended upon the corresponding authentic mode; it had the same final and was so closely related to it that, when the modes came to be denoted by numbers, it was at first thought more natural to put the two under one number, only distinguishing them from one another by the term "authentic" and "plagal". The Latins, as they emancipated themselves from Greek influence, came to denote them by the numbers from one to eight (see below).

³ See GREGORIAN MUSIC. PLAINSONG.

This arrangement of eight modes in four pairs must be subsequent to the evolution of the idea of the final; for it is the final that is made the main link between each pair of modes. It also seems to be subsequent to the decay of the dominant in importance; for the dominants of the plagal modes are determined only with reference to the corresponding authentic Dominant, being normally a third lower.

The eighth (or fourth plagal — Hypomixolydian) mode, it will be observed, occupies the same octave (D-d) as the Dorian, but, its dominant and final being on different notes, it is quite unlike it in any other respect.

There is also conceived to be a structural difference between authentic and plagal. Each authentic mode was looked upon as a pentachord with a tetrachord above it. This pentachord it shared with its plagal brother; and thus a plagal mode was conversely viewed as a tetrachord with a pentachord above it. In the former case the dominant (or "media" as the Latins called it, = μέση) was the hinge or meeting-point of the two, and in the latter case the final.

TABLE OF EIGHT MODES.

1st Mode. Primus or Authentus Protus.

2nd Mode. Secundus or Plagius Protus.

1st.	First Mode	{ Authentic
2nd.		{ Plagal
3rd.	Second Mode	{ Authentic
4th.		{ Plagal
5th.	Third Mode	{ Authentic
6th.		{ Plagal
7th.	Fourth Mode	{ Authentic
8th.		{ Plagal

3rd Mode. Tertius or Authentus Deuterus.

4th Mode. Quartus or Plagius Deuterus.

5th Mode. Quintus or Authentus Tritus.

6th Mode. Sextus or Plagius Tritus.

7th Mode. Septimus or Authentus Tetrardus.

8th Mode. Octavus or Plagius Tetrardus.

This brief analysis tends to show that, though the exact genesis of the dual system of authentic and plagal modes cannot be traced, it proceeded along very natural lines and arrived at a very convenient and symmetrical result. Its date is a matter of more difficulty. The earliest literary mention of the system of eight modes, or Octoechos as the latest Greeks called it, is found in a table given in some editions of Boethius; but as there is no mention of it in the text it must be taken to be a later addition. The next mention is to be found in a passage of Alcuin of the end of the 8th century, where the system is spoken of as a matter of common knowledge. Among Greek writers (so far as they have been explored) an even greater conspiracy of silence prevails. So literary evidence is entirely

		Range	Dominant	Final
	(Dorian)	D-d	a	D
	(Hypodorian)	A-a	F	D
	(Phrygian)	E-e	b	E
	(Hypophrygian)	B-b	a	E
	(Lydian)	F-f	c	F
	(Hypolydian)	C-c	a	F
	(Mixolydian)	G-g	d	G
	(Hypomixolydian)	D-d	c	G

wanting. The history of the Schola Cantorum suggests the 6th or 7th century as a suitable date for such a settlement; and this view of the case is amply borne out by an examination of the Gregorian music itself.

The older class, the responsorial music, demands in its highly elaborated form an eight-mode system. The Responds of the Hours, though they use various reciting-notes for the respond, employ normally for the "verse" one of eight set formulae corresponding to the modes. Similarly in the antiphonal music there are the eight Gregorian tones corresponding also to the modes.¹ These two facts alone are enough to prove that the music, as we now have it, presupposes the eight-mode system. Now there are many lines of evidence that converge to show that the main bulk and nucleus of this music is to be dated as belonging to the 6th century. A persistent tradition ascribes the final regulation of it to St. Gregory (590-604). The festivals and other occasions for which the music was written are as a rule earlier than his date; and the festivals of later origin differ markedly from the pre-Gregorian festivals in having borrowed music instead of original music provided for them; this is especially the case in regard to the Mass. Further, the text of the Latin Bible employed is an ancient one that was for most purposes superseded in the 5th and 6th centuries. These and other considerations all point in the same direction. From them it may be concluded, though with some considerable hesitation owing to the difference of views among students of the question, that the eight-mode system lay behind the great plainsong compositions that form the musical corpus of the western Church, and must therefore have arisen at least as early as the 6th century.

FRANKISH THEORISTS, NINTH CENTURY.—When literary evidence as to the modes again becomes available in the Carolingian era, the system is regarded as an old-established tradition. Greek theory still holds the field, and Aurelian, the first of a new group of writers who gives any full discussion or statement of the modes, quotes Greek teachers as his authorities. In fact the theory was already so ancient that some of it was no longer intelligible to the Greek teachers, and the actual practice of liturgical singers had in some respects moved away from it. One of the difficulties, therefore, that confronted the Franks, as new disciples of the cantilena romana, was that of reconciling the practice and the theory; indeed, we owe the treatises written in the 9th century, by such writers as Aurelian, Regino and Odo, to the fact that such discrepancies existed, and that the Franks desired to reconcile them.

¹ See PSALMODY.

It will be well to sum up what was clear and fixed at this important epoch before going on to discuss what was doubtful or what was changing in practice.

(1) The Greek Perfect System was the basis of all. This gave the following possibilities:

The range was ample for vocal purposes; it was even extended on occasions one further note downwards (ϕ), and several notes upwards; while the use of the \flat gave an opportunity not only for transposition but also for obtaining some variety by the use of an accidental. Moreover, by combining transposition and the use of the \flat some further chromatic effects could be obtained, and were in fact employed.

(2) This range was subdivided into tetrachords, and this arrangement accorded with the position of the eight modes, for the lowest tetrachord comprised the four lowest limits of the plagal modes; the next comprised the four finals, and was always so described; the third in fact comprised the four dominants (mese) of the authentic modes, but it was not so described.

(3) The doctrine of the final was very clearly held, though the doctrine of the dominant had almost entirely dropped out of sight.

(4) The distinction between authentic and plagal was clearly drawn in theory, though it was being found a difficult task to draw the line in practice. No tradition survived as to the origin of the distinction. (The fable that St. Ambrose made the authentic modes and St. Gregory the plagal is of much later date.) It is only supposed that the plagal were devised to include the melodies of lower range, and no significance is attached to the difference of dominant between the authentic and plagal.

Yet even with all these four points clear, there remained much for the new musicians to do in the way of exposition and development of the modal system. They had before them (1) a great collection of masterpieces which had been in use two hundred years and more, (2) an eight-mode system of unknown antiquity, which even their Greek teachers could not fully explain, and (3) works of theorists (such as we have already had in review) extending down to only the 5th or 6th century and exhibiting the theory at an inchoate stage of development.

The works of Boethius and the rest of the theorists were, so far as the modes went, far more a source of mystification than of enlightenment. Valiant and clumsy attempts were made by the writers of the 9th and 10th centuries to reconcile the earlier with the later, the past theory and the actual practice (e.g. in the nomenclature of the modes); but they only resulted in much confusion both at the time and since. When, however, this element is eliminated from their writings, there remains a real development and a true exposition of the modal system to be found even in the earliest of the Frankish writers; and when once Guido d' Arezzo had had the courage to say that "the book of Boethius is of no use to singers, but only to philosophers", emancipation had come and the road of progress lay open to future generations.

The chief features of the modal system which we have already brought to light, e.g. the combination of pentachord and tetrachord in the authentic and its inversion in the plagal, were duly expounded by these writers. They have also the credit of having resisted an attempt to make twelve modes instead of eight; they rightly pointed out that twelve were quite unnecessary, granted the power to transpose and the use of the B \flat . They laboured to expound and maintain the real tonal independence of the modes; and this in itself was no easy task in the days before Guido when the singers had in the neums no absolute guide as to the intervals and notes which they were to sing.

The chief innovation for which this period was responsible was the change of the dominant of the third mode from the dubious note B to C; it took place in the 10th or 11th century, and though the improvement was universally accepted in theory and the innovation was adopted in the most prominent position possible, i.e. in the case of the reciting-note of the third tone, which thenceforward was C not B, the change was never carried out thoroughly, and plenty of traces of the old use of B as dominant have survived.¹

The main difficulties that the writers of this period had to face lay in two very practical directions, and were caused by a change in practice. Both the antiphons and the responds had ceased to be used in the old way, and much trouble was caused to the singers in consequence. In many of the responds the custom had arisen of repeating, after the verse or verses, only the latter part of the respond itself instead of the whole. It thus became necessary to lay down rules for the establishing of a proper musical relation between the end of the verse and the opening notes of the repeat. A similar process of shortening had caused the antiphon to be repeated no longer after each verse of the psalm, but only once or twice in the course of the psalmody. Now the endings of the tones had always been carefully adapted so as to fit on to the opening phrases of the antiphons; but when the repetition of the antiphon decayed, this close intimacy was no longer so necessary. This change of custom affected also the view taken of the tonality of the antiphon. As originally used, its opening phrase was all-important, and it was assigned to this or that mode (and associated therefore with this or that tone) according to the character of its opening. When, however, it came to be used rarely, or only once at the end of the psalm, the end of the antiphon and its final became far more important than its opening; consequently, according to the newer plan, its tonality was determined no longer by its incipit but by its last note.

The difficulty with the responds was soon settled once for all by making, where necessary, some slight but permanent accommodation in the music. But the other difficulty was a more or less permanent one: the medieval tonals continued to offer varying solutions of it, and out of it there grew such further developments of modal theory as the settlement of the absolute initials, i.e. certain notes in each mode on which a melody may suitably begin.

The development that produced the sequences entailed a further modification in the modal theory that went far to break down again the distinction between authentic and plagal.² In many cases the sequence-melodies were written, as it were, in two registers; their compass, therefore, exceeded the normal limits assigned to any one mode by the theorists of the 10th to 12th centuries (who in this respect were much more strict than the original writers of the music had been); it then became usual to regard them as being both in the authentic and in the corresponding plagal mode.

LATER INFLUENCES.—This was the last modification of any great moment that plain-song brought to the theory of the modes. Such other modifications as came to * between the 12th and the 16th centuries were due principally to two other causes: (1) the invasion of popular music or the spirit of folksong and (2) the growth of harmonized and measured music.

The tonality that was congenial to folksong, especially in France, was one that had always been uncongenial to the classical plain-song, viz. the scale which resulted from the uniform use of the B \flat with the fifth and sixth modes and is identical with the modern major scale. This pair of modes had always been the least used of all the four; without the flat there was too much tritone in it, even for medieval ears that were not so sensitive in that respect as modern ones; with the flat the mode did not much differ from the fourth pair except in having a semitone below the final, i.e. in possessing a leading-note, which from the point of view of unharmonized music was rather a disadvantage than an advantage. The major scale, however, is the joy of folksong, and as such it tended to invade the art music and even to claim a place cheek by jowl with the severe ecclesiastical plainsong.

¹ The Monastic Antiphona of 1939 restored B as the reciting-note for psalms in the third mode.

² See SEQUENCE.

This tendency was still further emphasized by the growing art of harmony. When at last the perfect close was invented it became the centre of the harmonic art, and the leading-note became a necessity. The F mode with B \flat and the C mode without it became favourites; other modes had to submit to chromatic alteration in the interests of harmony. For a surprisingly long time the feeling for the old tonality was so strong that this alteration had to be disguised¹, yet it was clear that eventually it would have to yield before the steady pressure of the advancing art of harmony. The period of the rise of harmony is thus the period of the decay of the old tonality and of the modal system. The ancient modes gradually disappeared until only the major and minor modes remained. A good deal of richness in melodic beauty was sacrificed in the process, and modern melody, even with all its chromatic freedom, has not such a wide range of variety as the old modal system afforded. No one will doubt that the gains in harmony more than compensated for the losses in melody; but it must be emphasized that all was not clear gain.

The modal system as handled and transformed by the pioneers of modern harmony is a matter of far less interest, for all was in a continual state of transition; and though at certain points a halt seems to be called and a permanent interest stirred by the genius of Dunstable, or of the great Flemings, or Palestrina and his contemporaries, yet from the point of view of harmony the old modal system cannot be regarded as anything else but a slavery, from which it was desirable that the polyphonic school should work its escape as soon as possible.

In the closing stages of the decay an attempt was made to revive the proposal to reckon twelve (or even fourteen) modes.² There was much more to be said for this from the point of view of polyphony in the 16th century than there had been in the 9th from the point of view of plainsong; but the modes were then a vanishing quantity, and the enumeration is only misleading if it is applied to the classical plainsong of earlier days. The Renaissance sent the musicians back afresh to the old writers on musical theory, but the attempts of Gafuri and his followers to combine the old and new were as little successful in the 16th century as they had been in the 9th; they added nothing but some fresh elements of confusion to the theory of the modes.

The following were the additional modes:

		Final
9th. Aeolian	A-a	A
10th. Hypoaeolian	E-e	A
11th. Hyperaeolian or Locrian (rejected)	B-b	B
12th. Hyperphrygian (rejected)	F-f	B
13th. Ionian	C-c	C
14th. Hypoionian	G-g	C

The following are the eight representative melodies (or neums) devised in the later middle ages in order to show off the special characteristics of each mode:

¹ See MUSICA FICTA.

² See DODECACHORDON.

would naturally tend to lead away from diatonic tonality, and Jeppesen is probably stating a very sound theory when he says: " . . . it does not seem improbable that Palestrina's art may one day, when all the facts have been finally investigated and collated, be recognized as the keystone of a great process of diatonic development ". H. K. A.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

(The ancient authorities are enumerated in the article headed SCRIPTORES.)

CLEMENS, ERNEST, 'The Four Parent Scales of Modal Music' (Proc. Mus. Ass., LXII, 1936).

PEARCE, CHARLES W., 'On the Treatment of Ancient Ecclesiastical Melodies in Modern Instrumental Composition' (Proc. Mus. Ass., XIII, 1876).

RICHARDSON, A. MADFLEY, 'The Medieval Modes' (New York, 1933).

See also Blainville ("Mode hellénique").

MODINHA. A type of Portuguese (and thence Brazilian) song, as distinctive if as unimportant a product of its country as the English "royalty ballad" was at about the turn of the 20th century, and now as completely outmoded. It was extremely popular, but in no sense a type of folksong, dating back no earlier than the first half of the 18th century and being generally attributable to a composer. Up to about the end of the 19th century the modinha was the only kind of art-song produced by Portugal, and it was a direct offspring of Italian opera. Though written by trained musicians and sung by educated people, as regards neither form nor character can the modinhas be ranked high as artistic music. Still, they retained their popularity from the early 18th century to the end of the 19th and beyond, and were written as a matter of course by every Portuguese composer of that period.

These Portuguese romances are of a literary as well as a musical form.² The first mention of them occurred in the so-called "Jewish operas"³ which rapidly became popular. In the burgher classes modinhas remained simple sentimental melodies; but at court and among the more educated classes they developed into highly elaborate arias, and celebrated composers and poets did not disdain to use this form. In Neves's 'Cancioneiro de musicas populares' there are twelve songs (modinhas) from Gonzaga's 'Marília de Dirceu', which, according to good evidence⁴, were set to music by Marcos Antonio Portugal (Portogallo). In

¹ Op. cit.

² The derivation of the word is doubtful. Some say it came from mote or moda, and that it had its origin in Brazil. We certainly read in a folio dated 1729 (Annals of the Bibl. of Rio de Janeiro, II, 129) that on a wedding-feast of the viceroys "um alegre divertimento musico de cantigas e modas da terra, de que ha abundancia n'este paiz". Also many travellers of that time describe with admiration the modinhas brasileiras. For further information see T. Braga's 'Historia da litteratura portugueza', XX, 603 et seq.

³ Thus named from Antonio José da Silva, born in 1705, a baptized Jew from Brazil, who wrote Portuguese comedies interspersed with modinhas.

⁴ Braga, op. cit., XV, 604, note.

1793 F. D. Milcent published a monthly 'Jornal de modinhas' at Lisbon⁵, from which the following example is taken to show the brilliant type of modinha:

Moda a Solo del S. Ant. da S. Leite M. de Capela no Porto.

Since the 16th century, when Portugal colonized Brazil, there has been continual intercourse between these countries; and during the first quarter of the 19th century, while the Portuguese court was domiciled in Brazil, the modinhas were as fashionable there as in Portugal. But they differed in character; the modinhas brasileiras were always very primitive in form, devoid of workmanship, somewhat vulgar, but expressive and gay. In short, a mixture between the French romance of the 18th century and couplets from the vaudeville. And this description applies to the type of Portuguese modinhas of the turn of the 20th century, which were written for one or two voices, strophic in form, with easy guitar or pianoforte accompaniment. This decline rapidly led to extinction.

A complete list of greater and lesser composers who tried their hand at this form of song is too long to give, but the following are among the most celebrated. In the 18th century M. A. Portugal and also Cordeiro da Silva and João de Sousa Carvalho; a little later, Rego, Bomtempo, Soares, Pereira da Costa, Coelho, Cabral and João de Mesquita. At Coimbra⁶, José Mauricio; at Oporto, Silva Leite, Nunes, Pires, João Leal and Edolo⁷; in the middle of the 19th century Domingos Schiopetta, the two monks J. M. da Silva and José Marques de Santa Rita, Frondoni (an Italian, long resident in Lisbon) and nearer our own time, R. Varella and Vasconcellos e Sá. But the most popular modinhas, such as 'A Serandinha', 'O Salvia', 'As Penciras', 'Mariquinhas meu Amor' and 'Tem minha amada' are anonymous. An exception is Vasconcellos e Sá's canção, 'Margarida vai à fonte', which was for long the favourite modinha.

⁵ Similarly named collections were published by A. José de Rego in 1812 and by José Edolo in 1823. Antonio J. Ferreira brought out a 'Collecção de modinhas portuguezas e brasileiras' in 1825.

⁶ The modinhas vary somewhat in the different districts.

⁷ Between 1820 and 1840 José Edolo, a violinist at the opera, was the favourite contributor to the 'Jornal de modinhas'.

See also Palomino (J.).

A. H. W., rev.

MODISTA RAGGIRATRICE, LA (Opera). See PAISELLO.

MODULATION. The procedure in composition known as modulation is generally defined as the art of passing from one key to another in a logical and convincing manner. Strictly the term should be applied only to the actual process by which key changes may be effected. For the purposes of this article it has been thought expedient to consider not only modulation in this strict sense, but also the much more important problems of key change and key relationship with which it is inextricably bound up.

In music built on the major and minor keys, to which this article must chiefly confine itself, since real modulation depends on at least a considerable measure of diatonic tonality, key changes are essentially a problem of structure. The various mechanical processes by which they may be wrought are much simpler matters and may well be dealt with first.

One preliminary matter must be discussed briefly: the question of the establishment of a key. Music of the harmonic age from c. 1600 to c. 1900 is mainly founded upon the diatonic key system in which harmonic progressions are related to a definite tonic, which is regarded as the tonal centre of gravity. This tonic may change from time to time as the music progresses; the essential point is that each chord and progression must have a definite relationship to a tonic, whether it be that of a work or movement as a whole or one temporarily predominant. The time-honoured ruling that a key has been established, that is to say recognized as the harmonic centre of gravity in being, when the Dominant (V)-Tonic (I) progression has been used is a convenient rule of thumb. It is by no means the whole truth, and is open to challenge on various grounds¹, but it may be accepted as a general guide for the immediate purpose.²

The most important of the various mechanical processes used in modulation is the Pivot Chord. This is simply a chord which is related both to the key already established and to the new key to which the modulation is made. Upon the placing and timing of this pivot depends the definition and smoothness of the modulation. The pivot chord may be only lightly touched upon, with the result of a very transitory or indefinite modulation, or it may be emphasized and dwelt upon so that the ensuing modulation becomes a complete shift of key centre of major structural importance.

Modulation by means of the pivot chord is generally divided into three classes: (1) Diatonic; (2) Chromatic; (3) Enharmonic.

(1) In the Diatonic class the pivot chord is diatonic in both the keys under discussion: that is to say, its notes belong to the scales of each key. An example will show the process in its simplest form:

Here the chord marked * is the tonic of G minor, the key already established. It is also the submediant chord of B \flat major; it is quitted as this chord and the process is completed by a dominant-tonic progression in the new key of B \flat .

(2) The Chromatic class must be further subdivided into:

- (a) Cases where the pivot chord is diatonic in the first key and chromatic in the second.
- (b) Cases where the pivot chord is chromatic in the first key and diatonic in the second.
- (c) Cases where the pivot chord is chromatic in both keys.

Three examples in which the chromatic major triad on the flat supertonic is involved will demonstrate each of these classes in turn:

The pivot chord * (B \flat major, first inversion) is approached as the tonic chord of the established key. It is then regarded as the first inversion of the major triad on the flat supertonic of A minor (the Neapolitan sixth) and is followed by a perfectly normal resolution of that chord in the new key, the modulation being completed by a perfect cadence in A minor.

¹ Schenker's 'Concept of Tonality', for example, denies essential modulatory suggestion in what is termed the applied dominant.

² See TONALITY. Hindemith's ruling that a cadence consisting of at least three chords of a tonality, of which the last is the tonic, is necessary for the establishment of a new key, is little better than the old rule. The surest guide to the identity of the key of a given passage is its musical effect in performance in its context.

(b)

Here the pivot chord is approached as the Neapolitan sixth of C minor (the established key) and quitted as an inversion of the subdominant chord of A \flat major (the new key).

(c)

In the third example the C \flat major triad is, in the first place, a chromatic chord on the flat submediant of E \flat major. It becomes the major triad on the flat supertonic of B \flat major, and is normally resolved in this new key.

(3) In the Enharmonic class one or more notes of the pivot chord change not only their names but also their identities. This is an important point, since there is much loose thinking on the subject of enharmonic change, and mere altered spelling (or expedient false notation as it is sometimes termed) is too often held to be the same thing as enharmonic alteration, which is certainly untrue when we think in terms of equal temperament.

The subdivisions of the enharmonic class are exactly the same as those of the chromatic class. The chords most susceptible to this treatment are augmented sixths, diminished sevenths and augmented fifths. Examples of the German sixth in each of the three subdivisions will give a clear picture of the process.

(A)

In example (A) * the pivot chord is, from the point of view of the established key of A \flat major, a (diatonic) dominant seventh, the C \sharp being equivalent to a D \flat . From the point of view of G minor, the new key, it is a German sixth on the flat submediant (chromatic).

(B)

Example (B) shows the reverse process. The pivot chord is approached as a German sixth on the flat submediant of A major. The D \sharp becomes an E \flat and the chord a dominant seventh in the new key (B \flat major).

(C)

The last example shows a pivot chord * chromatic in both keys. In the first key it is the tonic chromatic seventh (a minor-seventh E \flat added to the tonic major chord). By enharmonic change the E \flat becomes D \sharp , and the chord is resolved as a German sixth on the flat supertonic of E minor.

This short account must suffice to give some idea of the use of the pivot chord in classical modulation. Although it is undoubtedly the most important modulatory process, it is by no means the only facet of the art which must be taken into account. Before other methods are examined the question of key relationships must be considered.

In the diatonic scale-system each chord within the key has a definite and fixed relationship to the tonic. A similar relationship exists in the case of the accepted chromatic chords. Some of these chordal relationships when used in harmonic progression sound in themselves satisfactory and complete; for example the tonic and subdominant common chords. Others are less satisfactory in themselves and seem to require further progression to complete the harmonic process begun; for example, the tonic and supertonic common chords or the tonic common chord and any discord. The chief factors which seem to govern the effectiveness of such progressions in the case of concords are root relationships and the presence of a note common to both chords of the progression.

In the wider sphere of key relationships exactly the same conditions appear. The same rules apply to key progressions which apply to any harmonic progression. It is clear, therefore, that the relationship of any new key to the established key is the same as that of any concord diatonic or chromatic to the tonic. Those progressions to or from the tonic which are in themselves complete and satisfactory within the key find an equally satisfactory counterpart in the wider sphere of modulation.

In practice it will be found that keys whose tonics are a minor second (Neapolitan sixth relationship), a major or minor third or a perfect fourth above or below the existing tonic have a natural affinity, just as the corresponding common chords, whether diatonic or chromatic, can be used with good effect in direct harmonic progression.

This theory of preconceived key relationships explains what may be called the direct jump modulation. It will be found on close examination that in almost every case of this type a chord which could be regarded as a recognized pivot is either present or suggested. The difference between this direct method and the standard pivot chord process is that here the pivot chord is no longer a kind of "no man's land" between the two keys, but is immediately the tonic (or dominant, etc.) of the new key.¹

The following quotation shows very clearly a direct jump from C major to A♭ major (a major third below) and later the reverse process, A♭ to C major:

Allegro SCHUBERT, A minor Quartet

The score shows a piano introduction in C major. At the 11th measure, it modulates directly to A-flat major (labeled pp A♭ major). The modulation is achieved by moving the C major triad (C-E-G) down a major third to the A-flat major triad (A♭-C-E♭). The common note C is sustained. The key signature changes from one sharp (F#) to three flats (B♭, E♭, A♭). The tempo is marked Allegro.

¹ See TRANSITION.

A short musical example showing a direct jump from C major to A-flat major. The C major triad (C-E-G) is shown, followed by a direct jump to the A-flat major triad (A♭-C-E♭). The common note C is sustained. The key signature changes from one sharp to three flats.

The affinity of this definite key-change to the normal chromatic use of an A♭ major chord in the key of C can be seen at once by comparing the passage with the simple harmonic progression outlined thus:

A short musical example showing a simple harmonic progression from C major to A-flat major. The C major triad (C-E-G) is shown, followed by a direct jump to the A-flat major triad (A♭-C-E♭). The common note C is sustained. The key signature changes from one sharp to three flats.

Beethoven's second Rasumovsky Quartet opens with a striking example of a direct jump from E minor to F major (Neapolitan sixth relationship):

Allegro BEETHOVEN, Quartet, Op. 59, No. 2

The score shows a piano introduction in E minor. At the 11th measure, it modulates directly to F major (labeled F major). The modulation is achieved by moving the E minor triad (E-G-B) up a major third to the F major triad (F-A-C). The common note F is sustained. The key signature changes from one sharp (F#) to one flat (B♭). The tempo is marked Allegro.

This direct method of modulation works equally well when the jump from the established key is to some chord other than the tonic of the new key. This is often found in sequential passages. The following example shows the direct leap from the tonic of the established key to the dominant of the new key (minor second or Neapolitan sixth relationship):

Allegretto CHOPIN, Prelude 17, Op. 28

The score shows a piano introduction in E major. At the 11th measure, it modulates directly to F major (labeled F major). The modulation is achieved by moving the E major triad (E-G#-B) up a minor second to the F major triad (F-A-C). The common note F is sustained. The key signature changes from one sharp (F#) to one flat (B♭). The tempo is marked Allegretto.

The PIVOT NOTE is a device often used as an adjunct to modulation but not really as a means of modulating in itself. It is generally found in conjunction with the direct jump type where the key relationship is clearly established. It may also be used as part of the pivot chord method. It consists of a sustained or repeated note common to the two chords immediately involved in the key change:

The above example shows an E used as a pivot note in a direct leap modulation to a key a minor third lower.

This device is of the greatest artistic importance in modulation. Many cases come to mind where by its use the timing of the change-of-key outlook is superbly controlled and the effect of the modulation vastly intensified. Several notable examples occur in Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll'. A very memorable moment in Elgar's 'Gerontius' is brief enough to quote here:

COMPOUND MODULATION is a term sometimes used by theorists to describe a process in which several subsidiary keys are suggested, but not usually established, either in sequence or in the course of some real shift of key centre. The usual method is the employment of a succession of pivot chords each of which takes, as it were, an unexpected turning, and instead of resolving so as to establish the expected new key, proceeds to a chord which is in itself a pivot to a further key change. A very common example of this is the typical sequential passage of "dominant sevenths" so often found in the Mozart-Haydn period:

Bach also makes striking use of the process.

The development of this use of transitions is clearly seen in tightly packed modulatory passages like the following:

The use of a prominent scale passage for the purpose of binding together remote chromatic harmonies within one established key is well known. Exactly the same use may be made of it in subsidiary modulations. The downward chromatic scale in the following passage illustrates the point:

HISTORICAL AND FORMAL ASPECTS. These may well be considered together, as they are very closely connected, if not interdependent.

Modulation in the modern sense, as has been stated, presupposes the diatonic scale system, and for its more chromatic phases a tempered scale. In 16th-century modal polyphony the phenomenon which looks like modulation is really no more than the formation of cadences upon various degrees of the mode which itself remains constant throughout the work or section of the work. Yet those cadences were of great structural importance, and may be regarded as the starting-point from which the road led to the establishment of the diatonic system, the development of harmonic and key relationships, real shifts of key centre and the organization of form and key structure.

As the modal system gradually gave way to something more nearly akin to diatonic major and minor scales, composers, especially those of the English school, became increasingly aware of the possibilities of key change. The experiments in this direction seem to take two forms: the use of transitory modulation (from the modern point of view) for expressive or illustrative purposes and the shifting of key centre, often without connecting modulation in the modern sense, for structural reasons. An example of the first of these uses from Weelkes's 'Gloria in excelsis' will illustrate the point:

The use of key contrast in tentative shape becomes fairly common towards the end of the 16th century. An early example can be found in Tallis's Lamentations. The work as a whole is in the Phrygian mode, but the section "Beth" is surprisingly in the diatonic key of B-flat major. The previous section ends with a cadence in D major (Dorian mode with the "tierce de Picardie"). Viewed from a modern standpoint the key relationship is that of a major third below:

A much more definite example of key structure is to be seen in Byrd's splendid carol

'This day Christ was born' (1611). The opening is in the key of G with an F♯ (Mixolydian). In the second section the key changes to C major and the rhythm to a quick triple time ("This day the just rejoice"). At the words "saying, Glory be to God on High" a complete change of mood takes place: the time reverts to a dignified four-beat measure and the key changes to A minor, from which key centre various related keys are touched almost in the manner of two centuries later. A completely convincing return to the original key is made in the final section. Such use of key structure is by no means rare in the work of the later English polyphonists.

The 17th century saw the rise of instrumental music and the acceptance of the diatonic key system. The inevitable counterpart of these changes was the development of form and harmonic and key sense. By the time of Bach and Handel the diatonic scale system and its harmonic and key implications had become firmly settled. Modulations to nearly related keys were a normal part of the language of music. Bach's solution to the problems of tuning had thrown open the way to the extreme keys, yet most composers seemed reluctant to avail themselves of the possibilities thus provided and remained content with their newly found mastery of the diatonic system and its simple chord and key relationships. Handel's great choruses, notably "Hallelujah" from 'Messiah', show what tremendous things could be done within the limits of almost wholly diatonic harmony and a few very brief excursions to closely related keys. Bach was a more adventurous spirit and on occasion made magnificent use of extreme modulations and shifts of key centre with complete mastery, yet even he seemed for the most part to be content with the limited and simple modulations which were the common property of his contemporaries.

The relationship of form and key scheme at this period is of vital importance. Typical "suite" movements illustrate this very clearly, for in them the thematic material is generally little more than the contrapuntal development of a figure or group of figures, and it is the key scheme which makes the structure of the movement. A brief key analysis of one such movement will show the structure:

The keys which are an essential part of the structure are underlined. The first section begins in E♭ and after twice hinting at A♭ and a brief excursion to C minor (bar 7) and a further suggestion of A♭ makes a definite shift of key centre to B♭ (the dominant). The second section begins in B♭ and after a hint at E♭ settles down into the key of C minor. A transient modulation in bar 15 to F minor does not disturb the tonality. The return to E♭ is made via A♭ major and F minor (bars 17 and 18), keys well on the flat side of the eventual tonic. The general shape of the structure may be described as an outgoing journey to the sharp side in the first section and a return by way of the flat side in the second. There are many variations of this plan, but it may be taken as fairly characteristic of this type of movement. The most important thing to notice about the structure is the disposition and balancing of the main shifts of key centre and the relative unimportance from a structural point of view of the subsidiary modulations which occur either within one of the main key centres as extensions of some diatonic or chromatic harmony or as incidents in the course of a structural key change.

The Mozart-Haydn period, with its adoption of the recently developed "sonata" form, shows even more clearly the close interdependence of key and structure. The tonic-dominant or tonic-relative major key relationship is the foundation of the typical "first movement" exposition. Key balance in the "development" section, and the re-establishment of the original tonic in the recapitulation, are structural necessities. In Haydn's work the second subject is often identical with the first in the dominant key (for example, in the D major Symphony, No. 6 of the Salomon set). Parry sums up the matter well when he says, speaking of Haydn and Mozart:

In the work of these two great composers we find at once the simplest and surest distribution of keys . . . each successive key which is important in the structure of the work is marked by forms both of melody and harmony, which, by the use of the most obvious indicators, state as clearly as possible the tonic to which the particular group of harmonies may be referred.

This clarity in key definition is the factor which produces the unmatched formal lucidity in their work; equally the balance of key distribution gives it its perfectly contrived proportion.

Two matters of technical importance may be considered in connection with sonata form at this period. First, the methods employed in bringing about a real shift of key centre. It has already been made clear that the mechanical means of modulation do not necessarily in themselves effect such a structural change. The matter is really one of timing and approach. Some of the methods used in the period in establishing the really important key shifts show this clearly. One obvious method is the repetition of the new dominant chord or perfect cadence in the new key so that it becomes the focal point of interest in the passage; this may be regarded as a rather crude example of timing. Another much more satisfactory way is the device of going, as it were, one step beyond the key to which the modulation is being made and then returning to it; this method is frequently used in key shifts to the sharp side; the dominant key of the new key is touched upon in this case. An example taken at random will show how effective this approach can be:

Allegro assai MOZART, G minor Symphony

C minor F major Bb major

The whole of the passage from which these nine bars are taken deserves close study, for it illustrates a very important principle in the art of key management. The structural shift of key at this point in the movement is from G minor to B flat major. C minor, a subsidiary key on the flat side of both the main keys involved, is used as a vantage-point from which to approach the new key. The shift of key centre is clinched by a further digression to the sharp side immediately before the establishment of B \flat , the whole process being perfectly balanced and timed:

This method of approach from the flat side of the new key is of great interest. It was very frequently used in modulations of structural importance throughout the classical period.

The other matter which requires consideration is the use of subsidiary keys and transient modulations as relief from long passages in one key, as for example between the restatement of the first and second subjects of a sonata-form movement in the recapitulation. A good example may be found in Mozart's pianoforte Sonata in D major (K. 576). These "modulatory digressions" (as Parry terms them) are very much akin to an extended use of chromatic harmony within a main key centre:

Allegro molto MOZART, G minor Symphony

Bb major G minor Bb major

For the remainder of the period with which we are concerned the main interest in modulation centres round this use of modulatory digression. Beethoven makes much use of the device often at the very beginning of a movement before the main key has been definitely established. The openings of the pianoforte Sonata Op. 90 or of the string Quartet Op. 95 are good examples. In such cases the subsidiary keys remain entirely subordinate to the main key which, when it is established, seems to gain force and definition from this method of introduction. In fact this initial key-vagueness became a typical feature of introductions to movements. (The introduction to Schubert's Octet illustrates this.)

The eventual development of modulatory digression is seen in Wagner's later work, especially 'Tristan', where the structural key centres seem to be a synthesis of constantly shifting modulatory digressions.

The evolution of the art of modulation is perhaps the greatest technical achievement of the harmonic age. The importance of its structural and expressive powers can hardly be overestimated. Whatever the direction the future development of music may take, it seems almost inconceivable that composers could sacrifice the great potentialities of key relationships and contrasts, which from the later days of the 16th century onwards have proved themselves to be the very mainspring of musical expression.

H. K. A.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- GÜLDENSTEIN, G., 'Modulationslehre', 2nd ed. (Stuttgart, 1929).
 HAREN, GEORG, 'Thematisches Modulieren' (Leipzig, 1931).
 HERNRIED, ROBERT, 'Systematische Modulation' (Berlin, 1935; 2nd ed. 1948).
 OSTERSTROM, THORVALD, 'A Theory of Modulation' (Chicago, 1935).
 REGER, MAX, 'On the Theory of Modulation', trans. from the German (New York, 1948).
 ZOELLER, CARL, 'The Art of Modulation' (London, 1930).

MODULATIONS, REGULAR and CONCEDED (Lat. modulationes [vel clausulae] regulares et concessae). See MODELS.

MODULATOR. See TONIC SOL-FA.

Moe, Jørgen. See Grieg (song). Lindeman (3, mus. suppl. to folklore book).

MOERAN, E. J. (Ernest John) (b. Heston, Middlesex, 31 Dec. 1894; d. nr. Kenmare, Co. Kerry, Ireland, 1 Dec. 1950).

English composer. It is significant that his father was born in Ireland and his mother in Norfolk, for the predominant influences in his music are the scenery and folk music of Ireland and East Anglia. His father was an Anglican clergyman, and almost all the music Moeran heard in his earliest years was church music; indeed, apart from learning to play the violin, his youthful musical training consisted of teaching himself to play the pianoforte from hymn-books. When he was fourteen years old he entered Uppingham School, where he was encouraged to develop his musical instincts. It was there that he first heard much classical music; and his experience was practical as well as appreciative for, as a member of the school string quartet, he was able to study many works as a performer. The result of his sympathetic treatment at Uppingham was the composition of his first work, a cello Sonata of considerable length.

In 1913 he entered the R.C.M., where he remained for eighteen months until, on the outbreak of war in 1914, he joined the army as a despatch rider. The following year he was commissioned as an officer in the Norfolk Regiment, and two years later he was so badly wounded as to be unfit for further active service. On his demobilization in 1919 he went back to his school as music master, but, determined to resume his career as a composer, he gave up the post and in 1920 went to London to compose and receive guidance from John Ireland, which continued until 1923.

In his earlier, formative years Moeran, instead of having the usual young composer's background of standard works, heard much genuine folksong sung by the inhabitants of the Norfolk village where his father was vicar. (He collected many of these songs, and some were published in the Folk Song Society's Journal in 1922.) Folksongs, which had thus become part of his mental environment, formed the basis of his musical thought as a matter of course when he began to compose, and his music has a natural, unassuming manner rare among the work of composers who have used folk music as the basis of their style. This was recognized by John Ireland, who encouraged Moeran to continue as a composer and helped him to develop his harmonic sense — a dangerous procedure, for Ireland's own harmonic idiom is as attractive to the young romantic composer as G. K. Chesterton's prose style is to the young writer — and as full of traps for the unwary exponent. It was inevitable, therefore, that Moeran should fall under the Ireland spell for a time, as in the early pianoforte pieces and the 'Ludlow Town' song cycle; at its worst this produced the blocks of chords which detract from the dramatic beauty of the 1923 violin Sonata, and at its best the earlier Ireland-like harmony became mellowed and clarified by later influences, so that it is now an essential part of Moeran's distinctive and very personal style.

Of his early music some orchestral works, string quartets, sonatas and other chamber works have been discarded, but the 'Ludlow Town' cycle (1920), the pianoforte Trio (1920, revised 1925), the symphonic impression 'In the Mountain Country' (1921), the string Quartet (1921), the violin Sonata (1923) and several pianoforte pieces remain to testify to his poetic imagination and sure grasp of technique. The first work to be published was the set of three pianoforte pieces of 1919, but his first substantial introduction to the musical public came when, in 1924, Sir Hamilton Harty played at a Hallé concert in Manchester the first orchestral Rhapsody — a work which had already been played in London and Bournemouth. This was followed in the same year by a performance at the Norwich Festival of the second Rhapsody, which was to be included in the 1929 Promenade Concerts, and in 1925 Moeran organized a series of chamber concerts at the Wigmore Hall which increased his status not only with the public but also with that remarkable group of composers and critics which included Bernard van Dieren and Peter Warlock. It was through his friendship with members of this group that more influences became apparent in his music. The simpler harmonies of Delius had clarified those inherited from John Ireland, and van Dieren's brilliantly expounded theories and astonishing personality had considerable influence on him, although this is not so immediately apparent. The realization of his gifts by these musicians had already resulted in his concentrating his attention on the composition of songs, and about 1924 he had begun to arrange folk-songs of his own collecting for performance in the series of song recitals given by John Goss.

From then until about 1930 Moeran composed little but songs, in which he excelled. His melodic and harmonic gifts admirably fitted him for the task and his folk-music instincts enabled him to compose songs which always had freshness of outlook despite the distinctive harmonic style that at first had threatened to dominate the vocal line. His admirable folksong arrangements, of which the finest are the 'Six Norfolk Folksongs' (1923) have the distinction of being personal in idiom without crushing the spirit of the originals. The culmination of this period of intense song composition was the cycle which, in the opinion of many, has remained Moeran's finest achievement in this field — the 'Seven Poems of James Joyce' (1929). The combination of the poet's cultivated Irish spirit and the composer's inherent appreciation of things Irish resulted in these settings, which are unsurpassed by other composers' settings of Joyce. It is in this cycle that the influence of Peter Warlock is most apparent, and it is significant that the last of the songs is a descendant of Warlock's setting ('The Curlew') of another Irish poet — Yeats.

It has been noted that Moeran's primary gifts were melodic and harmonic and that his most successful compositions up to this point in his career were those in which they predominated. Moeran now decided to elaborate his technique, and he retired to the Cotswolds to devote himself to further study. The most immediate results were the Sonata for two unaccompanied violins and the string Trio composed the following year (1931), which combined the composer's new developments in style with his older, spontaneously melodic traits. The Trio has a charm and vivacity which mark it as a descendant of the earlier string Quartet and have made it universally recognized as Moeran's best (and most popular) chamber work. 1931 also saw the production of two beautiful pieces for small orchestra, 'Whythorne's Shadow' and 'Lonely Waters', both rhapsodies built upon old melodies. The first is based on a song by the Elizabethan composer Thomas Whythorne and the second on a Norfolk folksong which Moeran had already arranged for the voice. 'Lonely Waters', one of the few Moeran works to be based on an actual folk tune, has a poignant finale where a male voice is used as an orchestral instrument, singing a verse of the folksong.

The most important works of the next five years were choral and include a setting for baritone and unaccompanied chorus of Robert Nichols's poem 'Blue-eyed Spring' (1931). The most outstanding of these choral works was the cycle for unaccompanied voices, 'Songs of Springtime' (1934), consisting of settings of Elizabethan poems which caught, as the title indicates, the exuberant spirit of the words — without, however, falling into any of the pitfalls of style which hamper many composers in their settings of familiar lyrics. In the same year Moeran composed a Nocturne for baritone, chorus and orchestra (the words from a play by Robert Nichols) in memory of Delius, who had just died. It was Moeran's open acknowledgment of Delius's contribution to his artistic development, but it is not so successful as the works in which he does not deliberately imitate features of Delius's style, but does so unconsciously (e.g. the pianoforte Trio of 1920).

The year 1937 saw the completion of Moeran's largest work — the Symphony in G minor. It was first performed at a Royal Philharmonic Society concert on 13 Jan. 1938, when it was conducted by Leslie Heward. Many English composers at that time were greatly interested in Sibelius; it was thus hardly surprising that Moeran's first work in the form in which Sibelius excels should bear traces of his influence, particularly as his accustomed bleak surroundings have affinities with the desolate beauty of the wintry Norfolk and Irish coasts which were Moeran's chief sources of inspiration. The Symphony, however, had to bear much criticism. It was found to be undisciplined and to bear traces of the composer's inexperience of the form. But the true inspiration, sincerity and freshness of the ideas in it have proved to be more important.

After the Symphony came a period of rest, broken by the composition in 1939 of the unaccompanied choral suite 'Phyllida and Corydon'. These settings of 16th- and 17th-century poets have been more widely performed than the 'Songs of Springtime' of five years before. They have been criticized because the "imitation" contrapuntal elements in it were held to be foreign to the composer, but the conceit is entirely in spirit with the times in which the poems were written.

Following the 'Four Shakespeare Songs' of 1940 came the violin Concerto (1942), a work of romance and jollity with a distinctly Irish flavour. It was often played by Arthur Catterall, for whom it was written, and it was found to be delightful and infectious by the audiences of the troubled times in which it appeared. Moeran composed little during the war period, and his only work referring to war was the 'Overture for a Masque' composed for E.N.S.A. in 1944.

The three-movement 'Sinfonietta' (1944) has a lighter touch than the Symphony, but only in that respect can it be held to be a lesser work. The two are counterparts, for what the shorter work loses in stature by comparison it gains in technique. An interesting feature of the 'Sinfonietta' is the theme which is present in various degrees of importance in all the movements, providing a unifying element — and perhaps a hint of the composer's favourite rhapsodic form. The 'Sinfonietta' is a well-knit and vital work, and had an immediate success when it was first performed on 7 Mar. 1945 (B.B.C.).

In 1945 Moeran married the violoncellist Peers Coetmore and this led to the composition of two large-scale works for the cello — a Concerto (1945) and a Sonata (1947). Both are as lyrical and imaginative as was to be expected from this composer's writing for that instrument. The Concerto received its first performance (with the composer's wife as soloist) in Dublin on 25 Nov. 1945. A later work of importance, the enjoyable Serenade in G major for orchestra, pleased both critics and audience when first performed at the Promenade Concerts on 2 Sept. 1948.

Moeran loved country life and had for some years lived in the Cotswolds. He was especially fond of Ireland, and it was there that he met with sudden death. He was found dead in the river Kenmare, but it was shown at the inquest that he was not drowned, but must have been dead before he fell into the water.

In recent years Moeran's music has increased in popularity, probably because he is one of the few 20th-century composers to be primarily inspired by nature. His work therefore represents something stable in a world of instability and is that rare thing in modern art — music that compels warm sympathy rather than cool admiration in its hearers.

- BIBL.—BAX, SIR ARNOLD, 'E. J. Moeran: 1894-1950' (M. & L., XXXII, 1951, p. 125), Obituary appreciation.
EVANS, EDWIN, 'Moeran's Violin Concerto' (Mus. T., Aug. 1943).
STATHAM, HEATHCOTE, 'Moeran's Symphony in G minor' (M. Rev., I, 1940, p. 245).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

CHURCH MUSIC

- Anthem 'Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem' (1930).
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, D ma. (1930).
Te Deum and Jubilate, E♭ ma. (1930).
Unaccompanied Anthem 'Blessed are those servants' (1938).

CHORAL WORKS

(unaccompanied unless otherwise stated)

- 'Weep you no more' (Herrick) (1922).
'Gather ye rosebuds' (Herrick) (1922).
'Robin Hood borne on his bier' (traditional) (1923).
'Blue-eyed Spring' (Robert Nichols) (1931).
'Alsatian Carol' (traditional) (1932).
'The Echoing Green' (Blake) for 2 voices and pf. (1933).
'Songs of Springtime' (1934)
1. Under the greenwood tree (Shakespeare).
2. The River-God's Song (John Fletcher).
3. Spring, the sweet Spring (Samuel Daniel).
4. Love is a sickness (Thomas Nashe).
5. Sigh no more, ladies (Shakespeare).
6. Good Wine (William Browne).
7. To Daffodils (Herrick).
'Nocturne' (Robert Nichols) for baritone, chorus & orch. (1934).
'Phyllida and Corydon' (1939)
1. Madrigal: 'Phyllida and Corydon' (Nicholas Breton).
2. Madrigal: 'Beauty sat bathing' (Anthony Munday).
3. Pastoral: 'On a hill there grows a flower' (Breton).
4. Air: 'Phyllis Inamorata' (Lancelot Andrewes).
5. Ballet: 'Said I that Amaryllis' (anon.).
6. Canzonet: 'The treasure of my heart' (Sidney).
7. Air: 'Where she lies sleeping' (anon.).
8. Pastoral: 'Corydon, arise' (anon.).
9. Madrigal: 'To Meadows' (Herrick).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Symphonic Impression 'In the Mountain Country' (1921).
Rhapsody No. 1, F ma. (1922).
Rhapsody No. 2, E ma. (1924; also completely revised version for smaller orch., 1941).
2 Pieces for small orch. (1931)
1. Lonely Waters.
2. Whythorne's Shadow.
Suite, 'Farrago' (1932).
Symphony, G mi. (1937).
'Overture for a Masque' (1944).
'Sinfonietta' (1944).
Serenade, G ma. (1948).

SOLO INSTRUMENT WITH ORCHESTRA

- Concerto for vn. & orch. (1942).
Rhapsody No. 3, F♯ ma., for pf. & orch. (1943).
Concerto for cello & orch. (1945).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- Trio for vn., cello & pf., D ma. (1920).
String Quartet, A mi. (1921).
Sonata for vn. & pf., E mi. (1923).
Sonata for 2 vns., A ma. (1930).
Trio for vn., viola & cello, G ma. (1931).
Prelude for cello & pf. (1948).
Fantasy Quartet for oboe, vn., viola & cello (1946).
Sonata for cello & pf., A mi. (1947).

PIANOFORTE SOLO

- 3 Pieces (1919)
1. The Lake Island.
2. Autumn Woods.
3. At a Horse Fair.

Theme and Variations (1920).

'On a May Morning' (1921).

'Stalham River' (1921).

Toccata (1921).

'Fancies' (1922)

1. Windmills.

2. Elegy.

3. Burlesque.

'Two Legends' (1923)

1. A Folk Story.

2. Rune.

'Bank Holiday' (1925).

'Summer Valley' (1925).

Arrangements of 2 Irish Folk Songs

1. An Irish Love Song (1926).

2. The White Mountain (1927).

'Berceuse' (1933).

Prelude, G mi. (1933).

SONGS

'Ludlow Town', song cycle (A. E. Housman) (1920)

1. When smoke stood up from Ludlow.

2. Farewell to barn and stack and tree.

3. Say, lad, have you things to do?

4. The lads in their hundreds.

Spring goeth all in white' (Robert Bridges) (1920).

Twilight' (John Maschfeld) (1920).

When June is come' (Bridges) (1922).

The Day of Palms' (Arthur Symonds) (1922).

The Beanflower' (Dorothy L. Sayers) (1923).

Impromptu in March' (D. A. E. Wallace) (1923).

Commendation of Music' (Richard Strode) (1924).

Under the broom' (traditional) (1924).

Troll the bowl' (Thomas Dekker) (1925).

Come away, death' (Shakespeare) (1925).

The Merry Month of May' (Dekker) (1925).

In Youth is Pleasure' (R. Wever) (1925).

Far in a western brookland' (Housman) (1925).

'Tis time, I think' (Housman) (1925).

Christmas Day in the Morning' (traditional) (1925).

Maltworms' (Still) (1926) (in collaboration with Warlock).

Rosefrail' (James Joyce) (1929).

Seven Poems of James Joyce' (1929)

1. Strings in the earth and air.

2. The merry greenwood.

3. Bright Cap.

4. The Pleasant Valley.

5. Donnycarney.

6. Rain has fallen.

7. Now, O now, in this brown land.

'Loveliest of Trees' (Housman) (1931).

'Blue-eyed Spring' (Robert Nichols) (1931).

'Four English Lyrics' (traditional) (1933)

1. Cherry Ripe.

2. Willow Song.

3. The Constant Lover.

4. The Passionate Shepherd.

'Rosaline' (Thomas Lodge) (1937).

'Diaphenia' (Henry Constable) (1937).

'Four Shakespeare Songs' (1940)

1. The Lover and his Lass.

2. Where the bee sucks.

3. When daisies pied.

4. When icicles hang.

'Invitation in Autumn' (Seumas O'Sullivan) (1944).

'Six Songs of Seumas O'Sullivan' (1944)

1. Evening.

2. The Poplars.

3. A Cottager.

4. The Dustman.

5. Lullaby.

6. The Herdsman.

'Rahoon' (Joyce) (1947).

FOLKSONG ARRANGEMENTS

(all for voice and pf. except where otherwise stated)

'Six Norfolk Folksongs' (1923)

1. Down by the riverside.

2. The Bold Richard.

3. Lonely Waters.

4. The Pressgang.

5. The Shooting of his Dear.

6. The Oxford Sporting Blade.

'The Sailor and young Nancy' (1924).

'Jail Song' (1924).

'Sheep-Shearing Song' (1924).

'Can't you dance the polka?' (1924).

'Mrs. Dyer, the baby farmer' (1924).

'The Little Milkmaid' (1925).

'The Jolly Carter' (1925) (also version with accomp. for stgs.).

'Six Suffolk Folksongs' (1931)

1. Nutting Time.

2. Blackberry Fold.

3. Cupid's Garden.

4. Father and Daughter.

5. The Isle of Cloy.

6. A Seaman's Life.

'Ivy and Holly', unaccomp. part-song (1932).

'I'm weary, yes, mother darling', Greek folksong (trans. M. D. Calvocoressi) (1946).

K. A.

See also Warlock (collab. in song).

MOESCHINGER, Albert (b. Basel, 10 Jan. 1897).

Swiss composer. Having studied at Berne, Leipzig and Munich (with Courvoisier), he settled at Berne, where he taught theory and pianoforte until 1943, when he retired to Saas-Fee (Valais). He is one of the most striking and independent personalities among Swiss composers. Without adopting any purely constructivist tonal system and without, on the other hand, merely following in the wake of late romanticism, he succeeds in his numerous works in creating a personal style of convincing force, and his compositions often seem to reflect the problematic severity of the present-day world's affairs. But it is characteristic of him that here and there, as in his sacred works, he should be able to transcend worldly problems and attain through an ardent vitality to inner serenity (cf. the two choral works with organ, Opp. 50 and 59, or the 'Dialogue', Op. 47).

While Moeschinger's earliest works (up to Op. 9) did show strong late-romantic traits, those from Op. 10 onwards more and more clearly testify to a stylistic intention and a physiognomy all his own. Harmonic elements are gradually combined with an increasingly wilful and powerful polyphony. If this linear style induces certain affinities with baroque texture and form that cannot be ignored in certain works (e.g. the organ music), Moeschinger nevertheless continues to strive after an individual solution of such problems (e.g. the pianoforte concertos). The new and highly original choral style he has succeeded in creating is to be found at its finest in his works for women's voices.

After 1940 Moeschinger's music is felt to have begun to owe something to the influence of French impressionism. The late contact he thus made with a world fundamentally opposed to his austere and philosophical nature bore admirable fruit in the enchanting sonorities of the 'Élégie pastorale', Op. 60, and in the pianistically most effective 'Cahier valaisan', Op. 63. That Moeschinger is also capable of writing in small forms and in a folksong-like and extremely humorous vein is shown by many pianoforte pieces, choruses and songs, as well as by two works privately printed (and therefore not mentioned in the catalogue that follows): 'Clementi-Hüttenbuch' and 'Postkartenalbum'. Wittily parodistic elements are also to be found in his work (e.g. Op. 52).

At the centre of Moeschinger's work stands his output in chamber music. From Op. 5 down to Op. 74 he has again and again been preoccupied with this species of composition, and it is there that he has been particularly successful in solving the problem of the modern sonata without falling into historic dryness on the one hand and into artificial "modernity" on the other. Among his finest works in that line are the first cello Sonata, Op. 61, and the violin Sonata, Op. 62. In the later 1940s a new development set in: Moeschinger began to take a new interest in opera and symphony; but it is as yet too early to attempt a judgment of this phase of his work.

BIBL. — HANDSCHIN, J., 'Neues von A. Moeschinger' (Schweiz. Mus. Ztg., 1945, No. 11).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

OPERA

- Op. — 'Die sieben Raben', after Grimm (1946).

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

- 'Das singende Knöchlein', puppet play (Schible) for stg. 4tet (1941).
 — 'Tasso' (Goethe) for stg. 4tet (1942).
 — 'Ada' (Clénin) for oboe, clar. & pf. (1942).

RADIO MUSIC

75. 'Die kleine Seefrau', radio opera, after Andersen (1948).

CHORAL WORKS

- 'Das Posthorn' (Lenau) for men's chorus, 4 horns & stgs. (1928).
 14. Motet (Stefan George) for unaccomp. chorus (1929).
 19a. 'Wer je die Flamme umschritt' (George), for unaccomp. men's chorus (1930).
 43. Motet 'Eucharistische Sehnsucht' for unaccomp. chorus (1939).
 46. Cantata 'Tag unsres Volkes' (Faesi) for solo voices, chorus, organ & orch., for the National Exhibition (1939).
 50. 'Der Sieg Christi' (Revelations) for chorus & organ (1940).
 51. Fantasy for orch. on a chorale, with final chorus (1940).
 59. Mass for chorus & organ (1940).
 67. 5 Motets for unaccomp. chorus (1952).
 69. 'Herbst des Einsamen' (Trakl) for women's chorus & stgs. (1944).
 — 'Ode to Aphrodite' (Sappho) for women's chorus & orch. (1946).
 — 'Minnelied' (O. von Grandson) for chorus & lower stgs.

Also several choruses for mixed, women's & men's voices, folksong arrangements, &c., without opus numbers.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

32. Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Purcell for stgs., trumpets & drums (1933).
 43. Suite (Divertimento) for stgs. (1934).
 45. 3 Pieces ('Dies academicus') for stgs. (1938).
 Suite for full orch. (1943).
 — 'Fantasie 1944' for stgs. (1945).
 71. Symphony No. 1 "à la gloire de . . ." (1946).
 73. Symphony No. 2 (1947).
 76. Symphony No. 3 (1949).

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

- Op.
 18. Pf. Concerto No. 1, with chamber orch. (1929).
 23. Pf. Concerto No. 2, with chamber orch. (1930).
 40. Vn. Concerto, with stgs. (1935; rescored for full orch., 1949).
 42. Pf. Concerto No. 3, with stgs. (1938).

SOLO VOICES AND ORCHESTRA

47. 'Dialogue' for tenor, baritone & stgs. (1939).
 52. 'Visions du moyen-âge' for tenor, clar. & stgs. (1941).
 — 'Metten-Kantate' for soprano, bass & stgs. (1945).
 — 26 Folksongs for soprano, baritone & chamber orch. (1949).

CHAMBER MUSIC

5. String Quartet No. 1 (1921-23).
 6. String Quartet No. 2 (1921-23).
 7. String Quartet No. 3 (1921-23).
 8. String Quartet No. 4 (1921-23).
 10. String Trio (Divertimento) (1925; arr. for wind, 1949).
 11. Octet for 3 wind insts., & 5 stgs. (1922).
 — Trio No. 1 for flute, clar. & bassoon (1930).
 24. Cantata (Angelus Silesius) for soprano, vn. & pf. (1932).
 — 'Introduzione e scherzo' for 2 vns. & viola (1933).
 38. Trio No. 1 for vn., cello & pf. (1934).
 39. 8 Movements for stg. 4tet (1934).
 41. Quintet for 2 vns., viola, cello & pf. on a Swiss folksong (1935).
 48. String Quartet 'Colloqui' (1940).
 49. String Quartet 'Die Horen' (1940).
 53. Quintet for wind insts. on Swiss folksongs (1941).
 54. 'Fantasia pastorale' for flute, oboe, clar., bassoon & stg. 4tet (1943).
 55. Trio No. 2 for vn., cello & pf. (1943).
 57. Quintet (Divertimento) for clar. & stgs. (1943).
 60. 'Élégie pastorale' for flute, oboe, cello & harp (1943).
 — Trio No. 2 for flute, clar. & bassoon (1950).
 — Divertimento for oboe, clar. & bassoon (1952).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

25. 'Esquisses valaisannes' (1931).
 26a. 'Variationen über ein einfaches Thema, Élégie und Caprice' (1930).
 37. 'Drei Humoresken' (1933).
 — 5 Pieces (1942).
 62. Sonata (1944).
 — 'Variations sur un Noël français' (1944).

VIOLIN AND ORGAN

70. Sonata (1946).

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

61. Sonata No. 1 (1943).
 74. Sonata No. 2 (1947).

CLARINET AND PIANOFORTE

65. Sonatina (1945).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- 'Zehn Klavierstücke für Anfänger' (1930-35).
 28. 'Vier Klavierstücke' (1931).
 29. 'Drei Klavierstücke' (1931).
 30. 3 Pieces
 (a) Toccata No. 1 (1932).
 (b) Toccata No. 2 (1934).
 (c) Rondo a capriccio (1929).
 31. 'Neun kleine Klavierstücke' (1931).
 — 'Sieben Kinderlieder am Klavier' (1932).
 35. 'Vision und Verinnerlichung' for 2 pls. (1932).
 63. 'D'un cahier valaisan', suite (1944).
 66. Sonatina (1945).
 — 'Sonatina ad diem nativitatis Christi' (1945).
 72. Toccata No. 3 (1947).
 — 'Veränderungen über ein Thema von Stravinsky' (1949).
 — 'Vier Fünfstücke (dem Andenken Adrian Leverkühns gewidmet)' (1949).

Also numerous other pf. pieces without opus numbers.

ORGAN MUSIC

Op.

1. Passacaglia (1919).
2. Prelude and Fugue, C# mi. (1921).
4. Toccata, Grave and Fugue, D mi. (1920).
17. Introduction and Double Fugue (1929).
21. Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Purcell (1930).
44. Suite (1934).
58. Toccata (1943).
68. 'Kanonische Stucke' (1944).
- Fugue on a Theme by F. Gersbach (1944).
- Prelude and Fugue, C mi. (1944).
- 28 Preludes (1946).

SONGS

- 5 Songs (Lenau) (1923).
16. 6 Songs (Lenau) (1928).
- 36a. 10 Songs (old German poems) (1933).
- 2 Songs with organ.

Numerous other songs without opus numbers.

K. V. F.

MOFFAT, Alfred (b. Edinburgh, 4 Dec. 1866; d. London, 9 June 1950).

Scottish musical editor and composer. He studied composition for five years in Berlin under Ludwig Bussler and remained there for another five years working for most of the large music-publishing firms. He settled in London about the end of the 1890s, turned his attention to the forgotten British violin composers of the 18th century and earlier, and had a hard fight to get any one to believe there had been a school of English violin composers. In fact it was only after Simrock had published so many of the old English sonatas, arranged by Moffat, that he induced Novello to embark on his 'Old English Violin Music' series, mostly of forgotten works. He arranged much of Purcell's works and others of the old English school of vocal and instrumental music. His 'Meisterschule der alten Zeit' (Simrock) embraces 36 classical violin sonatas, 18 cello sonatas and 22 trio sonatas, and contains many old English works. His 'Kammersonaten' (Schott) contains 30 violin sonatas, brought to light for the first time. His French 18th-century music (Schott) contains 18 numbers and his English 18th-century music (Schott) 24 numbers.

Moffat's arrangements of British music are comprised in 'The Minstrelsy of England', 'The Minstrelsy of Scotland', of Wales, of the Highlands, and a valuable book, 'The Minstrelsy of Ireland', all enriched with historical notes. There are many others of his arrangements of the English and Scottish vocal and instrumental music published in book-form.

In 1925 he was engaged upon a series of books of 'Melodious Scotland'. One of his notable books is 'Songs and Dances of all Nations', edited in conjunction with J. D. Brown. He had a fine and unique library of early violin music (17th-18th centuries), including many rare works.

F. K.

MOGLIE CAPRICCIOSA, LA (Opera).

See GAZZANIGA.

MOGUCHAYA KUCHKA. See FIVE, THE.

MOHAMMEDAN MUSIC. In the Islamic east there is no mosque music in the same sense as the Christian west speaks of church music. Islam is a religion so personal and intimate that it requires no such intermediaries as a priesthood or choir between the individual and God. Yet vocal music, in praise of Allah, has always found a place, both inside and outside the mosque, in the "reading" of the Qur'an, the cantillation of the adhān or "call to prayer" and the religious chants of the people, to say nothing of the music, both vocal and instrumental, which is of such moment to the sūfī and dār-wish fraternities.¹

The Qur'an, being constructed in rhymed prose, almost suggested a chanting (tarannum) when "reading" it from the very first. This "reading", which is called qirā'a in Arabic, was accomplished in modulated tones, but in order to remove any risk of this qirā'a being considered "singing" (ghinā'), the modulated "reading" of the Qur'an was termed ta'bīr, i.e. "interpreting", a proceeding which satisfied the puritans who condemned singing as a worthless pastime, if not a sin. The distinction between them was apparently determined in this wise: if it were a plain and simple melody it was "chanting", whereas that which was decorated and embellished was "singing". In its earliest form it consisted of a dirge-like cantillation (tartīl, muzamzim), but by the year 700 the Christian chant (ruhbāniya) and Arab secular melodies (alḥān) were being used. One of the latter, a secular song called 'The Sand Grouse', is actually mentioned. Thus Islam was no different from Christianity in this respect, since the Romanists later used 'L'Homme armé' or 'The Western Wind' for the Mass and the Protestant reformers had 'John come kiss me now' for the Psalms. Although the prosodic punctuation of the Qur'an had been fixed since the time of Ibn al-Jazari (d. 1429), the actual cantillation was left to individual interpretation, the result being that from Morocco to Turkestan there are as many different melodic versions of this "reading" as there are "readers" (qurrā').

Of a similar character musically is the adhān or "call to prayer". Since the mosque has no clapper or bell to call the faithful to their devotions, as in the eastern and western Christian churches, a public vocal call — the adhān — which nowadays is chanted from the minaret, was instituted during the year 622. Before the 10th century it was, like the preceding qirā'a of the Qur'an, merely a plain-chanting in Egypt; but there, as well as elsewhere, it soon became decorated and was even called by a purely secular name — taṭrīb. In the course of time we find the duties so onerous that the "caller to prayer" (mu'adhdhin) had to be reinforced by others, while within the mosque all these combined in chanting the "second call" known as the iqāma. In Turkey, in the 17th century, there were 700 mu'adhdhins in a professional guild which had Bilāl, the first mu'adhdhin, as their pīr or patron saint. As with the cantillation of the Qur'ān, the adhān is found in many forms, from the plain and unaffected chant — such as that of the Maliki rite — to the highly festooned coloratura as heard in Egypt.¹

¹ See Sūfī and Dār-wish Music.

Yet religious music finds expression even in the social activities of the peoples of Islam, for religion and life are one to them. Hymns (masha'id) abound. The chanting of the Qur'ān, which is taught in the schools, continues to be an edifying accomplishment among the womenfolk and in general is a constant feature of most festivals. On such occasions the chanting of the takbīr, or "confession of faith", dominates in the popular repertory. Indeed, from the very cradle, when the adhān is hummed into the ear of the newly born, as in Mecca, down to the funeral rites, when the sūrat al-an'ām and the burda are chanted, as in Egypt, the religious song is ever with those who say "There is no God but Allah".

H. G. F.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- CHOTTIN, ALEXIS, 'Tableau de la musique marocaine' (Paris, 1939), pp. 107-8, 168-71, 199-210.
 DALMAN, G. H., 'Palastinischer Diwan' (Leipzig, 1901), pp. 360.
 DIETERICI, F., 'Die Propädeutik der Araber' (Berlin, 1865), pp. 101-2.
 'Encyclopaedia of Islam' (Leyden, 1913-38), I, 133-34; II, 1023; III, 373-75; Supp. 81-84.
 ERLANGER, RODOLPHE D., 'Mélodies tunisiennes' (Paris, 1937), p. 7.
 FARMER, HENRY G., 'History of Arabian Music' (London, 1929), Chap. ii.
 LANE, EDWARD, 'Manners and Customs of the Modern Egyptians' (London, 1860), pp. 73, 171, 280, 374-76, 446, 449, 477, 513, 517.
 LAVIGNAC, ALBERT, 'Encyclopédie de la musique' (Paris, 1913-22), pp. 2817-27.
 PARISOT, J., 'Rapport sur une mission scientifique en Turquie d'Asie' (Paris, 1899), pp. 186, 203-4.
 VILLOTEAU, G. A., 'Description de l'Égypte' (Paris, 1809 and on), I, 704-22.

MOHAUPT, Richard (b. Breslau, 14 Sept. 1904).

German conductor and composer. He studied at the University of Breslau and afterwards became successively coach and conductor at several German opera-houses. Later he toured as conductor in Russia. One of his ballets was produced in Berlin in 1936 and the opera 'Die Wirtin von Pinsk' at Dresden on 10 Feb. 1938. But he failed to ingratiate himself with the Nazi rulers and refused to divorce his Jewish-born wife, so that in 1939 he was forced to emigrate. He settled in New York.

Mohaupt's works include another opera (for children), 'Boleslav der Schamhafte'; the ballets 'Die Gaunerstreiche der Courasche' (after Grimmelhhausen) and 'Lysistrata' (after Aristophanes), as well as a ballet for children; a Symphony, a Concerto, 'Drei Episoden' and 'Stadtpfeifermusik' (on Dürer's mural 'Nürnberger Stadtpfeifer') for orchestra; a pianoforte Concerto, a violin Concerto, etc.

E. B.

MOHOON, Joseph. See MAHOON.

MOHR, Ernst (b. Basel, 4 Mar. 1902).

Swiss musicologist. After studying natural science he soon turned entirely to musical scholarship, studying the subject at the Universities of Basel (Karl Nef), Berlin (Abert) and Paris (Pirro). In 1927 he took the Ph.D. degree with a dissertation on the Allemande, important equally for the history of dance and of the suite. In 1928 he became teacher of theory and style history at the Basel Conservatory and in 1931 at the Swiss Orchestral School. In 1947 he was appointed lecturer in musical theory and modern music at the University of Basel. He also lectures at the Volkshochschule there and has become widely known through numerous series of broadcast talks. Since 1946 he has been president of the Swiss Musicological Society; he is also chairman of the Examinations Board of the Schweizerischer Musikpädagogischer Verband and assistant secretary of the I.S.M.

Mohr has done his best work, both verbally and in writing, on behalf of modern music. His most important publications are as follows:

- 'K. Nef und sein Werk' (in 'Festschrift Karl Nef', 1932).
 'Die Allemande: eine Untersuchung ihrer Entwicklung von den Anfängen bis zu Bach und Händel' (Zürich, 1942).
 'Die schweizerischen Orchester' (in 'Schweizerisches Musikbuch', 1939).
 'Das Problem der Form in Schoecks Liederzyklen' (Schweiz. Mus. Ztg., 1943, No. 3).
 'Richard Strauss und die Schweiz' (ibid., 1944, No. 6).
 'Betrachtungen zum Stil W. Burkhardts' (ibid., 1947, No. 1).
 'Das Werk Walter Geisers' ('Musica', 1949).
 'Werk und Persönlichkeit Willy Burkhardts' (Schweiz. Mus. Ztg., 1950, No. 5).

K. V. F.

MOÏSE ('Moses'). Opera in 4 acts by Rossini. Libretto by Giuseppe Luigi Balochi and Victor Joseph Étienne de Jouy, based on the Italian libretto of the original version, 'Mosè in Egitto'. Produced Paris, Opéra, 26 Mar. 1827. 1st perf. in Italy (as 'Mosè nuovo'), Perugia, 4 Feb. 1829. 1st in England, London, Covent Garden Theatre (in Italian, as 'Zora'), 20 Apr. 1850. 1st in U.S.A., New York (in Italian), 7 May 1860.

See also Mosè in Egitto.

¹ For examples of the former, from Algiers, Oran, Laghwat and Tunis, see Lavignac, pp. 2818-20. For the more decorative type see Lavignac, p. 2820; Parisot, 'Une Mission scientifique en Turquie d'Asie', pp. 203-4, from Homs and Damascus; and Villoteau (see Bibl.), pp. 705-6, from Egypt. A good gramophone record is H.M.V., FX 7.

MOISEIVICH (Moiseiwitsch¹), Benno (b. Odessa, 22 Feb. 1890).

British pianist of Russian birth. His early musical education was received at the Imperial Music Academy, Odessa, where he won the Rubinstein prize at the age of nine. Later he went to Vienna to study under Leschetizky, and he exemplifies the teaching of that master by his superb technical equipment and his vivid interpretation of works by composers of the romantic school. He made a successful début in England on 1 Oct. 1908 and settled there during the first world war, becoming a naturalized British subject in 1937.

In 1919 Moiseivich began a series of extended concert tours, which subsequently carried him to nearly every corner of the civilized world. In addition to having played in most of the principal countries of Europe, he made numerous concert tours in the U.S.A. and Canada, Australia and New Zealand, S. Africa, S. America and the Far East, including India, Java, Malay, China and Japan.

His repertory in his early days was large and catholic, and in one season he played as many as twenty different concertos. He was always ready to study new works for first performances, but later his great popularity forced him to restrict his repertory mainly to a small number of favourite works. His playing, however, always distinguished by great fluency and brilliance, gained in depth and maturity.

E. H. R., adds.

See also Kennedy (Daisy, 1st wife).

MOISSONNEURS, LES (Opera). See DUNI.

MOJSISOVICS, Roderich von (b. Graz, 10 May 1877).

Austrian composer. He comes, on his father's side, of an old Hungarian aristocratic family, his mother being German. Both his parents' families had produced numerous artists and scholars. Mojsisovics himself, although from childhood deeply attracted by music, and a student under E. W. Degner at Graz, F. Wullner and O. Klauwell at Cologne and L. Thuille at Munich, decided, for practical reasons, to take his degree as a doctor of law and enter the Civil Service. But he did not persevere in it for more than eight weeks. Then, encouraged by Max Reger, he embraced the career of a musician. In 1903-5 he was conductor of the male choral society at Brno. He then returned to Styria and, after an engagement in the little town of Pettau, was appointed in 1912 head of the Steiermärkischer Musikverein of Graz, a post which he held until 1931. In 1934 he was awarded the Austrian State Prize for music. In 1935 he went to live at Munich.

In his compositions Mojsisovics starts from the "New German School" of Wagner, Liszt, Bruckner and Humperdinck, showing a predilection for bold harmonies. His greatest interest is in comic opera, where he succeeds in creating attractive portraits of characters with all their peculiarities. As a symphonic composer he is inspired by visual impressions, and he claims to be strongly influenced by colours, the tonalities chosen by him corresponding with certain mixtures of colours present in his mind while he is working on a composition.

Mojsisovics is also an editor of old music, such as the ballet 'Die Liebesprobe', attributed to Mozart, which he discovered at Graz.² His compositions include:

OPERAS

- 'Tantchen Rosmarin.'
- 'Messer Ricciardo Minutolo.'
- 'Der Zauberer.'
- 'Die Locke.'
- 'Anno Domini.'
- 'Die roten Dominos.'
- 'Norden in Not.'
- 'Viel Lärm um Nichts' (after Shakespeare).

BALLETS

- 'Phantastisches Tanzspiel.'
 - 'Chorisches Tanzspiel.'
- Also incidental music to several plays.

CHORAL WORKS

- 'Eine Weihnachtsskantilene', cantata.
- 'Totenmesse.'

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 2 Overtures.
- 2 Sereuades.
- 5 Symphonies
 1. In den Alpen.
 2. Eine Barock-Idylle.
 3. Deutschland.
 4. Frühling.
 5. Michelangelo.

CONCERTOS

- 2 for pf.
- 1 for vn.

CHAMBER MUSIC

- 3 String Quartets.
 - 1 String Trio.
 - 2 Violin Sonatas.
 - 1 Viola Sonata.
 - 2 Organ Sonatas.
 - 'Festmusik' for organ & brass.
 - 'Waldphantasie' for 2 pfs.
- Many organ & pf. works.

K. G.

MOKRANJAC, Stevan (b. Negotin, Serbia, 1855; d. Skoplje, 1914).

Yugoslav composer. He studied music at Munich, Leipzig and Rome. Returning from abroad, he became choirmaster and conductor of the Belgrade Singing Society in 1887, a post he held until his death. With that choir Mokranjac gave numerous concerts in Yugoslavia and also made frequent tours abroad, visiting Germany, Austria-Hungary, Russia, Turkey, Greece, etc. In 1889 he founded a string quartet (in which he chose always to play second violin), and in the same year he founded a School of Music in Belgrade, whose director he remained until his death and which still flourishes to-day. In 1896 he set out on an extended "melographic" tour of Macedonia, where he collected many hundreds of national melodies which were later to be the basis of his choral compositions.

¹ This German transliteration of the name was used by him before he settled in England and, having by that time become familiar, was retained by him and his family, including his daughter Tanya, who is a well-known stage designer.

² This is a mere pasticcio. The music consists of a number of Mozart's orchestral dances and some interspersed numbers not to be found among Mozart's works and unquestionably spurious.

The name of Stevan Mokranjac is perhaps the most important in the history of Serbian music. His compositions are, with little exception, all choral works, and they are significant not only for their own beauty and distinction, but also for the profound influence they exercised on all subsequent Serbian composers. Mokranjac was the first to realize the value of the extraordinarily rich and varied folk music of his country and to have the technical skill and understanding to make artistic use of it. His 15 volumes of 'Rukoveti' ('Bouquets') are models of their kind. These 'Rukoveti' are tastefully chosen and contrasted folksongs set for unaccompanied voices and linked together, for consecutive performance, with masterly skill. With deep insight into the type of harmony inherent in Yugoslav folk melody and with a sure touch in realizing his effects chorally, he produced in these 'Rukoveti' a definite art-form far removed from banal "pot-pourris" of tunes.

In addition to the 15 'Rukoveti' Mokranjac wrote a considerable number of original choral compositions, songs for voice and pianoforte and some incidental music. In the sphere of church music his most important works are the Liturgy (published posthumously in London in 1919 with an English text), a Requiem and a manual of Serbian Orthodox Church singing.

K. T.

MOKRUSOV, Boris (b. Nizhny-Novgorod, 27 Feb. 1909).

Russian composer. He was a pupil of Miaskovsky. His first works were a 'Pioneer Suite' for pianoforte, a Suite for brass, a string Quartet, a trombone Concerto, a tone-poem for orchestra and incidental music for a few plays. A 'Song of Stalin' with orchestral accompaniment and an 'Anti-Fascist Symphony' followed. Later he worked at an opera, 'Tchapyayev' (the name of the Soviet general who took the city of Ufa in 1919), the characters in which include Lenin and Stalin.

M. D. C.

Molander, H. See Beckman ('En lyckoriddare', incid. m.).

Molière (Jean-Baptiste Poquelin). See Andriessen (5, 'Tartuffe', incid. m.). Ariadne auf Naxos (Strauss). Assoucy ('Malade imaginaire'). Auric ('Fâcheux', incid. m. & ballet). Ballard Opera ('Mock Doctor'). Ballet. Ballet de Cour. Barrows ('Bourgeois Gentilhomme', incid. m.). Bartók (F., 2, do.). Bizet ('Amour peintre', opera). Burghauser ('Lakmeec' ['L'Avare'], opera). Capdevielle (suite 'Molière' for orch.). Charpentier (M. A., 'Mariage forcé' & 'Malade imaginaire'). Cohen (J., 'Psyché', incid. m.). David (K. H., 'Sizilianer', opera). Demuth ('Misanthrope', incid. m.). Desauviers ('Médecin malgré lui', opera). Dibdin (1, 'Dr. Ballardo', play with music; Garrick, 'Metamorphoses'). Dutilleux (incid. m. for plays). Ec le (2, 'Metamorphosis' [Corey], incid. m.). Farmer (T., m. for 2 plays). Fiorillo (I., 'M. de Pourceaugnac', intermezzo). Franchetti ('Signor di Pourceaugnac', opera). Galuppi ('Virtuose ridicole' & 'Alcimenà', operas). Gluck ('Don Juan', ballet). Gounod ('Médecin malgré lui', opera; 'Bourgeois G.' & 'George Dandin', incid. m.). Grétry ('Amphitryon', opera). Hart (F., 'Forced Marriage', opera). Hasse (2 intermezzi). Haug ('Tartuffe' & 'Malade imaginaire', operas). Herberigs ('Amour médecin', do.). Jolivet (incid. m. for 2 plays). Joncières ('Sicilien', opera). Kosa ('Tartuffe', do.). Kraus (J. M., 'Amphitryon', incid. m.). Lattuada ('Prezioso ridicole', opera). Laverne ('Princesse d'Élide', do.). Listov ('Bourgeois G.', incid. m.). Lully (m. for 12 stage works). Matassins (use in 'M. de Pourceaugnac'). Mathieu ('George Dandin', opera). Milhaud ('Médecin volant', incid. m.; 'Apothéose de M.', harpsichord & stgs.). Napoli ('Malato immaginario', opera). Obousier ('Amphitryon', opera). Ollone ('George Dandin', opera). Poise ('Amour médecin' & 'Médecin malgré lui', operas). Purcell (4, 'Female Virtuosos', incid. m.). Rieti ('École des femmes', incid. m.). Roger-Ducasse (Madrigal for chorus). Rózik (L., 'Malade imaginaire', incid. m.). Saint-Saëns (Madrigal for chorus). Sautet (incid. m. for 5 plays). Sauzey ('George Dandin' & 'Sicilien', incid. m.). Schulhoff (E., 'Bourgeois G.', do.). Shaporn ('Tartuffe', do.). Skerjanc (incid. m. for plays). Snel ('Pourceaugnac', ballet). Strauss (R., 'Burger als Edelmann' ['Ariadne auf Naxos']). Szymanowski ('Mandradora', ballet). Veretti ('Medico volante', opera). Wolf-Ferrari ('Amore medico', opera). Wolfurt ('Tanz um den Narren', opera). Zich (O., 'Précieuses ridicules', opera).

BIBL.—CASTIL-BLAZE, F. H. J., 'Molière musicien' (Paris, 1852).

OLIVER, A. RICHARD, 'Molière's Contribution to the Lyric Stage' (M.Q., XXXIII, 1947, p. 350).

Molina, Gabriel Tirso de. See Tirso de Molina.

MOLINARA, LA. Opera by Paisiello (lib. by Giovanni Palomba), prod. Naples, Teatro Fiorentino, summer 1788, under the original title of 'L' amor contrastato'; first performance abroad, Madrid, 16 May 1789; first in England, London, Pantheon, 21 May 1791.

The opera became better known as 'La molinara' or 'La molinarella', and in German as 'Die schöne Müllerin'.

Beethoven used two airs from 'La molinara' for pianoforte variations, 'Quant' è più bello' and 'Nel cor più non mi sento' (both 1796). The song, 'Hope told a flattering tale', adapted from the latter, became, near the close of the 18th century, one of the most favourite English sentimental songs. It was introduced by Mara in a revival of Arne's 'Artaxerxes' and was republished in all imaginable forms.

A. L. & F. K.

MOLINARI, Bernardino (b. Rome, 11 Apr. 1880; d. Rome, 25 Dec. 1952).

Italian conductor. He studied with Renzi and Falchi at the Liceo di Santa Cecilia of his native city. After gaining valuable experience elsewhere he was appointed in 1912 artistic director and conductor of the Austegeo concerts in Rome.

Molinari conducted in most of the important musical centres in Europe and America. He was also the author of several transcriptions, including one of Carissimi's oratorio 'Jonah' and one of Monteverdi's 'Sonata sopra Sancta Maria'.

F. B.

BIBL.—MUCCI, E., 'Bernardino Molinari' (Lanciano, 1941).

MOLINARO, Simone (b. Genoa, c. 1565; d. ?).

Italian composer. He was taught music by his uncle, G.-B. della Gostena, whom he succeeded in 1605 as maestro di cappella of Genoa Cathedral. His fame as a musician must have been considerable, for his motets, sacred concertos, madrigals and canzonets were first published at places as far apart as Venice, Milan and Genoa, and selections were republished at Copenhagen, Nuremberg and Speyer. A fine book of lute music was published at Venice in 1599; a complete modern edition has been made by Gullino (Florence, 1940). Molinaro's music is simple and fluent, and he makes little use of elaborate counterpoint. Some of his lute music contains extravagant modulations of the kind which Gesualdo later found so irresistible; a link between the two composers is provided by Molinaro's edition of Gesualdo's six books of 5-part madrigals in score (1613). This is the last of Molinaro's musical activities.

R. T. D.

BIBL.—DART, THURSTON, 'Simone Molinaro's Lute-Book of 1599' (M. & L., XXVIII, 1947, p. 258).

See also Gesualdo.

Moline, Pierre Louis. See Gluck (2 libs.). Orphée (Gluck, lib.).

Molino, Antonio. See Gabrieli (A., greghesche)

MOLIQUE, (Wilhelm) Bernhard (b. Nuremberg, 7 Oct. 1802; d. Cannstadt nr. Stuttgart, 10 May 1869).

German violinist and composer. His father, a member of the Nuremberg town band, at first taught him several instruments, but he soon made the violin his special study. Spohr¹ relates that while staying at Nuremberg, in 1815, he gave some lessons to the boy, who already possessed remarkable proficiency on the instrument. Molique afterwards went to Munich and studied for two years under Rovelli. After having lived for some time in Vienna, as member of the orchestra of the Theater an der Wien, he returned in 1820 to Munich and succeeded his master Rovelli as leader of the orchestra. From Munich he made several tours through Germany and soon established his reputation as an eminent virtuoso and a solid musician. In 1826 he accepted the post of leader of the royal orchestra at Stuttgart, where he remained till 1849. In that year he went to England, where he spent the remaining part of his professional life.

¹ Autobiography, I, 228.

The sterling qualities of Molique as a player and his sound musicianship soon procured him an honourable position in the musical world of London. His first appearance at the Philharmonic was on 14 May 1840, when he played his own A minor Concerto. With the general public he was equally successful as a soloist, quartet player and teacher, while the serious character and the fine workmanship of his compositions raised him high in the estimation of connoisseurs and musicians. His oratorio 'Abraham' was performed at the Norwich Festival of 1860. He gave a farewell concert in London at St. James's Hall, on 3 May 1866, and five days later he retired to Cannstadt.

As an executant Molique showed a rare perfection of left-hand technique, but his bowing appears to have been somewhat wanting in breadth and freedom. His style of playing was usually very quiet, perhaps deficient in animation. In his compositions the influence of Spohr is evident, not only in the character of most of his subjects, but also in his manner of treating and working them out; yet some of his works — especially the first two movements of his third Concerto, in D minor, and of the fifth, in A minor — are fine compositions. His other works, though evincing the same technical mastery, are very inferior in interest to these concertos — they bear hardly any traces of inspiration and had no great or lasting success.

Molique's principal published works, apart from 'Abraham', are the following:

- 2 Masses.
- Symphony.
- 6 Violin Concertos.
- 8 String Quartets.
- 2 Trios for vn., cello & pf.
- Duos for 2 vns.
- Duos for flute & vn.

P. D.

BIBL.—SCHRODER, FRITZ, 'Bernhard Molique und seine Instrumentalkompositionen' (Stuttgart, 1923), with a catalogue, partly thematic.

See also Regondi (concerto for concertina).

MOLL (Ger.). Minor, in the sense of tonality, as Dur is major.

MOLLE, Henry (b. ?; d. ?).

English 17th-century composer. He went to King's College, Cambridge, and was Public Orator to that University while Cosin was Master of Peterhouse (1635-40). His English Litany was "made for Cosin". One of the madrigals in Thomas Tomkins's 'Songs' of 1622 is dedicated to Mollé. In the Tudway Collection (B.M. Harl. MSS 7337-42) are 2 Evening Services by Molle: the first, in D major, written in 1636, and the second in F major, dated 1639 and " . . . commonly called Molle's 2nd Service". In P.H. are the following compositions by him:

Latin T.D. and L., English L., M. and N.D., Second M. and N.D. a 4, and an anthem, 'Great and marvellous'.

The words also of another anthem by him are given in Clifford's 'Collection' (1663).

J. M. (ii).

MOLLENHAUER, Edward (b. ?; d. ?).

American 19th-century violinist. He was established in New York in the latter half of the century and introduced an "improvement" in violin construction which was patented in England (1881, No. 621).

The invention consists in placing a board between the sounding-board and the back of the instrument, and parallel to these two boards, so as to divide the interior into two compartments. This intermediate board is provided with sound-holes and a bass bar.

This contrivance was considered of sufficient importance by Count Luigi Francesco Valdrighi to form the subject of No. 9 of his 'Musurgiana' under the title 'Strumenti ad arco rinforzati' (Modena, 1881). E. H.-A.

MOLLER, Joachim. See BURCK, JOACHIM Å.

MÖLLER, Johann (b. ?; d. ?).

German 16th-17th-century organist and composer. He was town and court organist at Darmstadt. Among his compositions are German motets for 5-8 voices (1611), a 6-part 'Vater unser', 2 books of pavans, galliards, etc., for 5 instruments (1610 and 1612), etc.

E. V. d. S.

MOLLER VON BURCK, Joachim. See BURCK.

MOLNÁR, Antal (b. Budapest, 7 Jan. 1890).

Hungarian critic, musicologist, violist and composer. He studied composition with Viktor Herzfeld at the Academy of Music, Budapest, and gained the Haynald Prize for his 'Missa brevis' in 1910. He made a few folk-music collecting expeditions before he joined the Waldbauer String Quartet, of which he was violist from 1910 to 1913 and with which he took part in the first performance in Budapest of Debussy's string Quartet, attended by the composer. He was also violist of the Dohnányi-Hubay Pianoforte Quartet for two years (1915-17). Having taught composition, history and solfège at the Municipal School of Music from 1912 to 1918, he was appointed to the Academy of Music in the spring of 1919, and there he has been teaching theory and harmony ever since. In 1914 he was awarded the Franz Joseph Prize for Composition and in 1938 the literary Baumgarten Prize for his 'Musical Aesthetics', then in preparation. From 1933 to 1940 he edited the series 'Népszerű Zenefüzetek' ('Popular Musical Pamphlets'), which included Bartók's 'Hungarian Folk Music and Folk Music of Neighbouring Peoples' and Szabolcsi's 'Short Summary of the History of Hungarian Music'. For a time he was deputy president of the Hungarian Association of Musicians re-established in 1946.

A sincere poetic feeling and discriminating taste are revealed in Molnár's music: its sensitive lyricism and emotional restraint are nourished by romantic traditions. His conservative disposition is shown especially in the constructive elements of his idiom and his respect for tradition is particularly evident in the purity and balanced proportions of his designs. Save for various arrangements of folk tunes, folksong has not appreciably influenced his style, although he took part in the earlier collecting expeditions; yet in some of his compositions he resorted to the representative Hungarian instrumental idiom of the 19th century (i.e. verbunkos music), regarding it rather as an unconventional flavour than a determining factor of his personal style.

His original approach to instrumental and vocal colour is displayed in the 'Kuruc muzsika', which combines four tárogatós with a chamber orchestra, and in the trio for women's voices, 'The Danaides', which is among his best compositions. His 'Suite for Double String Orchestra' and his string quartets — of which the third was first performed by the Waldbauer Quartet at a broadcast concert of the B.B.C. on 5 Oct. 1926 — demonstrate his technical and expressive powers applied to symphonic designs. That he is essentially a miniaturist is shown by his music for voice or voices with or without accompaniment. Purity of style and clarity of texture are the main characteristics of his choral music; his lyrical gifts are shown most convincingly in his songs. He turned chiefly to the Hungarian avant-garde poets for words: compared with his instrumental music these settings are far more enterprising in the use of new expressive resources.

Molnár's literary contributions are regarded as considerably more important than his music: his writings have provided enlightenment to the entire Hungarian musical public in recent times, amateurs and professionals alike. He has applied the principles of a European outlook to the various aspects of musical life in Hungary, but although he is an exceptionally prolific writer, he has rarely contributed to the daily press. There is hardly an aspect in the whole field of music which he did not enrich with his penetrating critical insight, true knowledge and awareness of cultural values. He was among the first to perceive the greatness of Bartók and Kodály and their extraordinary significance both to Hungarian and to European music. His attention has not been confined to Hungary: his assessment of Schoenberg or Stravinsky, for example, and of the new developments in European music show extraordinary understanding and have proved to be surprisingly accurate in the light of later developments.

The list of Molnár's compositions and writings given below is not exhaustive. Most of the former have remained in manuscripts, of which many are kept in various music libraries and some are in private possession.¹

BIBL.—CALVOCORFESSI, M. D., 'Hungarian Music of To-day', (M.M.R. Feb. 1922).

WEISSMANN, JOHN S., 'The Contemporary Movement in Hungary' ('Music To-day', London, 1949).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

'Sávitri', a legend, by Árpád Pásztor, prod. Pozsony, 27 Feb. 1913.

CHURCH MUSIC

'Missa brevis' No. 1 for chorus & organ (1909).

'Missa Brevis' No. 2 for soprano, tenor & organ.

'Stabat Mater' for unaccomp. chorus (? 1930).

Psalm XXII for unaccomp. chorus (? 1931).

Psalm LI for unaccomp. chorus (1931).

'Kyrie' for chorus & organ.

Psalm LXXXIV for 2 voices, horn & harp (? 1935).

CHORAL WORKS

'Gyermekek' 10 children's chorus Op. 2.

Hungarian Songs for women's voices ('1928).

'Magyar népdalfantázia' ('Hungarian Folksong Fantasy') for men's chorus (1932).

Psalm I for double chorus (1934).

'Prophetus' (Endre Ady) for unaccomp. chorus (1937).

'Fonséges éj' ('Majestic Night') (Sándor Petőfi) for women's chorus.

Also various folksong arrangements.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

'Marche grotesque', Op. 11.

Hungarian Dances for small orch., Op. 18 (? 1917).

Variations on a Hungarian Theme (1927).

Suite for double stg. orch. (1928).

Hungarian Comedy Overture (1931).

'Tavaszkeringő' ('Spring Waltz').

Fantasy 'Napkeleti monda' ('Oriental Fable') for small orch.

'Budapest' Overture.

'Operett Zene' ('Operetta Music').

Suite 'Volt egyszer egy király...' ('Fairytale').

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

Cello Concerto, Op. 12.

'Kuruc Music' for 4 tárogatós & chamber orch. (1936).

VOICES AND ORCHESTRA

'A danaidák' ('The Danaides') (Mihály Babits) for 3 women's voices (1926).

'Ora satanica', cantata (Gabriele d'Annunzio) for bass & chamber orch. (? 1935).

CHAMBER MUSIC

String Trio, A mi. (1910).

'Sérénade' for clar., vn. & harp (1911).

Quartet for flute, vn., viola & cello, Op. 1 (1912).

Pf. Trio No. 1, F ma., Op. 14 (? 1913).

String Quartet No. 1, A mi. (? 1913).

Wind Quintet, Op. 16 (? 1916).

String Quartet No. 2, G mi., Op. 17 (? 1917).

String Quartet No. 3, F# mi. ('Quartetto breve') (? 1926).

'Romantic Elegy' (pf. Trio No. 2) (? 1926).

'Turmmusik' for 6 horns (1926).

'La caccia' for 5 horns (1929).

Duo, G ma., for 2 vns. (? 1930).

'Three Characteristic Pieces and Scherzo' for pf. 4tet (? 1931).

2 Pieces for pf. 5tet (? 1931)

1. Chanson triste.

2. Light and Shadow.

'Székely ballada és tánc' ('Transylvanian Ballad and Dance', pf. Trio No. 3) (? 1932).

'Véletlen szerenád' ('Accidental Serenade'), humorous for flute, viola & bassoon (? 1936).

Variations for String Quartet

1. Popular Variations.

2. Variations on a Theme by Grétry.

Fugue on a Theme by Albinoni for stg. 4tet.

'Suite caractéristique' for pf. 5tet.

'Serenatina' for 2 vns.

'Partita e preghiera' for 8 horns.

Also numerous pieces for one instrument (vn., viola, cello, flute, oboe, clar., trumpet, trombone) & pf.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

'Deux Impromptus', Op. 9 (? 1919).

'Tristia' (? 1927).

'Naplójegyzetek' ('Diary Notes') (? 1935).

Suite 'Kis barátainknak' ('For My Little Friends')

(? 1939).

Three Sonatinas: A mi., C ma. & D mi. (1944).

'Danse héroïque.'

'Melodies.'

'Három groteszk induló' ('Three Grotesque Marches') for 2 pls.

'Zongoraiskola', pf. tutor, with György Kálmán and Irene Senn (1927-31).

ORGAN MUSIC

2 Chorale Preludes (? 1932).

'Intermezzo.'

Also c. 100 songs, mostly settings of Hungarian poems.

LITERARY WORKS

'Neu-ungarische Musik' ('Jung-Ungarn', Berlin, Dec. 1911).

'Zene és közönség' ('Music and Audience') (Sopron, 1912).

'Bartók quartettje' ('Bartók's Quartet') ('Nyugat', Vol. V, Budapest, 1912).

'Nemzeti zene' ('National Music') ('Zenekozlony', Budapest, 1912-15).

'A zenetörténet szelleme' ('The Spirit of Musical History') (Budapest, 1914).

'Magyar kontrapunkt' ('Hungarian Counterpoint') ('Zenei Szemle', Vol. I, Temesvár, 1917).

'Az európai zene a haborus előtt' ('European Music before the War') (Budapest, 1918).

'Bartók operája: A kékszakállú herceg vára' ('Bartók's Opera "Bluebeard's Castle"') (Budapest-Temesvár, 1918).

'Az európai zene története 1750-ig' ('History of European Music until 1750') (Budapest, 1920).

'Magyar Zenekultúra' ('Hungarian Musical Culture') ('Aurora', Budapest, 1920).

'Bartók és a kultúrtörténet' ('Bartók and the History of Culture') ('Magyar Írás', Vol. I, No. 2, Budapest, May 1921).

'Der grosse Takt' (Z.M.W., 1921).

'A zeneművészet könyve' ('Book of Musical Art') (Budapest, 1922).

'A zenetörténet szociológiája' ('Sociology of Musical History') (Budapest, 1923).

'Die Musik Ungarns' ('National Zeitung, Nummer "Ungarn"', Basel, 1925).

'Az új zene' ('The New Music') (Budapest, 1926).

'Az új magyar zene' ('The New Hungarian Music') (Budapest, 1926).

'A zenei ritmus alapszorgalmi' ('Rudiments of Musical Rhythm') (Budapest, 1927).

'Bevezetés a zenekultúrába' ('Introduction to Musical Culture') (Budapest, 1927).

'A zeneesztétika feladatai' ('Tasks of Musical Aesthetics') (Budapest, 1927).

'Esquisse d'un portrait de Liszt' (Rev. Mus., 1928).

'Jazzband' (Budapest, 1928).

'Zenepedagógiai kultúra' ('Culture of Musical Pedagogy') (Budapest, 1928).

'Az egyházi zene története rövid összefoglalásban' ('Short Summary of the History of Church Music') (Budapest, 1928).

'Bevezetés a mai muzsikába' ('Introduction to Contemporary Music') (Budapest, 1929).

'Fizika és Muzsika' ('Physics and Music') (Budapest, 1929).

'Összhangtattan' (Textbook of Harmony) (Budapest, 1931).

'Die Bedeutung der neuen osteuropäischen Musik' ('Archiv für die gesamte Psychologie', Vol. LXXXI, 1-2, Leipzig, 1931).

¹ For further information regarding his writings up to 1939 and his compositions, the reader is referred to the bibliographical sketch ('Beszámoló...') compiled by himself (see Catalogue).

- 'A gyermek és a zene' ('The Child and Music') (Budapest, 1933).
 'A zenetörténet megvilágítása' ('Light on Musical History') (Budapest, 1933).
 'Zenecsztétika és szellemtudomány' ('Musical Aesthetics and "Geisteswissenschaft"') (Budapest, 1935).
 'Tíz év zenei könyvtérme' ('Ten Years' Musical Literature'), a bibliography (Budapest, 1934).
 'Az óvodáskorú gyermek zenei nevelése' ('Musical Education in the Nursery School') (Budapest, 1936).
 'Liszt Ferenc alkotásai az esztétika tükrében' ('Franz Liszt's Creations in the Light of Aesthetics') (Budapest, 1936).
 'Kodály Zoltán' (Budapest, 1936).
 'A ma zenéje' ('Music To-day') (Budapest, 1937).
 'Magyar-e a cigányzene?' ('Is Gypsy Music Hungarian?') (Budapest, 1937).
 'Zenecsztétika, I: Általános rész' ('Musical Aesthetics, I: General Section') (Budapest, 1938).
 'Beszámoló Molnár Antal műveiről . . . ' ('Account of the Works of Antal Molnár') (Budapest, 1939).
 'Népszerű zenecsztétika' ('Popular Musical Aesthetics') (Budapest, 1940).
 'Bartók zenekara' ('Bartók's Orchestra') ('A Zene', Vol. XXII, 11, Budapest, 15 Apr. 1941).
 'Bartók művészetéről' ('On Bartók's Art') ('Magyar Zenei Szemle', Vol. I, 3, Budapest, Apr. 1941).
 'A zene és az élet' ('Music and Life') (Budapest, 1946).
 'Adalekok Bartók Béla életrajzához' ('Contributions to a Biography of Béla Bartók') ('Zenei Szemle', new series I, Budapest, 1947).
 'Bartók művésze' ('Bartók's Art') (Budapest, 1948).
 'Az új muzika szelleme' ('The Spirit of the New Music') (Budapest, 1948).

Molnár, Ferenc. See Hughes ("S.", J. S. W., radio m.).

MOLNÁR, Imre (b. Péterréve, 28 Oct. 1888).

Hungarian baritone singer, critic, professor of singing and writer on music. He took a teacher's diploma and was schoolmaster in Budapest, whence he was transferred to Stubnya and later to Munács (now Munkács, Czechoslovakia). He studied singing with Ödön Farkas, obtained a doctor's degree at the University of Sciences, Budapest, with the thesis 'A cenzúra története Magyarországon 1600-ig' ('History of Censorship in Hungary until 1600', Budapest, 1912). From 1919 to 1943 he was music critic to the Budapest daily 'Magyarság'; from 1921 he taught singing at the National Conservatory, where he was also librarian for a time. Since 1928 he has taken classes in singing also at the Academy of Music, and he was appointed Professor Ordinarius there in 1933. He has shown keen interest in the problems of beautiful and correct speech and organized a course of speech-technique for the actors of the National Theatre and for broadcasters. In 1943 he assisted at the clinics of the Throat Hospital. He was for a period a member of the Hungarian Radio's music council.

Molnár's voice, though not conspicuously powerful, is extremely flexible, and his voice production, allied to a clear pronunciation, is impeccable. He has given recitals frequently with old Hungarian music and folksongs as the mainstay of his programmes. He made some valuable contributions to Hungarian songs and folk music; these appeared in print and have been the subject of many lectures. He often takes part in the meetings of the Hungarian Ethnographical Society, mainly as a performer of folksongs. He has a valuable collection of old Hungarian music and rare Hungarian books on music; his collection of Hungarian songs (running to some 30,000 items) includes both folk and art tunes which are classified in an ingenious alphabetical order both in regard to their text and their music. He edited 'A Magyar Muzsika Könyve' ('Hungarian Music Book', Budapest, 1936), an informative collection of historical essays and bio-bibliographical entries concerning Hungarian music and musicians.

His publications further include:

- 'Daloskert' ('Garden of Songs') in collab. with Aurél Kern (Budapest, 1927), an anthology of old Hungarian songs with explanatory appendices.
 'Játékokszög' ('Toy-Land') in collab. with László Lajtha (Budapest, 1929), a collection of children's games and nursery rhymes.
 'Eufonetika' ('Euphonics') ('Kis Akadémia Könyvtára', 51, Budapest, 1942), "a treatise on beautiful speech and singing-voice".
 'Beszéd, ének, - magyar beszéd, magyar ének' ('Speech, Song—Hungarian Speech, Hungarian Song') (Budapest, 1942).

J. S. W.

MOLOCH (Opera). See SCHILLINGS.

MOLTENI, Benedetta Emilia (b. Modena, 1722; d. ?, c. 1780).

Italian soprano singer. Nothing is known of her career in Italy. She was in Berlin in 1742 and was appointed to the court of Frederick II ("the Great") of Prussia, to which she remained attached until 1774. In 1751 she married J. F. Agricola. E. B.

MOLTER, Johann Melchior (b. ?; d. Durlach, 12 Jan. 1765).

German composer. He was in service at the court of the Margrave of Baden at Durlach before 1719, when he was sent on a two years' leave to Italy (Venice and Rome). On his return he succeeded Johann Philipp Käfer as court conductor. In 1733 he went to Eisenach as church-music director, but he returned to Durlach in 1743, to occupy his former post till his death.

Molter was a prolific composer. His instrumental works comprise 169 symphonies, 95 concertos and concertini, 14 overtures, 66 sonatas for various instruments, etc., preserved in manuscript in the State Library at Karlsruhe, where are also 14 cantatas. A Passion in manuscript is in the Sondershausen Library. To these must be added three works for the stage: a Musikalisches Drama (no title known) performed at Eisenach in 1730; a similar work, 'Die . . . drei Hauptstände', given there in 1740; and a dramma per musica (in German) the undated score of which is preserved at Karlsruhe, probably belonging to his second term of service in Baden. Two clarinet concertos of not later than 1740 are more or less contemporary with Vivaldi's, but demand a far higher standard of technique.

A. L., adds.

BIBL. — BÖHME, E. W., 'Die frühdeutsche Oper in Thüringen' (Stadtröda, 1931).

SCHIEDERMAIR, L., 'Die Oper an den badischen Hofen' (Quarterly Magazine of the I.M.S., Year XIV, 1913).

Mombelli, Vincenzino Vigano. See Rossini ('Demetrio e Polibio', lib.).

Mombert, A. See Berg (Alban, songs). Knab (songs). Siegl (partsongs). Szymanowski (song). Vycpálek (5 songs).

Mommsen, Theodor. See Křenek ('Fiedellieder', songs).

MOMPELLIO, Federico (b. Genoa, 9 Sept. 1908).

Italian musicologist. He studied the piano-forte and composition, taking a diploma at Parma in 1928, and is a laureate in letters (University of Genoa, 1932). He was lecturer in musical history and chief librarian at the Conservatory of Palermo (1933), at that of Parma (1934-38) and held the latter post at the Milan Conservatory from 1938 and the former in addition from 1950. Among his published works may be named 'Pietro Vinci: madrigalista siciliano' (1937), 'Il Regio Conservatorio di Musica di Milano' (1941) and a new annotated edition of Conestabile's 'Vita di N. Paganini' (1936). He published a modern edition of the 'Primo libro di madrigali a 5 voci' by Sigismondo d'India and is also the composer of vocal, symphonic and chamber-music works.

G. M. G.

MOMPOU, Federico (b. Barcelona, 16 Apr. 1893).

Spanish composer. In his early years he studied under F. Motte Lacroix, but was mainly self-taught. His first attempts date from 1909 and his first work was 'Impresiones intimas' (1911-14). He created his own individual style of music, breaking away from bar divisions, key signatures and cadences, and he described his music by the term primitivista. It is significant that he should have evolved this style in Catalonia, whose musicians are full of the quaint simplicities of the 15th century, which so strongly appeal to modern taste. Mompou's ideal is to return to the Catalan primitives, but the journey must pass by way of our civilization of to-day. There is thus always a piquant contrast between modern harmonies and rhythms and traditional themes in his music. Few modern composers aim at simpler means of expression than this subtle Catalan tone-poet, of whom a French critic once said that some of his music could be dictated in words without making use of any conventional music-writing method.

It was Paris that first recognized Mompou's genius, and French critics praised his music for its exquisite subtlety and delicate line of melody. At a recital he gave in Paris in 1921 under the auspices of the 'Revue Musicale', at which he played his 'Canço i danço', 'Canto magics' and 'Suburbis', each little impressionist tone-poem created a concentrated picture which not only conjured up the vivid life of to-day but also suggested here and there the past, thus giving a gentle underlying note of retrospective melancholy. This power of condensation reminds one of the little Christmas plays written by Thornton Wilder as examples of concise dramatic technique.

Mompou musically follows the Latin racial tradition by these impressionist musical sketches, but there are also certain qualities in his work which suggest English music of the golden age of the Elizabethan virginalists. We are also irresistibly reminded of Galuppi, whose toccatas inspired Browning. Mompou has rightly been called the "poet of the piano-forte" — a title which had in the past been applied to both Chopin and Schumann, and which so fitly describes the austere, concentrated and yet essentially lyrical music of this Mediterranean composer. "Poet of the pianoforte" was the title applied by Émile Vuillermoz to Mompou in those far-off days in Paris at the end of the first world war, and the celebrated French critic added:

This young Spaniard, who works silently in his country retreat, is a magician. He searches in music for enchantments and spells wherewith to compound his magic songs. His formulas are short, concise, concentrated, but they possess a weird, hallucinating power of evocation. If an artist possessed of such magic power had lived in the middle ages, he would have been burnt at the stake, for no matter how minutely we analyse Mompou's score, we cannot discover his secrets. This music which is so gentle and peaceful, reaches out to unexplored regions of the subconscious.

'Canto magics', 'Festes llunyanes' and indeed any of these early works by Mompou, when we hear them to-day, evoke straightway those dreamy indefinite days that followed the stern war years. They suggest the lovely lines of Enoch Soames:

Pale tunes irresolute, and tracteries of old sounds, blown from a rotten flute, mingle with noise of cymbals rouged with rust.

Thinking of the music of Mompou it is impossible not to recall Debussy, who had written:

I am sure that music up to now has been based upon false principles, for it has been composed for paper rather than for the ear. And composers torture their own minds in their reach for musical themes, instead of looking for them in the world around them.

Debussy paints nature coldly and objectively as if he were making a Japanese etching in the Hokusai style. This description of Debussy given by Constant Lambert might apply particularly to Mompou, whose music, too, may be described in the words Sir Thomas Browne wrote on the divinity of music:

for even that vulgar and tavern-music, which makes one man merry, another mad, strikes in me a deep fit of devotion, and a profound contemplation of the First Composer. There is something in it of divinity more than the ear discovers.

And Mompou's music is, as Sir Thomas

Browne adds, a kind of hieroglyphical and shadowed lesson in the world.¹ It is art in miniature and comes as a pleasing relief in an age when we have grown weary of the immense and the gigantic and long to see the universe reflected in a single drop of water.

Mompou is abnormally shy and shuns the world like the plague; he always gives the impression of being engaged on a secret quest. For this reason he lives apart from the world, and only occasionally emerges from his retreat to play in the drawing-room of some painter, sculptor or writer where he knows he will be surrounded by true aficionados. It was the critic Adolfo Salazar who was the first to proclaim his genius in 'El Sol', the Madrid daily paper, on 18 June 1921, saying that his style resembled the most slender of Debussy's preludes, though technically he was nearer to Satie; but this did not take away from the intensely individual manner in which he expressed himself musically.

Mompou's music is a reaction against a mechanized world, for he lives a cloistered life dreaming of the quaint, primitive, sunlit world that we discover in the ancient miniatures of the 14th and 15th centuries or in the chronicles describing the lives of Pedro the Ceremonious or Martin the Humane among their Aragonese and Catalan subjects. The little scenes he evokes on the pianoforte are set sometimes in cloisters and at other times in profane gardens thronged with fair maidens. Very often his miniatures consist of fragmentary dialogues, as for instance the delightful dialogue between the Fountain and the Church Bell. He was elected a member of the Royal Academy of St. George, Barcelona. In 1946 he was awarded the first National Music Prize.

In later years, in addition to pianoforte works, Mompou wrote beautiful songs for Mercedes Plantada, the well-known Catalan singer. In his 'Canciones y danzas' he deliberately harmonized popular and folk tunes of his native province, but no sooner does he pick up the popular tune than his musical daemon takes charge of it, transmogrifies it, illuminates it and finally turns it by subtle magic into an entirely original tune. In this sense Mompou is a genuinely Spanish composer like Falla, Turina or Esplá. Like them he is so steeped in the folk music of his region that when he creates original melodies they seem to have been breathed in his ear by the ghosts of his musical ancestors. w. s.

BIBL.—KASTNER, SANTIAGO, 'Federico Mompou' (Madrid, 1947).

MONASTERO Y AGUEROS, Jesús
(b. Potes, Prov. of Santander, 21 Mar. 1836;
d. Potes, 28 Sept. 1903).

¹ 'Religio Medici' (1642).

Spanish violinist and composer. He very early showed a strong inclination towards music and enjoyed royal patronage from the age of seven years. He was taught by the best masters in Madrid and for a time followed the career of a prodigy; but the death of his father compelled him to return to his home, and through the influence of a wealthy amateur he was sent to Brussels to study with Bériot. There he remained at the Conservatoire from 1849 to 1852, when he returned home and played in Madrid with great success. In 1861 he appeared in Belgium, Holland and Germany as a finished performer. His success in these countries and in France was remarkable; at Weimar he was offered the post of court Kapellmeister, but he preferred to return to his native country, and in a short time he was appointed violin professor at the Madrid Conservatory. His quartet playing was of remarkable excellence, and he introduced the works of the classical masters to the musical amateurs of Spain. He wrote many successful works for his instrument, as well as two ecclesiastical compositions without accompaniment.

J. A. F.-M.

MONCAYO, Pablo (b. Guadalajara, 29 June 1912).

Mexican composer. He studied with Chávez and from the first adopted a nationalist style of composition, using native elements in a percussive, neo-classical manner. In 1935, jointly with Ayala, Contreras and Galindo, he formed a Grupo de los Cuatro, designed to promote new Mexican music. He writes mostly in small forms; among his works are 'Amatzinac' for flute and strings (1935), Sonatina for violin and pianoforte (1936) and 'Huapango' for orchestra (1941). He also wrote a one-act opera, 'La mulata de Córdoba', which was performed in Mexico City on 23 Oct. 1948. n. s.

MONCKTON, Lionel (b. London, 18 Dec. 1861; d. London, 15 Feb. 1924).

English composer. He was the eldest son of Sir John Monckton, Town Clerk of the City of London. He was educated at Charterhouse School and at Oxford, and was a prominent amateur actor at Oxford, where he was associated with the Philo-Thespian Club and the O.U.D.S. His first compositions were heard in public at the Gaiety and other theatres under George Edwardes. He was sole composer of 'The Quaker Girl' (1910), 'The Dancing Mistress' (1912), 'The Cingalee' and 'The Country Girl'. He also contributed many popular songs to operettas by other composers.

A. W. F.

See also Caryll (collab. in 'Our Miss Gibbs').

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS
("POPS"). See POPULAR CONCERTS. ST. JAMES'S HALL.

MONDO ALLA ROVERSA, IL (Opera).

See GOLDONI.

MONDO DELLA LUNA, IL (Opera). See GOLDONI.MONDONVILLE, Jean de (b. Narbonne, 15 Apr. 1716; d. ?).

French composer. To distinguish him from his elder and more famous brother he was called 'Mondonville le jeune' or 'le cadet'. He was Ordinaire de la Musique du Roi and composed a set of sonatas (1767). He is lost sight of after 1769.

M. P.

MONDONVILLE, (Jean) Joseph (Cassanéa) de (b. Narbonne, [bapt. 25] Dec. 1711; d. Belleville nr. Paris, 8 Oct. 1772).

French violinist and composer, brother of the preceding. He was a son of well-born but poor parents.¹ His taste for music showed itself early, and he acquired considerable powers of execution as a violinist. He was in Paris in 1733 and from there went to Lille, where he was well received, and still more so at the Concert Spirituel in Paris in 1737. He had returned to Paris in 1734, and he achieved success as a violinist and composer of popular chamber music and organ pieces (for Balbâtre).

Mondonville made a new departure in composition in 1738, when he began to write motets. These religious compositions appeared in the programmes of the Concert Spirituel from then until 1770. He also attempted the stage, but his first opera, 'Isbé' (Opéra [Académie], 10 Apr. 1742), failed. In 1744 he succeeded Gervais as Surintendant de la Chapelle du Roi, and under court patronage he produced at the Opéra 'Le Carnaval du Parnasse' (23 Sept. 1749), an opéra-ballet in three acts, containing some graceful music. When the contest between the partisans of Italian and French music, known as the Guerre des Bouffons, arose in 1752 in consequence of the success of Pergolesi's 'Serva padrona', Mondonville, a protégé of Mme de Pompadour, was chosen champion of the national school; and his opera 'Titon et l'Aurore' (Opéra, 9 Jan. 1753) owed its success largely to this circumstance. The libretto of this pastorale héroïque was by the Abbé de La Marre, with improvements by Claude de Voisenon, and the prologue was by Houdar de La Motte.

'Daphnis et Alcimadure', a pastoral in the Langue d'Oc, in which he introduced many Provençal airs, was produced before the court at Fontainebleau on 29 Oct. 1754, and on being brought out in public at the Paris Opéra on 19 Jan. 1755 it completed Mondonville's popularity. Of this he made use to procure his appointment as director of the Concert Spirituel. That post he occupied for seven years (1755-62), showing great ability both as an administrator and as conductor, and producing at the concerts with much success three short oratorios, 'Les Israélites au Mont Oreb', 'Les Fureurs de Saül' and 'Les Titans'. 'Les Fêtes de Paphos' (9 May 1758), originally written for Mme de Pompadour's private theatre, was the only opera performed at the Opéra during the same period. His last operas, 'Thésée' (1767) and 'Psyché' (1769, a mere adaptation of the third act of 'Les Fêtes de Paphos'), were unsuccessful. Twelve motets, a book of trios, sonatas for violin and harpsichord, etc., are mentioned, and a very amusing jeu d'esprit was published in 1760. It is a musical setting in cantata form of the Privilege du Roi which appears in all publications of the period; it has parts for strings, oboes and horns.

The following are Mondonville's chief instrumental works, arranged chronologically, of which the 'Pièces de clavecin en sonates', the first of the kind, and the 'Sons harmoniques', which for the violin were equally original, are the most important:

1. Sonatas for vn. with continuo (1733).
2. Trio Sonatas for two vns. or flutes with continuo.
3. Sonatas for clavier with vn. accomp. (c. 1734).
4. 'Les Sons harmoniques', sonatas for vn. solo with continuo (c. 1738).
5. Harpsichord pieces with voice or vn. (c. 1748).

There is a good portrait of Mondonville in pastel by La Tour, formerly in the possession of Ambroise Thomas, now in the Musée de Saint-Quentin; and another by G. N. Cochin, engraved by Saint-Aubin.

G. C., adds. M. P., rev.

See also Floquet (Requiem for M.).

MONETARIUS, Stefan (b. Kremnice, ?; d. ?).

Polish 15th-16th-century theorist. His treatise entitled 'Epithoma utriusque musices practicae' was published at Cracow about 1517.

C. R. H.

Money-Coutts, Francis Bardett. See Albéniz (libs.).

MONFERRINA. A kind of country dance, originating in Piedmont. The tunes used in Italy and Malta became fashionable in England in the early years of the 19th century, and were employed for country dances. The English name was Monfrina, Monfreda or Manfredina. The favourite tune with the title 'Italian Monfrina' was this:

Copies will be found in Wheatstone's 'Country Dances for 1810', 'Companion to the Ball-

¹ The only information about his youth is in the 'Nécrologie des hommes célèbres de France' (1773).

Room' (c. 1816) and other collections of country dances. F. K.

MONGINI, ? (b. ?; d. Milan, 27 Apr. 1874).

Italian tenor singer. He first sang in London at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1859 and again about 1862. The best part of his London career, however, dated from 1866, when the premature death of Giuglini had left Mapleson without a leading tenor possessed of any great attraction for the public. Mongini could not fill Giuglini's place, but he had a voice of extraordinary power and range, and in certain parts — Arnold in 'William Tell', Manrico in 'Trovatore' and John of Leyden in 'The Prophet' among the rest — he met with marked success. When Gye and Mapleson joined forces at Covent Garden in 1869 Mongini was one of the leading tenors in the company, and he afterwards sang under Mapleson's management down to 1873. In 1871 he was the original Radamès in Verdi's 'Aida' at Cairo. He was a typical tenore di forza. S. H. P.

Moniglia, Giovanni Andrea. See Cavalli ('Hipermestra', lib.). Cesti ('Semiramide', lib.).

MONIUSZKO, Stanisław (b. Ubiel, Province of Mińsk, 5 May 1819; d. Warsaw, 4 June 1872).

Polish composer. The atmosphere, the traditions and customs at the small country manor where he was born were entirely Polish. His father, Czesław Moniuszko, a former captain in the Polish army and adjutant to the King of Naples, was an owner of a small estate at Ubiel, a district of Janów in the Province of Mińsk. His mother, Elżbieta, born Madżarska, exceptionally musical, sang her baby-son folksongs and folk ballads and later gave him his first lessons in pianoforte playing. In 1827 the parents moved to Warsaw in order that their son should be taught properly. They engaged August Freyer, a former pupil of Józef Elsner, as a teacher. Their financial position, however, did not allow them to stay longer in the capital, and in 1830 they moved again, this time to Mińsk. There the young musician was taught by "provincial teachers", Piotr Karaffa-Korbut and Dominik Stefanowicz. In 1837, owing to improvements in his father's finances, Moniuszko was sent to the Berlin Singakademie, where, under K. F. Rungenhagen, he studied counterpoint and composition for two years. The musical atmosphere at the academy, the chance of listening to many oratorios and cantatas performed there, and frequent visits to the operatic performances under Spontini were the important factors in crystallizing Moniuszko's musical outlook. He returned to Poland, settled at Wilno and, having obtained the post of organist at the Church of St.

John, married Aleksandra Müller. At Wilno he began to write his first operettas and vaudevilles, partly for an amateur society and partly for the professional theatre of the town. He also taught privately and founded a choral society.

In addition to the compositions written during his studies in Berlin, including three songs published by Bote & Bock in 1838 and a vaudeville based on Count Fredro's comedy 'A Night in the Apennines', Moniuszko composed four operettas, of which the last, 'The Lottery', was produced first at Mińsk and then in Warsaw. Wishing to be present at the production of his work in the capital, Moniuszko went to Warsaw, where he made the acquaintance of W. Wolski, a young Polish poet who wrote for him the libretto for a new opera, based on a folk tale, 'Górkalka', by K. W. Wójcicki. This first version of the new opera entitled 'Halka' comprised two acts and was first performed at Wilno on 1 Jan. 1848. It was received with such enthusiasm that Moniuszko began to think seriously about its production in Warsaw. All his attempts, however, were frustrated by the jealousy of N. T. Nidecki, the conductor of the Warsaw Opera. Even the latter's death, which occurred in 1852, did not lessen the difficulties, for the Opera was completely under the influence of the Italian operatic masters. At last, however, thanks to the influence of Mme Maria Muchanow-Kalergis, wife of the general manager of the Opera, and the new conductor, an Italian named Giovanni Quattrini, 'Halka' in its new version, consisting of four acts and some ballet scenes, was staged on 1 Jan. 1858, ten years to the day after the production of the first version.

This date was not only a turning-point in Moniuszko's career, but a milestone in the development of Polish opera. The enthusiastic reception accorded to 'Halka' at every performance established his reputation as the representative national composer, and he was appointed conductor of the Warsaw Opera, where he remained until his death.

'Halka' stands half-way between "traditional opera", with its separate musical numbers, and the "music-drama" as conceived as a unity by Wagner several years later. In this opera Moniuszko deliberately introduced and developed "leading motives" and above all he made his orchestra emphasize the dramatic movements of the play and speak for itself, especially in the overture based on themes from the opera.

The vocal score of 'Halka' was published soon after its first performance. Hans von Bülow, who made himself acquainted with this score, wrote in the 'Neue Zeitschrift für Musik' (12 Nov. 1858): "In Moniuszko a highly gifted composer energetically expresses the strength of the national spirit . . . his opera also contains a striking beauty for us Germans".

By 1869, that is within eleven years after the first Warsaw performance, the libretto was translated into Czech, German, Bulgarian, Slovene, Croatian, Italian and Russian and performed in Prague, Berlin, Sofia, Belgrade, Vienna and Moscow, to name only the capitals of the countries concerned. Even now, after nearly a hundred years, 'Halka' belongs to the standard repertory of all the larger Polish operatic stages. The Highlander Dances and Mazur (ballet scenes from this opera) are frequently included in the programmes of symphonic concerts in Poland.

The year 1860 saw the first performances of two new operas by Moniuszko: on 7 Feb. the production of 'Trubina' ('The Countess'), to a libretto by W. Wolski, and on 5 June that of 'Jawnuta', to a libretto by Książnin. The following opera, 'Straszny dwór' ('The Haunted Manor'), to a libretto by Jan Chęciński, was produced on 28 Sept. 1865. Although this was, from the musical point of view, the summit in Moniuszko's stage career, it never reached the popularity of 'Halka'. 'The Haunted Manor' was followed by two new operatic works: 'Paria', to a libretto based on the drama by Casimir Delavigne, produced on 11 Dec. 1869, and 'Beata', produced on 2 Feb. 1872. The unenthusiastic reception of the former and the failure of the latter worsened the composer's health and hastened his death.

Moniuszko created an original style in opera, a national style of unusual freshness, melodic wealth and singableness. But in spite of the posthumous recognition he enjoys as the greatest Polish operatic composer of the 19th century, his real domain was religious music and songs. He wrote masses, cantatas, litanies, motets and a Requiem. His songs number about 270, and 140 of them were published in twelve 'Song-Books for Home Use'. It was during his stay at Wilno that he began to publish the song-books, each consisting of several songs with piano-forte accompaniment. His hope that they would increase the general appreciation of vocal music was fulfilled, for they penetrated deeply into all ranks of the Polish community, became loved and adored, and helped to keep the spirit of the nation alive when Poland was partitioned and politically ceased to exist, and when even the use of the Polish language was forbidden.

Moniuszko did not base his music on national airs or folk melodies, but the immortal spirit of the Polish soil, inherited from his forefathers and absorbed during his childhood, is expressed by him.

The following are his chief works:

OPERAS

Title	Libretto	Composed	Production
'Biuraliści' ('The Bureaucrats'), 1-act operetta. ¹	Count F. Skarbek.	1834.	Wilno, 1839.
'Cudowna woda' ('Water of Life') (lost).	?	?
'Nocleg w Apenninach' ('A Night in the Apennines'), 1-act operetta.	On a comedy by Count A. Fredro.	1838.
'Nowy dziedzic' ('The New Landlord'), 1-act operetta. ²	Max Radziśzewski.	?
'Walka muzyków' ('The Struggle of the Musicians'). ³	W. Marcinkiewicz.	?
'Sen wieszcz' ('The Seer's Dream'). ³	Trans. by W. Syrokomla of Rosier & de Leuven's 'Le Songe d'une nuit d'été'.	?
'Ideal czyli . . owa Precjoza' ('Ideal, or The New Preciosa'), 2-act operetta.	Oskar Milewski.	1841.
'Karmaniol czyli Francuzi lubią żartować' ('Carmagnole, or The French Like Joking').	Milewski, adapted from a vaudeville by Théaulon de Forges & Jaime.	1841.
'Żółta szlafmyca' ('The Yellow Nightcap').	P. Zabłocki.	1841.
'Pobór rekrutów' ('The Conscription'), 1-act operetta. ³	Marcinkiewicz.	1842.
'Nowy Don Kiszot czyli Sto szaleństw' ('The New Don Quixote, or A Hundred Follies'), 3-act operetta.	On a comedy by Fredro.	1843.	Lwów, 1849.
'Loterya' ('The Lottery'), 1-act operetta.	Milewski.	1843.	Warsaw, 12 Sept. 1846. 1st version, 2 acts, Wilno, 1 Jan. 1848; 2nd, Warsaw, 1 Jan. 1858.
'Halka'.	W. Wolski.	1847.
'Sielanka' ('Idyll') 2 acts (lost).	Marcinkiewicz.	? 1848.	1st version (entitled 'Cyganie' ['The Gypsies']), Wilno, 20 May 1852; 2nd, Warsaw, 5 June 1860.
'Jawnuta', 2 acts.	F. D. Książnin.	1850.

¹ The title of this opera has often been incorrectly translated into English either as 'The Terrible Court' or as 'The Haunted Castle'.

² Only fragments remain.

Title	Libretto	Composed	Production
'Bettly', 2-act opera buffa .	Trans. by F. Schober of Scribe & Mélesville's 'Le Chalet'.	1852.	Wilno, 20 May 1852.
'Flis' ('The Raftman'), 1 act.	S. Bogusławski.	1858.	Warsaw, 24 Sept. 1858.
'Rokiczana', 3 acts. ¹	J. Korzeniowski.	1858-59.	Fragments perf. at a concert, Warsaw, 16 Dec. 1860.
'Hrabina' ('The Countess'), 4 acts.	Wolski.	1858-59.	Warsaw, 7 Feb. 1860.
'Verbum nobile', 1-act opera buffa .	Jan Chęciński.	1860.	Warsaw, 1 Jan. 1861.
'Straszny dwór' ('The Haunted Manor'), 4 acts.	Chęciński.	1861-64.	Warsaw, 26 Sept. 1865.
'Paria', 3 acts & prologue.	Chęciński, on a drama by Casimir Delavigne.	1859-69.	Warsaw, 11 Dec. 1869.
'Beata', melodrama.	Chęciński.	1870-71.	Warsaw, 2 Feb. 1872.
'Trea'. ²	J. S. Jasiński.	1872.

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

- 'Hamlet' and 'The Merchant of Venice' by Shakespeare.
 'Monte Cristo' by Dumas.
 'Figle szatana' ('The Devil's Jest').
 'Fedra'

CHURCH MUSIC

- 6 Masses.
 Requiem.
 4 'Litanie ostrobramskie' (Litanies to the Virgin Mary at Ostra Brama, Wilno).

CHORAL WORKS

- Three Mythological Cantatas
 1. Milda, after a novel by J. I. Kraszewski (1847).³
 2. Nijola.⁴
 3. Krumine.⁴
 'Widma' ('Phantom'), after pt. II of 'Dziady', a versified scenic tale by Adam Mickiewicz (1865).
 'Sonety krymskie' ('The Crimean Sonnets') (Mickiewicz) for chorus & orch. (1867).
 'Madonna' (Petrarch) for baritone, chorus & orch. (1855).
 'Pani Twardowska', ballad (Mickiewicz) (1869).
 'Ballada o Florianie Szarym' ('A Ballad about Florian the Grey') (J. Korzeniowski) for bass, chorus & orch.

ORCHESTRAL WORK

- 'Bajka' ('The Fairy Tale'), concert overture (1848).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- 2 String Quartets ded. to Józef Elsner, 1854.⁵

SONGS

- 3 Songs (1837).
 270 Songs, published in the series entitled 'Śpiewnik domowy' ('Song-Book for Home Use').

Besides, Moniuszko composed some piano-forte pieces and wrote a book on music, 'Pamiętnik do nauki harmonii' ('Textbook on Harmony').

C. R. H.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

(In Polish)

- ARCT, A. (Al. Ar.), 'S. Moniuszko. Life and Works' (Warsaw, 1902).
 CHYBIŃSKI, A. E., 'The Unknown Letters of Stanisław and Alexandra Moniuszko' (Lwów, 1918).
 FABRY, W., 'Moniuszko' (nie romanse) (Warsaw, 1938).
 FEICHT, H., 'Moniuszko's Textbook on Harmony: a Critical Essay' ('Polish Musicological Yearbook', Warsaw, 1936).

¹ Set by Adam in 1834.

² Left unfinished.

³ Some fragments from this cantata were later used in the opera 'Paria'.

⁴ Based on the 'History of the Lithuanian People' by T. Narbutt (in Polish). The manuscript of Cantata No. 3 is lost.

⁵ Composed much earlier.

- HULEWICZ, W., 'Moniuszko: the King of Polish Song' (Lwów, 1933).
 JACHIMECKI, Z., 'S. Moniuszko', monograph (Warsaw, 1921).
 'The Church Music of Moniuszko' (Warsaw, 1948).
 'Muzyka Polska', Vol. II. (Cracow, 1951).
 JOTEYKO, T., 'S. Moniuszko' (Warsaw, 1932).
 KARŁOWICZ, J., 'An Account of the Life and Creativeness of S. Moniuszko' (Warsaw, 1885).
 KOEHLER, A., 'S. Moniuszko (1819-1919)' (Poznań, Warsaw, 1919).
 NIWIADOMSKI, S., 'S. Moniuszko' (Warsaw, 1928).
 OPIEŃSKI, H., 'S. Moniuszko', monograph (Lwów, 1924).
 POLIŃSKI, A., 'S. Moniuszko' (Kiev-Warsaw, 1914).
 REISS, J., 'Most Beautiful of All is Polish Music' (Cracow, 1946).
 ROGOWSKI, L. M., 'Moniuszko' (an essay) (Wilno, 1911).
 STROMENGER, K., 'Moniuszko' (a popular essay) (Warsaw, 1946).
 WALIKI, A., 'Stanisław Moniuszko' (Lwów, 1873).
 WILCZYŃSKI, B., 'S. Moniuszko' (St. Petersburg, 1900).
 WÓJCİK, B., 'Musicalogical Sketches' (Warsaw, 1923).
 WOŁNIWICZ, C., 'Moniuszko' (Poznań, 1919).
 WROCKI, E., 'The Prince of Song' (an essay) (Kato-wice, 1930).

(In English)

- 'A Catalogue of the Musical Works of M. Karłowicz and S. Moniuszko' (Warsaw, 1936).
 DANNREUTHER, E., O.H.M., Vol. IV., 'The Romantic Period' (Oxford, 1905).
 JACHIMECKI, Z., 'Polish Music' (M.Q., New York, Oct. 1920).
 'S. Moniuszko and Polish Music' ('The Slavonic Review', Vol. II, No. 6, pp. 533-46, London, Mar. 1924).
 'Stanisław Moniuszko' (M.Q., New York, Jan. 1928).
 SMITH, A. C., 'Moscow News' (19 May 1934), an article with excerpts from the works by Moniuszko and Szymanowski.
 'The Listener' (London, 3 June 1932).
 'The Magazine of Music', IX (London, 1894), contains a biographical sketch of Moniuszko.

(In French)

- MODRAKOWSKA, M., 'S. Moniuszko' ('Le Monde musical', Paris, 31 Jan. 1932).
 OPIEŃSKI, H., 'La Musique polonaise' (Paris, 1918).
 Also numerous essays and biographical sketches in Dutch, German, Italian and Russian.
See also Polonaise (use of). Wallek-Walewski (sequel to 'Halka').

MONK, Edwin George (b. Frome, Somerset, 13 Dec. 1819; d. Radley nr. Oxford, 3 Jan. 1909).

English organist and composer. He was initiated into music by his father, an amateur. He studied pianoforte playing at Bath under Henry Field and organ playing under George Field. He then went to London and learned choral singing in Hullah's classes and solo singing from Henry Phillips. Later he studied harmony with G. A. Macfarren. After holding several appointments as organist in his native county he went to Ireland in 1844 and became organist and music master of the newly formed College of St. Columba at Stackallan, near Navan, County Meath, afterwards transferred to Rathfarnham, County Dublin. He remained there till 1846, when he was succeeded by J. B. Calkin.

In 1847 Monk settled at Oxford, when he was concerned in the formation of the University Motet and Madrigal Society. In 1848 he obtained the appointments of lay-precentor, organist and music master at the new College of St. Peter, Radley, and graduated B.Mus. at Oxford. In 1856 he proceeded D.Mus., his exercise being a selection from Gray's ode 'The Bard', which he published in the same year in vocal score. In 1859 he was appointed successor to Camidge as organist and choir-master of York Minster. He resigned in 1883 and was succeeded by J. Naylor.

Monk published a service, several anthems, a 'Veni Creator Spiritus' and other pieces, and various secular compositions. He also edited 'The Anglican Chant Book' and 'The Anglican Choral Service Book', and with the Rev. R. Corbet Singleton 'The Anglican Hymn Book', with Sir Frederick Gore Ouseley 'The Psalter and Canticles pointed for Chanting' (two series) and 'Anglican Psalter Chants'. He was the compiler of the librettos of Macfarren's oratorios 'St. John the Baptist', 'The Resurrection' and 'Joseph'. He was a student of astronomy and became F.R.A.S. in 1871.

W. H. H., adds. W. H. G. F.

MONK, William Henry (b. London, 16 Mar. 1823; d. London, 1 Mar. 1889).

English musical editor. He studied under Thomas Adams, J. A. Hamilton and G. A. Griesbach. Having been organist in London at Eaton Chapel, Pimlico, St. George's Chapel, Albemarle Street, and Portman Chapel, St. Marylebone, he was appointed in 1847 director of the choir in King's College, London, and in 1849 organist. In 1874, on the resignation of Hullah, he became professor of vocal music in the college. He was early associated with Hullah in his work of popular musical education. In 1851 he became professor of music at the School for the Indigent Blind. In 1852 he was appointed organist of St. Matthias, Stoke Newington, where a voluntary choir under his direction for many years sustained a daily choral service. He delivered lectures on music at the London Institution (1850-79), the Philosophical Institution, Edinburgh, and the Royal Institution, Manchester. He was appointed a professor in the National Training School for Music in 1876 and in Bedford College, London, in 1878. He was musical editor of 'The Parish Choir' after the fortieth number, and one of the musical editors of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern'. He edited many other works of a similar character, including some for the Church of Scotland, and made various contributions to many of the modern hymnals.

W. H. H.

MONN, Georg Matthias (b. Lower Austria, 1717; d. Vienna, 3 Oct. 1750).

Austrian organist and composer. He was organist of the Karlskirche in Vienna. His symphonies, trio sonatas, quartets, etc., are in a style of transition from the old to the modern school of instrumental composition. K. Horwitz, C. Riedel and G. Adler held that to him and not to Stamitz belonged the credit of having inaugurated the modern symphonic style, but this claim has not been universally admitted (see D.T.Ö., XV, ii and XIX, ii), more particularly because it is uncertain whether some at least of these works are not to be ascribed to his younger namesake, Johann Matthias Monn.

A harpsichord Concerto in G minor by G. M. Monn was transcribed for cello in 1932 by Schoenberg, who also edited a Symphony in A major and two harpsichord concertos.

E. v. d. s., adds.

MONN, Johann Matthias (b. ?; d. ?).

Austrian 18th-century composer, ? relation of the preceding. Nothing is known of his life, except that he was younger than G. M. Monn. His works, if wrongly attributed to his elder namesake, would thus come naturally into the succession of the Mannheim School of symphonists and not represent an advance on them.

Schoenberg edited a Divertimento by J. M. Monn in the 1930s.

E. v. d. s., adds.

MONNA VANNA (Opera). See ÁBRÁNYI. FÉVRIER.

Monnier, Marc. See Fauré (1 song, 1 duet).

MONNIKENDAM, Marius (b. Haarlem, 28 May 1896).

Dutch composer. He studied at the Amsterdam Conservatory under de Pauw and at Dresden, and on obtaining a State grant for study abroad in 1924 at the Schola Cantorum in Paris under Vincent d'Indy. He then became a teacher at the Amsterdam Music Lyceum and Rotterdam Conservatory and for some time acted as musical editor for 'De Maasbode', a leading Rotterdam newspaper. He has always been an experimentalist, usually in large-scale works, and his earliest work to attract wide attention was a 'Missa Nova' for three voices and organ, the accompaniments of which consist largely of long-sustained bare pedal-points or of similarly sustained six-note chords, the first part of the "Agnus Dei" being unaccompanied and the first part of the Creed (up to "Et incarnatus est") being recited to organ chords. This work, composed in 1928, was performed at the Festival for the Revival of Church Music at Frankfort o/M. in 1930. 'Arbeid' ('Labour') described by the composer as "a symphonic movement", created something of a sensation because of the magnitude of its conception. It has been suggested as a companion number to Honegger's 'Pacific 231', to which it probably owes its existence in some degree. A setting of 'Te Deum' is in symphony form and one of his later works, 'Sinfonia sacra', is a choral symphony in the fullest sense of the term, for the vocal portions form an integral part of each movement, while the slow movement is entirely unaccompanied. This work was produced by the famous male-voice choir Maastreechter Staar and the Maastricht orchestra at a great congress at Schimmert in Oct. 1947 in honour of the canonization of St. Grignon the founder of the Order of the Montfort Fathers. That year Monnikendam also received a commission from the Dutch government for a large-scale work. For this he chose to write a dramatic setting of the Passion, with the words taken from the Bible and liturgical books. The work is in seven scenes, starting with the Last Supper and concluding with the Resurrection, and all the resources of chorus (including the spoken word, the use of vowel sounds for instrumental effects, etc.) and a large orchestra are employed.

In all his music Monnikendam is fond of short fragmentary themes, which he often uses as ostinati or varies slightly in the different parts. It would be incorrect to suggest that he owes anything to Delius, but in his "development" (or, as the more conservative analysts would probably say, lack of development) he is very nearly related to that composer. His earlier works were influenced by Tchaikovsky and Mahler, but later he acquired a completely personal idiom, his technique being polytonal but not atonal. Other works include 'Six Inventions à deux voix', a Symphony, Penitential Psalms for chorus and orchestra and incidental music to Vondel's 'Noach'.

Most of Monnikendam's literary work is in the form of articles in newspapers and periodicals, but an important study is his life of César Franck. This is an answer to 'César Franck, deutscher Componist', issued officially by the Nazi authorities during the War of 1939-45, and shows, by historical fact and internal evidence in his works, that Franck was chiefly of Flemish descent with a considerable influx of French or Walloon blood.

H. A.

MONOCHORD (from Gr. μόνος, single, and χορδή, a string). An ancient instrument consisting of a wire or catgut string stretched between two bridges at the ends of a sound-board. A movable bridge, standing on the soundboard, divides the string into two sections. The device was probably invented by the Greek mathematician Pythagoras (c. 550 B.C.), though he may have learnt its use in Egypt. He used it to determine the ratios of the two sections of the vibrating string that produced familiar intervals. If the ratio was one to two, the interval was diapason (an octave); if it was two to three, the interval was diapente (a fifth); if it was three to four, the interval was diatessaron (a fourth).

It is said that Pythagoras disallowed the making a judgement of music by the senses, but would have it approved by the subtlety of the mind, and harmonically proportion, and not by the faculty of hearing.¹

The monochord was used by Euclid in the 4th century B.C., and by Ptolemy in the 2nd century B.C., to define the intervals of Greek scales. In another form it was used by Mersenne to determine the laws of vibration of strings.

L.L. S. L.

MONOCORDE (Fr.)MONOCORDO (Ital.)

An indication which instructs a player of a stringed instrument to execute a given passage or whole piece on one string. This excellent effect originated with Paganini. Having played his 'Love Scene', written for the G and E strings, before the court at Lucca with great success, he was asked if he could not execute something on one string only. The idea immediately caught his fancy, and he set to work and composed his Sonata 'Napoleon' for the G string. This he performed before the court on Napoleon's birthday, in the presence of the Princess of Piombo, Napoleon's favourite sister, and other royalties, and the success of this composition led to many others of a similar character.

O. R.

MONODRAMA. See CIMADORO. MELODRAMA. SCHOENBERG.

MONODY (from Gr. μόνος, "single", and ὥδή, "song"). A term applied to music written in what is sometimes called the homophonic style; that is to say, music in which the melody is confined to a single part instead of being equally distributed between all the voices employed, as in the polyphonic schools.

The rise of the homophonic school was extraordinarily rapid. It sprang suddenly into notice and, without having previously passed through any of the usual stages of gradual development, at once began to exercise an irresistible influence upon the progress of art.

Giovanni Battista Doni tells us that at the celebrated gatherings which took place at Florence about the close of the 16th century, at the house of Giovanni Bardi, Conte di Vernio, "Vincenzo Galilei was the first who composed songs for a single voice"; and that Giulio Caccini (detto Romano), "in imitation of Galilei, but in a more beautiful and pleasing style, set many canzonets and sonnets written by excellent poets" and sang them "to a single instrument, which was generally the theorbo, or large lute, played by Bardilla".¹

¹ Roger North, 'Memoirs of Musick', p. 21.

The success of these early efforts was so encouraging that the inventors of the opera and the oratorio were content to write the whole of their recitatives, and even the rudimentary arias with which they were interspersed, with no richer accompaniment than that of an exceedingly simple figured bass, in which we soon find indications of the unprepared discords first introduced by Monteverdi.² No doubt unisonous vocal music with little or no accompaniment had been heard in the canzonetta, villanella and other forms of national melody, ages and ages before the birth of Galilei; and that the recognition of what we now call the "leading-note" as an essential element of melody was no new thing may be gathered from the words of Zarlino, who, writing in 1558, says:

even nature herself has provided for these things; for not only those skilled in music, but also the contadini, who sing without any art at all, proceed by the interval of the semitone.

—i.e. in forming their closes. Nevertheless, whatever may have been the popular practice, it is certain that the polyphonic style alone had hitherto been taught in the schools. We must understand, therefore, that those who met at the house of Bardi, though undoubtedly the first to introduce this simple music to real lovers of art, were not its actual inventors. The latent germ of the monodic style must have been present wherever national melody existed.

The following example from Caccini's 'Nuove musiche' (Venice, 1602) will show the kind of effect contemplated by the Count of Vernio's enthusiastic disciples:

¹ G. B. Doni, 'Opera omnia' (Florence, 1763), Vol. II. ² See THOROUGH-BASS.

It need scarcely be said that the figure 14 under the last D in the last bar but one indicates a dominant seventh; but before this canzonetta was published, Monteverdi had already printed his fifth book of madrigals; he would not, therefore, be robbed of any portion of the credit universally accorded to him, even if it could be proved — which it cannot — that the discord in this instance was not intended to appear as a passing-note. The seventh on the E, in the third bar is, of course, a suspension. W. S. R., rev.

BIBL. — KRABBE, WILHELM, 'Die Lieder Georg Nieses von Allendorf: zur Geschichte der Monodie im 16. Jahrhundert' (A.M.Z., Jan. 1922, pp. 48-84).

NETTL, PAUL, 'Über ein handschriftliches Sammelwerk von Gesängen italienischer Frühmonodie' (Z.M.W., Nov. 1919, pp. 83-93).

SCHMITZ-BONN, ARNOLD, 'Monodien der Kölner Jesuiten aus der ersten Hälfte des 17. Jahrhunderts' (Z.M.W., Feb. 1922, pp. 266-85).

MONOPHONY (from Gr. mónos, alone, single; φωνή, voice). A term, analogous to "monody", but not to be confused with "homophony", which is, in modern musical parlance, the combination of a number of voices or parts in block harmony (as distinct from polyphony), whereas "monophony" is, strictly speaking, music for a single unsupported part or voice, though it can also mean such music with a simple accompaniment, provided that the melodic part is self-sufficient. E. B.

MONOPOLI. See INSANGUINE.

MONOTHEMATIC. A piece of music constructed on a single theme, either in one movement or in several throughout which that theme is used, is said to be monothematic. Incidental material may, of course, appear in the course of the composition, but nothing apart from that theme must take on any similar constructive importance. Chaconnes, passacaglias and similar pieces based on a persistent figure are monothematic, and so in a sense are works on a ground-bass, although the upper structure may introduce other material of melodic importance. All twelve-note music that adheres closely to the rules is monothematic as a matter of course. E. B.

MONOTONE (from Gr. μόνος, "single", and τόνος, a "note" or "tone"). Prayers, psalms, lessons and other portions of the Divine Office, when declaimed on a single note, are said to be monotoned or recited in monotone.¹ The use of monotonic recitation is of extreme antiquity and was probably suggested, in the first instance, as an expedient for throwing the voice to greater distances than it could be made to reach by ordinary means.

W. S. R.

MONPOU, (François Louis) Hippolyte (b. Paris, 12 Jan. 1804; d. Orléans, 10 Aug. 1841).

French organist and composer. At the age of five he became a chorister at the Paris church of Saint-Germain l'Auxerrois, and at nine was transferred to Notre-Dame. In 1817 he entered as a pupil in the school founded by Choron, which he left in 1819 to be the organist at the Cathedral at Tours. For this post he proved unfit, and he soon returned to Choron, who was extremely fond of him and made him, although a bad reader and a poor pianist, his accompagnateur (or assistant) at his Institution de Musique Religieuse. There he had the opportunity of studying the works of ancient and modern composers of all schools, while taking lessons in harmony at the same time from Porta, Chelard and Fétis; but notwithstanding all these advantages he showed little real aptitude for music and seemed destined to remain in obscurity. He was organist successively at Saint-Nicholas des Champs, Saint-Thomas d'Aquin and the Sorbonne, and sacred music appeared to be his special vocation until 1828, when he published a pretty nocturne for three voices to Béranger's song 'Si j'étais petit oiseau'. He was now taken up by the poets of the romantic school and became their musical interpreter, publishing in rapid succession romances and ballads to words chiefly by Alfred de Musset and Victor Hugo.

Monpou found himself after the close of Choron's school without regular employment and, being a married man, found it necessary to have some certain means of support. The stage seemed to offer the best chance of fortune, and though entirely unpractised in orchestration, he unhesitatingly came forward as a composer of operas. Within a few years he produced 'Les Deux Reines' (6 Aug. 1835), 'Le Luthier de Vienne' (Opéra-Comique, 30 June 1836), 'Piquillo', 3 acts (31 Oct. 1837), 'Un Conte d'autrefois' (20 Feb. 1838), 'Perugina' (20 Dec. 1838), 'Le Planteur', 2 acts (1 Mar. 1839), 'La Chaste Suzanne', 4 acts (27 Dec. 1839) and 'La Reine Jeanne', 3 acts (12 Oct. 1840). His progress was undeniable, but he never became a really good musician. He overworked himself, and the effort to produce with greater rapidity than his powers would justify resulted in his premature death. He left unfinished 'Lambert Simnel' (16 Sept. 1843), completed by Adolphe Adam, and a short opéra-comique, 'L'Orfèvre', which has never been performed.

¹ Cf. INFLECTION.

G. C.

Monrad, O. P. See GRIEG (song).

MONRO (Monroe), George (b. ?; d. London, ? 1731).

English 18th-century organist and composer. He held an appointment at the London church of St. Peter's, Cornhill, and played the harpsichord in the orchestra of Goodman Fields Theatre from 1729 to his death. His principal fame was gained, however, by a great number of vocal compositions which were in great favour during the early part of the 18th century. After appearing on single music sheets many were transferred to 'The Merry Musician', Vols. II and III (c. 1728-1729), to Watt's 'Musical Miscellany' (1731), to Walsh's 'British Musical Miscellany' (1733-34) and similar collections. He composed a song for Fielding's 'Temple Beau', acted in Jan. 1730.

F. K.

Monro, Harold. See WOOD (R., Sonnet for voice & chamber m.).

MONRO, Henry (b. Lincoln, 1774; d. ?).

English organist and composer. He was a chorister at Lincoln Cathedral and afterwards a pupil of John James Ashley, Dussek, Dittenhofer and Domenico Corri in London. In 1796 he was appointed organist of St. Andrew's, Newcastle-on-Tyne. He composed a Sonata for pianoforte and violin, and a few pianoforte pieces and songs.

W. H. H.

MONS, Thomas. See ENGLISH MUSICIANS ABROAD.

MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. Operetta in 3 acts, with a prologue, by Messager. Libretto by F. Lonsdale and A. Ross, trans. from the French libretto by André Rivoire and Pierre Veber, based on Newton Booth Tarkington's story. Produced Birmingham, 7 Apr. 1919. 1st perf. in U.S.A., New York, 11 Dec. 1919. 1st in France, Paris, Théâtre Marigny, 21 Nov. 1925.

MONSIEUR ET MADAME DENIS (Operetta). See OFFENBACH.

MONSIGNY, Pierre Alexandre (b. Fauquembergue nr. Saint-Omer, 17 Oct. 1729; d. Paris, 14 Jan. 1817).

French composer. He showed a taste for music in childhood and studied the violin with success, though not intended for the profession of music. His father died just as he had completed his classical education, and wishing to help his family Monsigny went to Paris in 1749 and obtained a clerkship in the Bureaux des Comptes du Clergé. Having good patrons, for his family was a noble one, and being well educated, refined in manners and a skilful violinist, he was soon attached to the household of the Duke of Orléans as maître d'hôtel, with a salary which placed him above want and enabled him to provide for his younger brothers. He then resumed his musical studies and, Pergolesi's 'Serva padrona' having inspired him with a vehement desire to compose a comic opera, he took lessons from Gianotti, who played the double bass at the Opéra and taught harmony on Rameau's system. He was a good teacher, and his pupil made so much progress that it is said Gianotti would not have been averse to putting his own name on the score of 'Les Aveux indiscrets', which Monsigny submitted to him after only five months' tuition, and which at once established his fame when produced at the Théâtre de la Foire Saint-Germain in 1759.

Encouraged by this first success he composed for the same theatre 'Le Maître en droit' (1760) and 'Le Cadi dupé' (1761), which contains an animated and truly comic duet. His next opera, 'On ne s'avise jamais de tout' (1761), was the first in which he had the advantage of a libretto by Sedaine and the last performed at the Théâtre de la Foire before it was closed at the request of the artists of the Comédie-Italienne, in fear of the new composer's increasing reputation. After the fusion of the two companies Monsigny composed a succession of operas (see list below), some for the Comédie-Italienne, some for the duke's private theatre, others for the court at Fontainebleau, and one, 'Aline, reine de Golconde' (1766), for the Opéra. The most famous were 'Le Roi et le fermier' (1762),

'Rose et Colas' (1764), 'Le Déserteur' (1769) and 'Félix, ou L'Enfant trouvé' (1777). After the immense success of this last work he never composed again. He had acquired a considerable fortune as steward to the Duke of Orléans and inspector-general of canals, but the Revolution deprived him of his employment and of nearly all his resources. However, in 1798 the sociétaires of the Opéra-Comique came to his assistance and, in recognition of his services to the theatre, allowed him an annuity of 2400 francs (nearly £100). On the death of Piccinni, two years later, he was appointed inspector of instruction at the Conservatoire de Musique, but he resigned in 1802, being aware that he could not adequately perform the duties of the office because of his insufficient training. In 1813 he succeeded Grétry at the Institut; but it was not till 1816 that he was decorated by the Legion of Honour. His last years were soothed by constant testimonies of sympathy and respect.

Monsigny's greatest musical gift was melody. His desultory training accounts for the poverty of his instrumentation and for the absence of that ease, plasticity and rapidity of treatment which are the most charming attributes of genius. He was not prolific; and, either from fatigue or from a dread of an encounter with Grétry, he ceased to compose immediately after his greatest triumph; his exquisite sensibility and his instinct for dramatic truth have, however, secured him a place among original and creative musicians. G. C.

BIBI...-MÉNIL, F. DE, 'Les Grand Musiciens du Nord : Monsigny' (Paris, 1893).

POUGIN, A., 'Monsigny et son temps' (Paris, 1908).

QUINCY, QUATREMERIE DE, 'Notice historique sur la vie et les ouvrages de Monsigny' (Paris, 1821).

CATALOGUE OF STAGE WORKS

Title	Libretto	Production
'Les Aveux indiscrets.'	La Ribadière (after a tale by Lafontaine).	Paris, Théâtre de la Foire Saint-Germain, 7 Feb. 1759.
'Le Maître en droit.'	Pierre René Lemonnier.	Paris, Théâtre de la Foire Saint-Germain, 13 Feb. 1760.
'Le Cadi dupé.'	Lemonnier.	Paris, Théâtre de la Foire Saint-Germain, 4 Feb. 1761.
'On ne s'avise jamais de tout.'	Jean Michel Sedaine (after a tale by Lafontaine).	Paris, Théâtre de la Foire Saint-Laurent, 14 Sept. 1761.
'Le Roi et le fermier.'	Sedaine.	Paris, Comédie-Italienne, 22 Nov. 1762.
'Le Nouveau Monde.'	Charles Simon Favart, based on a play by Simon Joseph de Pellegrin.	(1763, never produced.)
'Rose et Colas.'	Sedaine (after a tale by Lafontaine).	Paris, Comédie-Italienne, 8 Mar. 1764.
'Le Bouquet de Thalie.'	Charles Collé. ²	Bagnolet, Théâtre du Duc d'Orléans, 25 Dec. 1764.
'Aline, reine de Golconde.'	Sedaine (after a tale by S. J. de Boufflers).	Paris, Opéra, 15 Apr. 1766.
'Baucis et Philemon.'	Sedaine (after Lafontaine).	Bagnolet, Théâtre du Duc d'Orléans, 1766.
'L'Isle sonnante.'	Collé.	Bagnolet, Théâtre du Duc d'Orléans, 5 June 1767; Paris, Comédie-Italienne, 4 Jan. 1768.
'Le Déserteur.'	Sedaine.	Paris, Comédie-Italienne, 6 Mar. 1769.
'La Rosière de Salency.' ³	Favart.	Fontainebleau, 25 Oct. 1769; Paris, Comédie-Italienne, 14 Dec. 1769.

¹ New divertissements by Favart, music by Monsigny, for Pellegrin's comedy, were prepared for performance (which did not take place) at Fontainebleau that year.

² A prologue for his 'La Partie de chasse de Henri IV'.

³ A pasticcio, containing airs by Monsigny, Philidor, van Swieten and others.

Title	Libretto	Production
'Pagamin de Monègue.'	Sedaine.	(Written about 1770; not performed; score extant.)
'Le Faucon.'	Sedaine (after a fable by Lafontaine).	Fontainebleau, 2 Nov. 1771, Paris, Comédie-Italienne, 19 Mar. 1772.
'La Belle Arsène.'	Favart (after Voltaire's 'La Béquille').	Fontainebleau, 3 acts, 6 Nov. 1773; Paris, Comédie-Italienne, 4 acts, 14 Aug. 1775.
'Félix, ou L'Enfant trouvé.'	Sedaine.	Fontainebleau, 10 Nov. 1777; Paris, Comédie-Italienne, 24 Nov. 1777.

A. L.

See also Dugazon (G., 'Aline', adapt.). Schulz (J. A. P., resetting of 'Aline', lib.).

MONTAGNANA, Antonio (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 18th-century bass singer. He appeared in England in the autumn of 1731. He made his début on the London stage in Handel's 'Poro' (revived); and in Jan. 1732 he created the bass part in 'Ezio', Handel having written specially for him the famous song "Nasce al bosco", which was clearly intended to exhibit the singer's peculiar powers. This opera was followed by 'Sosarme', in which Montagnana again had an air, "Fra l'ombre e l'orrori" in which the depth, power and mellow quality of his voice, and his rare accuracy of intonation in hitting distant and difficult intervals, were displayed to full advantage. In the same year he sang in Handel's 'Acis', a revival of 'Alessandro', 'Flavio', 'Coriolano' and in 'Esther'. In 1733 Montagnana took part in 'Deborah', 'Tolomeo', 'Ottone', 'Orlando' and 'Athaliah' (the last at Oxford). In 'Orlando' he had another very difficult song composed expressly for him, "Sorge infausta", which has remained a trial of compass and execution since his day for the most accomplished basses.

In the following year, however, Montagnana seceded, with Senesino and Cuzzoni, to the Theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields, under the direction of Porpora; and there he appeared in 'Onorio' by that master and other pieces. In 1735 and 1736 he was still with Porpora, singing in his 'Polifemo' and the 'Adriano' of Veracini. In Jan. 1738 he returned to his allegiance to Handel, singing in 'Faramondo', then first produced, and 'Serse'. J. M.

MONTAGNANA, Domenico (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 17th-18th-century violin maker. He worked between about 1700 and 1740. His name is not as renowned as that of others of his class owing to the misleading labels bearing the names of "Guarnerius", "Bergonzi", etc., which have been dishonestly inserted into his instruments from time to time to enhance their market value. He was an apprentice of Antonio Stradivari and ranks with Carlo Bergonzi as one of the master's best pupils. He first established a workshop of his own at Cremona, but later he settled at Venice, where his superior knowledge of qualities, materials, thicknesses and varnish — gained in the workshops of Cremona — brought him into prominence.

Montagnana instruments show the influence of Stradivari's teaching, but bear little resemblance to the Stradivari form. The outline is less graceful, the upper and lower curves are flatter. The sound-holes somewhat resemble the Guarneri type, and the scroll is much larger and bolder than that of Stradivari. The extreme richness and velvety softness of his varnish rivals that of his master and has excited the admiration of connoisseurs throughout Europe. He made violas and magnificent cellos besides violins, but not being a prolific maker, his instruments are scarce and valuable. It is as a cello maker that the best tribute has been paid to him by Charles Reade, who called him "the mighty Venetian" in his letters to the 'Pall Mall Gazette' in 1872.

E. H.-A.

BIBL. GALLAY, JULES, 'Les Luthiers italiens au XVII^e et XVIII^e siècle' (Paris, 1869).

READE, CHARLES, 'A Lost Art Revived', produced from the 'Pall Mall Gazette' by George Muntz (Gloucester, 1873).

VIDAL, P., 'Les Instruments à archet' (Paris, 1876).

Montagu, Lady Mary Wortley. See Fux (description of performance).

MONTAGU-NATHAN, M. (Montagu) (b. Banbury, 17 Sept. 1877).

English writer on music. He was educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham, 1888-1893), and then went to the Brussels Conservatoire as a violin student under Ysaye. Afterwards he attended Hoch's Conservatory at Frankfurt o/M. as a pupil of Hugo Heermann for violin, Hugo Becker for chamber music and Iwan Knorr for composition. He also had private violin lessons from Wilhelmj in London. Having appeared frequently at the Belfast University Chamber Concerts between 1900 and 1905, he joined the teaching-staff of the Leeds Municipal School of Music about 1907, and he played violin concertos at the Municipal Concerts there between that year and 1911, also acting as music critic to the 'Yorkshire Observer' and lecturing, then and later, in various English and Irish towns. He learnt Russian and made his name as a writer and lecturer chiefly as a specialist in Russian music, of which he gave pioneer concerts at Steinway Hall in London in 1913-14. He has been secretary of many musical and other organizations in London and at Henley-on-Thames, where he lived for many years before he finally settled in London. During all this time he contributed to a variety of journals, not exclusively on music, and he has written a vast number of articles for all the chief musical periodicals in England, as well as some in Russia and the U.S.A.

Montagu-Nathan's books on music, all published in London, are the following:

- 'A History of Russian Music' (1914).
- 'Handbook to the Piano Music of Scriabin' (1914).
- 'Glinka' (1916).
- 'Mussorgsky' (1916).
- 'Rimsky-Korsakov' (1916).
- 'Contemporary Russian Composers' (1917).
- 'Introduction to Russian Music' (1918).
- 'The Orchestra: how to listen to it' (1920).

He also contributed studies of nine Russian composers to Bacharach's 'Music Masters' series. In 1951 he was appointed editor of 'Music'. E. B.

MONTANARI, Francesco (b. Padua, ?; d. Rome, 1730).

Italian violinist and composer. He was a pupil of Corelli and established himself in Rome, where he became a member of the orchestra of St. Peter's in 1700 and, according to Burney, died of a broken heart when Bini came to Rome and proved himself to be the finest performer of the period. Montanari composed twelve sonatas for violin which were published by a Boulogne firm. E. H.-A.

MONTANO ET STÉPHANIE (Opera).

See BERTON.

MONTANOS, Francisco di (b. ?; d. ?).

Spanish 16th-century theorist. Little is known of his life, but he appears to have been organist at Valladolid for some years. He was the author of a 'Tratado da compostura', which was later incorporated in his 'Arte de música teórica práctica', published in 1592. This latter work was extremely popular and was reprinted at least ten times. It contains many musical examples which have formed the source of much information regarding the secular music of Spain of that period.

H. A.

Montdorge, Antoine Gautier de. See Rameau ('Fêtes d'Hébé', lib.).

MONTE, Philippe de (b. Mechlin district¹, 1521; d. Prague, 4 July 1603).

Netherlands composer. Nothing very definite is known of his parentage, and there is even some uncertainty about his name, which may have been a Latinized version of the Flemish van den Berghe; families bearing both names are to be found in records of the Mechlin district, where de Monte is known to have been born in 1521, this date being established by reliable contemporary evidence. Nor is anything to be ascertained about his childhood and musical education; in all probability he was a choir-boy in the cathedral of Saint-Rombaud at Mechlin. But we have his own word for the fact that in early manhood he went to Italy to take up a post in the household of the patrician family of Pinelli, teaching music to the children of its head, Cosimo Pinelli, at Naples. Apparently de Monte remained in this or a similar post for some years, probably from about 1540 or 1541 (when he would be nineteen or twenty years of age) until 1554, when, as he said himself, he returned to the Low Countries, having published his first madrigals in Rome that year. During this Italian period he may also have been attached, because of his fine bass voice (which contemporary musicians praised), to some Neapolitan choir.

De Monte speaks of being at Antwerp in 1554 or 1555, and about this time Philip II of Spain, having heard of this gifted young musician and fine singer, who was already attracting attention as a composer as well, offered him a post in the royal chapel at Madrid. At this moment Philip had prepared to visit England as the affianced husband of Mary Tudor, and according to the custom of monarchs in those days, he took his musical establishment with him. This visit was of short duration on de Monte's part, for he returned to Antwerp before the Spanish king's departure from England. But there was an interesting outcome to his stay there: the beginning of a friendship with William Byrd. At the time of de Monte's visit, one Thomas Byrd, who is conjectured to have been William's father, was a member of the English Chapel Royal, and no doubt contact with him was established through the Spanish choir, although the two establishments seem to have been kept separate and contact between the members must have been made difficult by their ignorance of each other's languages. The younger Byrd would have been about thirteen years old at this time and must already have shown signs of genius. There is good reason to believe that the two musicians corresponded in later years, for in 1583 de Monte sent to Byrd the music of his 8-part motet 'Super flumina Babylonis'. Byrd paid de Monte a similar compliment with a motet appropriately entitled 'Quomodo cantabimus?' In the B.M. (Add. MSS) may be seen de Monte's manuscript with this contemporary inscription: "Sent by him to Mr. Bird 1583", together with Byrd's manuscript inscribed "Made by Mr. Wm. Bird to send to Mr. Phillip de Monte 1584".

Back at Antwerp after his stay in England, de Monte was recommended to Duke Albert V of Bavaria by the latter's chancellor, but nothing came of this proposal to make him the duke's Kapellmeister, and he left the Low Countries for Italy once again. There he seems to have led a wandering life, going from court to court. A glimpse of this is caught from one of his dedicatory addresses, where he speaks of having appeared as a singer before the Grand Duke of Tuscany, Ferdinando de' Medici, and his retinue at Florence in 1556. In 1562 the question arose of his succeeding Willaert as maestro di cappella at St. Mark's, Venice, but the letter in question, dated 28 Feb., says that he had as yet given no reply. Willaert did not die until 8 Dec. of that year, but he was very old and probably infirm. In 1568 we find de Monte in Rome, perhaps in the service of Cardinal Flavio Orsino, and there came the turning-point in his career. The post of musical director to the imperial court had become vacant by the death of Vaet on 8 Jan. 1567, and negotiations with de Monte were opened, a similar approach having already been unsuccessfully made to Palestrina. De Monte accepted the post in May 1568 and remained in the service of the imperial court, first in Vienna, afterwards in Prague, until his death. He served Maximilian II and, after that emperor's death in 1576, Rudolph II, and both his patrons greatly appreciated his brilliant musical gifts, his zeal and devotion to duty as well as, by all accounts, an engaging personality. Maximilian immediately commissioned a Mass from de Monte and in 1570 sent him on a mission to the Netherlands to engage the best possible musical talents for the chapel. In the course of this journey, which lasted three months, de Monte revisited his birthplace. Among those with whom he returned was a brilliant player on the virginals, a young woman who could also sing and compose. Whether this suggests some attachment is not known, but it seems fairly certain that de Monte never married.

¹ Not at Mons, as has sometimes been stated, on the ground that "Philippe de Monte" was held to mean "Philip of Mons".

As a mark of special favour the emperor, in 1572, obtained for de Monte the office of treasurer of Cambrai Cathedral, and five years later, on 1 May 1577, his successor, Rudolph II, had him appointed to a canonry there. Both posts were, of course, non-residential. During his residence in Prague there came to him as a pupil the young English poetess Elizabeth Weston who, with her mother, had come to live there. In a Latin poem which is still extant she eulogized in glowing terms her master's great gifts, terming him "a prince of music" and comparing him to Apollo, Amphion and Orpheus, adding that the courts of Austria, Italy, France and Spain joined their praises to hers. In 1588 de Monte was occupied with plans for the restoration of the organs at the Viennese court; in 1593 he took part in the Diet of Ratisbon; in 1603, a few months before his death, he published his ninth book of madrigals, for 6 voices. In his will he expressed the wish to be buried in St. James's Church in Prague.

Philippe de Monte began his career as a composer of secular music and seems to have written little, if any, for the church until his arrival at the Austrian court. From 1554 onwards he issued book after book of madrigals, French chansons and villanellas, to the total of nearly 1200. His church music dates from the year after his arrival in Vienna. De Monte's best work is not unworthy of a place beside that of his two greatest contemporaries, whose fame has, somewhat unfairly, overshadowed his own. In the secular field he can compare, in beauty and variety, with the supreme master of the madrigal, Lassus, while his church music has something of the lofty dignity and sincerity of Palestrina. His cultivation of the madrigal, with its Italian attributes of grace and melodiousness, played a part in the shaping of his style, as did also the Netherlands' contrapuntal vigour, and so in his music we find that sonority and richness to be expected from a combination of these two elements. Like Lassus he does not hesitate to subordinate contrapuntal smoothness to the effect he wishes to obtain, so that at times his melodic movement seems to lack grace, although the total effect always justifies this. In much of his music may be found a tendency towards a homophonic treatment of the text, both in his madrigals and in his church music.

Twenty-four masses by de Monte (see list below) have survived out of at least thirty-eight he is known to have written. A few were published in his lifetime. He also composed over 300 motets, some of which were also issued contemporaneously. The growing interest in his music has resulted in the publication, at Düsseldorf from 1924 onwards, of a number of both religious and secular works.

H. G.

BIBL.—CLOSSON, E., 'Philippe de Monte et la publication de ses œuvres' ('Musica Sacra', XXXVIII, June 1931).

DOORSLAER, G. VAN, 'Philippe de Monte: la vie et les œuvres' (Brussels, 1921).

EINSTEIN, ALFRED, 'The Italian Madrigal' (Princeton & Oxford, 1949), passim.

NUFFEL, J. VAN, 'Philippe de Monte' (Proc. Mus. Ass., Vol. LVII, 1931).

MASSES

Title ¹	Voices	Original Edition	Modern Edition
'Ad te levavi.'	S.A.T.T.B.	1587 (Bk. I).	T.M., ² 1870-71.
'Ancor che col partire.'	S.A.T.B.		E.S., ² No. 8.
'Benedicta es.'	S.A.A.T.B.B.	1579.	Alsbach, 1920; T.M.

¹ No chronological order of composition being possible to establish, the masses are here listed alphabetically.

² 'Trésor musical', ed. by R. J. van Maldeghem, 1865-93.

³ Edition Schwann, Düsseldorf, 1930 &c.

Title ¹	Voices	Original Edition	Modern Edition
Gara la vita mia. ²	S.S.A.T.B.		E.S., No. 21.
Confitebor tibi Domine. ²	S.S.A.A.T.T.B.B.	1587 (Bk. I).	C.M., 1873.
Cum sit omnipotens rector Olympi. ²	S.A.A.T.T.B.	1587 (Bk. I).	F.M., 1872; E.S., No. 24.
Deus, Deus meus. ²	S.A.A.T.T.B.	1587 (Bk. I).	T.M., 1872.
Emite Domine. ²	S.A.A.T.B.	1587 (Bk. I).	T.M., 1871.
Inclina cor meum. ²	S.A.T.T.B.		E.S., No. 5.
La dolce vista. ²	S.S.A.A.T.T.B.B.		E.S., No. 14.
Mon cœur se recommande à vous. ²	S.A.T. Quintus.B.	1590.	Collection Lindner.
Nasce la pena mia. ²	S.A.A.T.T.B.		E.S., No. 10.
O altitudo divinarum. ²	S.A.T.T.B.		E.S., No. 4.
Quando lieta sperai. ²	S.A.A.T.B.		E.S., No. 23.
Quomodo dilexi. ²	S.S.A.T.T.B.	1587 (Bk. I).	T.M., 1872.
Requiem. ²	S.A.T.T.B.		E.S., No. 15.
Revens vers moi. ²	S.A.T.B.		E.S., No. 9.
Si ambulavero. ²	S.S.A.A.T.B.	1587 (Bk. I).	T.M., 1871.
Sine nomine. ²	S.A.T.B.		E.S., No. 11; 'Musica sacra'
			Vol. XXIV (1883).
Sine nomine. ²	S.A.T.B.		E.S., No. 16.
Sine nomine. ²	S.S.A.T.T.B.		E.S., No. 7.
Sine nomine. ²	S.S.A.T.T.B.		E.S., No. 18.
Sine nomine. ²	S.A.T.B.		E.S., No. 2a.
Ultimi mei sospiri. ²	S.A.A.T.T.B.		E.S., No. 5.

MONTECINO, Alfonso (b. Osorno, 28 Oct. 1924).

Chilean pianist and composer. While studying music at the Conservatorio Carolina Klagges in his native city he did not neglect his general education, which he continued in Santiago, becoming a Bachiller en Historia y Letras at the University in 1944. Meanwhile he had continued his musical training at the National Conservatory under Spálm for pianoforte and Santa Cruz for composition. In 1915 he won the Concurso Orrego Carvallo for pianoforte, and later his 'Cantos de Navidad' won the prize of the Sociedad Amigos del Arte. In that same year he became the artistic director of the Sociedad Nueva Música. In 1916 he became a professor at the Conservatorio Nacional de Música and in 1917 he went to the U.S.A. to study composition at Princeton University under Randall Thompson, while perfecting his pianoforte technique under Claudio Arrau. As a pianist he has appeared very successfully both in South and North America. Among his compositions are a Symphonic Overture, two string Quartets, a Trio for flute, oboe, and bassoon, a pianoforte Sonata, and many short choral and other vocal pieces.

N. F.

MONTECLAIR, Michel (Pinolet) de (b. Andelot, Haute-Marne, [bapt. 4 Dec.] 1667; d. nr. Saint-Denis, 27 Sept. 1737).

French composer. As a child he was a chorister at the cathedral of Langres, and he subsequently sang in various other churches. He then entered the service of the Prince de Vaudémont as music master and went to Italy with him. In 1700 he went to live in Paris, where he became double-bass player at the Opéra in 1707, remaining there until 1737, when he retired with a pension. While he was there his opera-ballet 'Les Fêtes de l'été' was produced on 12 June 1716 and his "tragédie lyrique tirée de l'Écriture Sainte 'Jephthé'" (libretto by Simon Joseph de Pellegrin) either on 28 Feb. (according to the score) or on 4 Mar. (according to the libretto) 1732. In the prologue of this latter is a curious scene in which various mythological divinities are driven from the opera-house by Truth and the Virtues, and their places are taken by scriptural personages. But an opera on a biblical subject was unprecedented at the Académie Royale de Musique, and the piece was banned for a time by the Archbishop of Paris.

Montéclair wrote a 'Nouvelle Méthode pour apprendre la musique' (Paris, 1709), a 'Méthode facile pour apprendre à jouer du violon' (1711 or 1712), 'Principes de musique', divided into 4 parts (1736), which Fétis mistakenly took for a second edition of the 'Méthode'. A number of examples from 'Jephthé' were there given. It contains a valuable explanation of the more usual ornaments and hints about the proper accentuation of words in music.²

M. P., adds.

BIBL.—PINCHERLE, MARC, 'Elementary Musical Instruction in the 18th Century: an Unknown Treatise by Montéclair' (M.Q., XXXIV, 1948, p. 61).

MONTELLA, Gian (or Giovanni) Domenico (b. Naples, c. 1570; d. Naples, 1607).

Italian lutenist and composer. He entered the service of the royal chapel at Naples as lutenist in 1591. According to Florimo³ he was also a harpist and organist. The first of his 8 books of 5-part madrigals was published in 1595, the last (posthumously) in 1607, as the dedication indicates. He also published 2 books of madrigals and 2 of villanelle for 4 voices, one of 8-part motets, and wrote masses, psalms and other church music.⁴

F. W. (ii).

² See O.H.M., IV, 301.

³ 'La scuola musicale di Napoli.'

⁴ Pannain, in 'L'oratorio dei Filippini e la scuola musicale di Napoli' (Milan, 1934), reprints 6 8-part motets and an 8-part Mass.

¹ No chronological order of composition being possible to establish, the masses are here listed alphabetically.

MONTEMEZZI, Italo (b. Vigasio, prov. of Verona, 4 Aug. 1875; d. Vigasio nr. Verona, 15 May 1952).

Italian composer. He early began the study of the pianoforte without, however, showing any marked predilection for music. It was only after being sent to Milan to complete technical studies that he decided to abandon engineering for musical composition. Lacking sound elementary training, he did not find it easy to gain admission to the Milan Conservatory, and he succeeded only after two fruitless attempts. Once admitted, however, his progress was very rapid under the guidance of M. Saladino (counterpoint) and Ferroni (composition). He obtained his final diploma in 1900. But there were apparently still some lacunae in his education, and he has confessed that his knowledge of orchestration was gained not from text-books but from the gallery of the Teatro alla Scala. After leaving the Conservatory he lived and worked for some years in retirement. In 1939 he emigrated for a time to the U.S.A., where he lived in California.

Montemezzi's first opera, 'Giovanni Gal-lurese', was given on 28 Jan. 1905 at Turin, where it made so favourable an impression that he came at once to be looked upon as one of the most promising composers of his generation. A second opera, 'Hellera', to a libretto by Luigi Illica based on Benjamin Constant's 'Adolphe', also produced at Turin, on 17 Mar. 1909, was less successful; but the third, 'L' amore dei tre re', founded on the tragedy of Sem Benelli, then very popular in Italy, was received at La Scala with considerable sympathy on 10 Apr. 1913 and performed in most Italian theatres and also in England (London, Covent Garden, 27 May 1914), Germany and America. A fourth opera, libretto by Tito Ricordi, on d'Annunzio's 'La nave' (Milan, Teatro alla Scala, 1 Nov. 1918) met with favour in Italy.

Montemezzi himself gave a definition of his artistic aims in an article published in America. Music without melody, he there declared, is inconceivable. Neither scholasticism nor realism appealed to him. His main aim was to create the musical atmosphere in which the characters of the drama must live and express themselves. His chief asset appears to be sincerity and a certain modesty of style, which is never over-elaborate though often finished and neat.

Montemezzi was engaged for some time in setting to music Edmond Rostand's 'La Princesse lointaine'. He also composed a 'Song of Songs', performed at Milan in 1900. Additional works are an opera in one act, 'La notte di Zoraima', which received its first performance at La Scala, Milan, on 31 Jan. 1931, a symphonic poem, 'Paolo and Virginia', inspired by the novel of Bernardin de Saint-Pierre (Rome, 1930) and an elegy for cello and pianoforte (1932). Later works are the one-act opera 'L' incantesimo', not staged, but broadcast in 1943 under his direction, and the symphonic poem 'Italia mia! nulla fermerà il tuo canto!' (1944).

¹ This play had been produced in Rome on 11 Jan. 1908 with incidental music by Pizzetti.

F. B., adds.

BIBL.—GILMAN, LAWRENCE, 'A Note on Montemezzi', in 'Nature in Music' (New York, 1914).

MONTÉS, Juan (John) (b. Warsaw, 26 Nov. 1902).

Argentine (naturalized) pianist, critic and composer of Polish birth. He studied pianoforte, composition, and conducting at the Warsaw Conservatory and the Chopin Music School. Later he graduated with honours from the Leipzig Conservatory (1923), where he studied with Teichmüller. Having appeared in Central Europe he started, in 1925, a two-piano team with his wife Tilla, also a pupil of Teichmüller's, and settled in Buenos Aires. Since then they have toured extensively in South America, U.S.A., Canada and Europe. In 1928 Montés became music critic of the 'Argentinisches Tageblatt', writing and reviewing for various other papers and periodicals. He has published a series of teaching-editions and arranged several works by Argentine composers for two pianos. As a composer Montés has written orchestral and chamber music as well as songs and piano pieces.

N. F.

MONTESARDO, Girolamo del (b. ? Naples, ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-17th-century composer. He was an important member of the Neapolitan school at the beginning of the 17th century. From the publication of his 'I lieti giorni . . .' it is clear that he had lived for a time at Florence (certainly in 1606, when he issued some guitar pieces from there). By 1608 he had become maestro di cappella at the Cathedral of Fano, in the Romagna. In 1612 he was back at Naples. By virtue of his publication of 1606, 'Nuova inventione d' intavolatura per sonare i balletti sopra la chitarra spagnuola, senza numeri e note', he was for long credited with the actual invention of the new guitar tablature "without numbers and notes".²

Montesardo's surviving works, however, reveal a preference for vocal writing. In 1608 and 1612 he published volumes of sacred songs for 1-8 voices and, also in 1612, 'I lieti giorni di Napoli', containing arias and madrigals for solo voice, in which he attempts the new monodic style, dance-like songs, villanelle, etc., for 2-3 voices, and puzzle canons.

N. F. (ii).

² See TABLATURE.

Montespan, Mme de. See Académie de Musique.

MONTEUX, Pierre (b. Paris, 4 Apr. 1875).

French conductor. He studied at the Paris Conservatoire (first prize for violin in 1896) and played the viola in the orchestras of the Opéra-Comique and the Colonne concerts. He founded and directed the Concerts Berlioz. From 1911 to 1914 and again in 1917, on returning from the war, he conducted the Diaghilev Russian Ballet, for which he directed Ravel's 'Daphnis et Chloé', Debussy's 'Jeux' and Stravinsky's 'Petrushka', 'Rite of Spring' and 'Nightingale'. In 1914 he organized the Concerts Monteux, whose programmes gave prominence to new French and Russian music.

In 1917-19 Monteux was conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York; later he went to Boston as director of the Symphony Orchestra and from 1924 to 1934 he was second conductor of the Concertgebouw Orkest, Amsterdam. But his principal activity was the direction of the Orchestre Symphonique de Paris, which he founded in 1929 and conducted, with great success, until 1938. Since 1936 he has been director of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra.

A. H. (ii).

MONTEVERDI¹, Claudio (b. Cremona, 1567²; d. Venice, 29 Nov. 1643).

Italian composer. His long life is easily divided into three main sections: the years of childhood and adolescence at Cremona (1567-1589), his musical services at the ducal court of Mantua (c. 1590-1612) and finally his appointment as maestro di cappella of St. Mark's, Venice (1613-43), a post he retained to his death.

CREMONA.—Very little is known of Monteverdi's early life beyond the fact that his father, Baldassare Monteverdi (a physician of some standing), enabled him to become a pupil of Marc' Antonio Ingegneri, who had been musicæ prefectus to the cathedral of Cremona since 1576. On the title-pages of his first three publications Monteverdi appears expressly as "disciple of Ingegneri". These musical first-fruits comprise the 'Cantionculæ sacrae' of 1582, the 'Madrigali spirituali' of 1583³ and the 'Canzonette a 3 voci' of 1584. They amply testify to Monteverdi's early mastery of the traditional technique of vocal polyphony, in which his mentor excelled. Nothing is known of Monteverdi's personal circumstances during these formative years, not even his mother's family name. He grew up with four brothers and sisters, one of whom — Giulio Cesare (b. 31 Jan. 1573) — was to become his musical assistant at Mantua.

¹ This is the spelling as it appears in all the signatures of Monteverdi's 121 preserved letters. In contemporary publications of his music the name is generally spelt "Monteverde".

² Certificate of baptism dated 15 May 1567.

³ Lost, except for the basso part. See Catalogue.

MANTUA.—Monteverdi's efforts to obtain a musical appointment at Milan with the help of Senator Ricardi (to whom he dedicated the second madrigal book, 1590) were unsuccessful. But he must have made contact with the ducal court of Mantua soon after 1590. He was formally appointed by Vincenzo (I) Gonzaga, the art-loving and spendthrift son of Guglielmo (I), who in turn had befriended Palestrina and established the specific artistic tradition of Mantua. Monteverdi started there in the humble position of suonatore di viuola and served for almost twelve years under the court conductors Giaches de Wert and Benedetto Pallavicino as violist, cantore and later assistant conductor. Vincenzo, despite his habitual ungenerosity towards his artists, had a personal liking for Monteverdi, who accompanied him on his campaign in Hungary (1595)⁴ as well as on his political journey to Flanders (1599), where he made contact with French musicians.

About 1595 Monteverdi married Claudia Cattaneo, a singer at the ducal court, who died early, leaving him a widower with two infant sons (Francesco and Massimiliano) on 10 Sept. 1607. Monteverdi's fame as a composer of progressive and harmonically daring madrigals was established with the publication of the madrigal books III, IV and V (1592-1605) and the subsequent issue of the 'Scherzi musicali' of 1607. Even before these volumes had left the press some of their items, privately circulated, had been acrimoniously attacked by Giovanni Maria Artusi, a canon of the San Salvatore church at Bologna and the learned author of 'L'arte del contrappunto'. The controversy of this ultra-conservative disciple of Zarlino with Monteverdi (anticipating in many ways the features of Hanslick's Beckmesserish tussles with Wagner) dragged on for eight years and culminated in four critical essays: 'L'Artusi, overo delle imperfettioni della musica moderna' (1600, second ed. under the heading of 'Considerazioni musicali', 1603); 'Discorso musicale di Antonio Braccino da Todi' (1606, lost); 'Discorso secondo musicale . . . per la dichiarazione' (1608). All in all Artusi singled out as targets for his short-sighted criticism nine madrigals and scherzi, among them the world-famous 'Cruda Amarilli' (M.B.¹, V). Of Monteverdi's replies the letter written under the pseudonym of "Ottuso Accademico" is lost (except for some part of it, quoted in Artusi's 'Imperfetioni', II, 1603); but the gist of his counter-arguments is preserved in the short preface to M.B., V (1605), in which he announced a comprehensive theoretical treatise under the heading of 'Seconda prattica, overo perfetioni della moderna musica'. This plan never materialized, although Monteverdi toyed as late as 1634 with the idea of writing a book of this kind. His artistic convictions, aptly symbolized in the antithesis of prima and seconda prattica, received further elucidation in the 'Dichiarazione' written and published by his brother Giulio Cesare as an appendix to the 'Scherzi musicali' of 1607. In the new and revolutionary style of music to which Monteverdi here subscribed, and which he labelled seconda prattica, the poetic word is master of the harmony (i.e. music), whereas in the old style of prima prattica (to which Artusi adhered) the harmony was considered mistress of the word. This deliberate shift in the creative emphasis from the preconceived polyphonic pattern to the expressive requirements of poetic speech necessitated in turn the creation of recitative, thorough-bass and the new bel canto opera, in all of which Monteverdi was to give the lead to his epoch.

⁴ This first campaign, which lasted for about a year (1595-96), took the duke to Visegrad, passing through Esztergom, on the line of the Danube. The music-loving prince required almost full-time service of his musicians, and the Turks listened with amazement to the music of the "Mantuan Pasha" in the camps below Visegrad. There is a letter from Monteverdi, dated Mantua, 28 Nov. 1601, addressed to his prince staying at "Canisa" (now Nagykanizsa) during a later campaign. According to Szabolcsi, those Oriental and Slav characteristics which one may detect in the turns and inflections of some of Monteverdi's works, e.g. in the 'Combattimento', the 'Scherzi musicali' and the 'Madrigali guerrieri ed amorosi', may be surmised to be attributable to the impressions he received while staying in Hungary.

His first opera, 'La favola d' Orfeo', was commissioned by Vincenzo Gonzaga's two sons and produced at the Accademia degli Invaghiti on 22 Feb. 1607. This stupendous work, the earliest opera still occasionally produced on the modern opera stage, fuses the characteristics of the experimental recitative opera (founded by the Florentine Camerata), the traditional orchestral splendour of the Renaissance intermedio and the progressive features of da capo aria, orchestral ritornello and highly dramatic choral commentaries into a Janus-headed operatic type of unique significance. The splendid opera festival at Mantua celebrating the marriage feast of Francesco Gonzaga, Vincenzo's heir, generated a prodigious crop of operas, culminating in the production of Monteverdi's 'Arianna' (May 1608, lost, save for the famous 'Lamento') and 'Ballo dell' ingrato' (June 1608). Monteverdi's progressive spirit, so convincingly expressed in the chamber-musical blending of voices and instruments in his 'Scherzi musicali', as well as in the characterizing colour-scheme of the 'Orfeo' score (published as early as 1609), effected a similarly significant change in ecclesiastical music.

His first comprehensive publication of liturgical compositions — the archaic Mass on motifs from Gombert's motet 'In illo tempore' and the revolutionary Vespers Psalms with their 'Orfeo'-inspired orchestral palette and with the passionate solo motet 'Nigra sum' (a distinct offspring of the 'Lamento d' Arianna') — juxtapose the prima and seconda prattica in a curious duality of styles. They were composed with an eye to Rome, whither Monteverdi went in 1610 in the hope of receiving financial support from Pope Paul V, to whom the Mass was dedicated. This visit proved unsuccessful, and Monteverdi had to carry on in Mantua, where he had been appointed maestro di cappella and made a citizen by Duke Vincenzo in 1602 after Pallavicino's death in 1601. After Vincenzo's death (18 Feb. 1612) his successor, Francesco, abruptly dismissed Monteverdi and his brother (31 July 1612). Claudio went back to his father's house at Cremona, as poor as he had left it twenty-one years earlier. For some years his relations with the court of Mantua seem to have been suspended, only to be revived soon after he had achieved fresh fame by his new appointment at Venice.

VENICE.—Just over a year after his dismissal (19 Aug. 1613) Monteverdi was unanimously elected maestro di cappella at St. Mark's by the procurators in succession to G. C. Martinengo, who had died in office a month earlier. From that time on Monteverdi's position was financially secure and he had the economic misery of his earlier years behind him. Charging himself with the reorganization of liturgical music at St. Mark's he produced a great amount of church music during the three decades of his tenure of office, gathered together in two huge collections, 'Selva morale e spirituale' (1640) and 'Messa a quattro e salmi' (posthumously published in 1651). Both abound in works in the two contrasting patterns of style as previously evolved in the Mass and Vespers of 1610. A rich harvest of continuo madrigals, cantatas and monodies (among them the madrigal version of the 'Lamento d' Arianna', the lovely 'Sestina' cycle, chamber duets and choral items of Gabrieli-like splendour) is accumulated in the publications of M.B., VI (1614), VII (1619) and VIII (1638).

In the preface to the last Monteverdi compounding his new stylistic category of the stile concitato (as added to the stile molle e temperato of earlier decades), the most sensational features of which were the novel sound-effects of tremolo and pizzicato, introduced as symbols of passion and war. The work in which these new effects were put to their first practical test was the dramatic scene 'Combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda' (1624) from Tasso's 'Gerusalemme liberata', which — like the ballets 'Tirsi e Clori' and 'Movete' — was included in those late madrigal books. Unfortunately these by-products of Monteverdi the dramatist are, so far as we know to-day, the only survivors of his rich operatic production during his later life. The twelve operas, composed mostly for the courts of Parma and Mantua and containing works like the opera buffa 'La finta pazza Licori' (Mantua, 1627) and 'Armida' (after Tasso), the importance of which is stressed in many of Monteverdi's preserved letters, are irretrievably lost, the manuscripts having perished during the sack of Mantua (July 1630). After the production of 'La Proserpina rapita' and 'La Delia e l' Ulisse' (both in 1630) it almost looked as if Monteverdi had sworn off opera for good. He was not to return to this favourite type of composition of his until nine years later.

¹ Madrigal Book: so designated hereafter.

In the meantime world events had caused significant changes in Monteverdi's personal life. In 1627 the rule of the house of Gonzaga at Mantua expired, Vincenzo (II) dying without issue. This meant the end of Monteverdi's artistic relationship with this court, which had — although tardily — paid him an annuity ever since Vincenzo (I) had created him a citizen of Mantua. In the following year Monteverdi's younger son, Massimiliano, was arrested by the Inquisition and released from imprisonment only after painful and humiliating efforts. The sack of Mantua and the ensuing war of succession revolving around the duchies of Mantua and Montferrat resulted in a virulent outbreak of the plague, which subsided only in Nov. 1631. Monteverdi celebrated this event with a solemn Mass, which is lost. His subsequent admission to holy orders (1632) may have been connected with this shattering experience. On the title-page of his 'Scherzi musicali' (1632) he appears for the first time as "Reverendo".

The foundation of the first public opera house at Venice (Teatro San Cassiano, opening in 1637 with Ferrari-Manelli's 'Andromeda') once more rekindled Monteverdi's interest in operatic problems. His 'Arianna' was revived at the Teatro San Moisè (1639). The same year he produced on the same stage his first opera written after an interval of nine years: 'Adone' (lost). The remainder of his life was devoted chiefly to the composition of progressive bel canto operas, in which he competed successfully with his pupils Manelli and Cavalli. Of these two have survived: 'Il ritorno d' Ulisse in patria'¹ (Venice, 1641) and 'L' incoronazione di Poppea' (Venice, 1642). Both operas present a very different picture from 'Orfeo'. In them Monteverdi took a tremendous step forward in the direction of the later Neapolitan opera, creating for the singers the new style of bel canto, da capo aria and recitativo secco, reducing the orchestra to its pre-classical nucleus of string and continuo instruments, abolishing the chorus and laying the foundations for the parlando and buffo style of the 18th century (scenes of Valetto and the Damigella in 'Poppea', aria of Iro the swineherd in 'Ulisse'). 'Ulisse' may have been performed in Vienna, where the empress, Eleonora Gonzaga, one of Monteverdi's chief benefactors, lived. 'Poppea' was repeatedly performed at Venice until after 1646, and once more staged at Naples (1651) from a revised score that may or may not have been inspired by Monteverdi himself. The score of the Venice production bears unmistakable traces of his own hand and must have been revised shortly before his death.

Monteverdi died, after having once more travelled to Cremona, the city of his birth, shortly after his return to his duties, on 29 Nov. 1643, at Venice, which city paid him a last tribute with a magnificent funeral service, conducted simultaneously in St. Mark's and Santa Maria dei Frari under the musical direction of his pupils Rovetta and Marinoni. His remains were laid to rest in the chapel of St. Ambrosius (in the church of Santa Maria dei Frari).

GENERAL ASSESSMENT. — Monteverdi's importance to the development of music cannot easily be overestimated. With Beethoven, Wagner and Debussy he belongs to those composers of tremendously revolutionizing influence whose creative achievements altered the musical climate of their respective periods. Growing up during the transition from the Renaissance to the Baroque age, he alone was capable of leading music successfully from the obsolescent polyphonic tradition of the late Renaissance, through the primitive declamatory experiments of the Florentines, to the fertile new forms of opera, cantata and orchestrally inspired church music. He is heir to the august assembly of Renaissance madrigalists, yet he discards the polyphonic madrigal after 1614 and excels in his later years in the new art of thorough-bass practice. His first opera, 'Orfeo', while eclipsing Peri's and Caccini's earlier efforts by its sheer musicality, is still in many respects a product of Grecian humanism. His last, 'Poppea', on the other hand, uses for the first time an historical subject and paves the way to the bel canto opera of Alessandro Scarlatti. Although Monteverdi never wrote a single item of pure instrumental music (one of the many traits he has in common with his great German successor, Heinrich Schütz), he revolutionized orchestral technique by the invention of tremolo and pizzicato, and by the introduction of an operatic orchestra into the sphere of ecclesiastical music (Vespers, 1610). In religious music he remained more than elsewhere a child of his time. The militant and persuasive spirit of the Counter-Reformation engendered the lavish setting of psalms (as in the Vespers of 1610 and in the two late collections), whereas the stylistic consciousness of the period, deliberately bringing about the artistic ossification of the stile antico, excelled in admirable archaic reconstructions such as the three Masses of 1610, 1640 and 1651. In his later dramatic works, of which so few have survived, Monteverdi originated the grammar of a new style of dramatic characterization and symbolic musical expression. Such things as the motto del cavallo (motif of the horse) in the 'Combattimento', Arnalta's rocking lullaby ('Poppea') or Penelope's wistful lament ('Ulisse') remain characteristic possessions of an inexhaustible musical treasure-store, by which many artists of succeeding generations allowed themselves, consciously or unconsciously, to be inspired.

¹ The authenticity of this score is still questioned by some Italian scholars of recent times. See Catalogue.

OBLIVION AND RESURRECTION.—After Monteverdi's death his operas were still frequently performed on the stages of Italian opera-houses. In 1644 the Teatro San Moisè embarked on a revival of 'La Proserpina rapita', and performances of 'L'incoronazione di Poppea' took place at Venice in 1646 and at Naples in 1651. In 1650–51 the two important posthumous collections, 'Madrigali e canzonetti' (M.B., IX, see Catalogue) and 'Missa a quattro e Salmi', were published, containing the rich output of his creative life during his last years.

At this time his most important pupils — Cavalli and Rovetta — were to the fore in the sphere of Venetian opera and church music. Yet shortly after 1651 a period of complete oblivion as regards Monteverdi's life and works set in, and it lasted — save for one remarkable interruption — until 1834, the year in which C. von Winterfeld's standard work 'Gabrieli und sein Zeitalter' was published. The total unawareness of Monteverdi for nearly two centuries resembles, mutatis mutandis, the similar fate of J. S. Bach during a hundred years. The only remembrance of Monteverdi's musical achievements during these two hundred years is preserved in Padre Martini's far-reaching researches, which however dealt with the madrigals and liturgical music alone.¹

C. von Winterfeld made the first important contribution towards an historically founded knowledge of Monteverdi's early stage works ('Orfeo', 'Arianna', 'Il ballo dell'ingrate') and of his revolutionary liturgical work, 'Vespro della Beata Vergine', of 1610. W. Ambros and R. G. Kiesewetter, to whom we are indebted for the first general biographical survey of Monteverdi's life and work, discovered in the early 1860s the manuscript score of 'Il ritorno d'Ulisse in patria'. In 1887 Emil Vogel published for the first time the 'Lamento d'Arianna' as well as a selection of Monteverdi's letters in a German translation, and he collected material for a biography. He also copied and transcribed the madrigals in open score and was prevented only by his sudden death from publishing the bulk of them before the turn of the century. In 1888 Taddeo Wiel identified a manuscript score of 'L'incoronazione di Poppea', till then believed to be lost, under the misleading title of 'Nerone'. Between 1881 and 1914 Monteverdi's 'Favola d'Orfeo' (1607) appeared in several scholarly editions and practical adaptations.

After the war of 1914–18 a new period of the Monteverdi renaissance began. G. F. Malipiero edited, between 1926 and 1942, the complete edition of Monteverdi's extant works in 16 volumes and also published all his available letters in Italian, together with a collection of personal documents, theoretical treatises and prefaces which unfortunately is far from being complete (Milan, 1930). Malipiero also published, as an appendix to Vol. XIII of his edition, the second score of 'Poppea', discovered at Naples as late as 1930 by Prof. G. Gasperini. Malipiero also issued performing editions of several stage works and madrigals by Monteverdi. The writer of this article was then able to undertake the first general analysis of the complete madrigal works, describing their place in the development of the madrigal form between 1530 and 1630. He also collected and reprinted the judgments of important contemporaries and later musical theorists, such as G. B. Doni, M. Praetorius and Padre Martini, on Monteverdi's achievements, particularly in the domains of harmony, chromaticism and musical structure. Finally he undertook practical editions of 'Orfeo', 'Poppea', the Vespers of 1610 and of many smaller works. During recent years several performing editions have appeared of these principal works as well as of many smaller compositions like the 'Lamento d'Arianna', 'Ballo dell'ingrate' and 'Combattimento' (for details see Catalogue). Simultaneously some valuable treatises have been issued on the important problem — not yet entirely solved — of the actual style and method of performance in Monteverdi's time. Recent facsimile editions of the first issue of 'Orfeo' (1609) and of the Venetian manuscript score of 'Poppea' (1642), the former edited by A. Sandberger, the latter by G. Benvenuti, have proved to be invaluable to the student.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. BIOGRAPHIES

- ABERT, ANNA AMAIE, 'Claudio Monteverdi zum 300. Todestag' ('Deutsche Musikkultur', VIII, 1943–1944).
 DAVARI, STEFANO, 'Notizie biografiche del distinto Maestro di Musica Claudio Monteverdi' (Mantua, 1885).

¹ See Martini, 'Esemplare, ossia saggio fondamentale di contrappunto', Vol. II (1775–76).

- LE ROUX, MAURICE, 'Claudio Monteverdi' (Paris, 1951).
MALIPIERO, GIAN FRANCESCO, 'Claudio Monteverdi' (Milan, 1930) (containing all the preserved letters and many documents of biographical interest).
PAOLI, DOMENICO DE, 'Claudio Monteverdi' (Milan, 1945).
PRUNIÈRES, HENRY, 'Claudio Monteverdi' (Paris, 1924; English trans., London, 1926).
REDLICH, HANS F., 'Claudio Monteverdi: Leben und Werk' (Olten, 1949).
'Claudio Monteverdi', trans. by Kathleen Dale (Oxford, 1952).
SARTORI, CLAUDIO, 'Monteverdiana' (M.Q., XXXVIII, 1952, p. 399).
SCHNEIDER, LOUIS, 'Claudio Monteverdi' (Paris, 1921).
SCHRADE, LEO, 'Monteverdi. Creator of Modern Music' (London, 1951).
TIBY, OTTAVIO, 'Monteverdi' (Turin, 1942).
VOGEL, EMIL, 'Claudio Monteverdi' (V.M.W., III, 1887) (with many letters and documents of biographical interest).
WESTRUP, J. A., 'Claudio Monteverdi', in 'The Heritage of Music', Vol. III (Oxford, 1951), p. 1.

B. SPECIAL TREATISES

1. Operas and Ballets

- ADEMOLLO, ALESSANDRO, 'La bella Adrianna' (Città di Castello, 1888).
BENVENUTI, GIACOMO, 'Il manoscritto veneziano della "Incoronazione di Poppea"' (Riv. Mus. Ital., XLI, ii, 1937).
Introduction to 'Facsimile del MS IT Cl. 4, No. 439 della Bibl. Naz. di S. Marco, in Venezia' (Milan, 1938).
'"Il ritorno d'Ulisse in Patria" — non è di Monteverdi' ('Il Gazzettino', Venice, 17 May 1942).
BERTOLOTTI, ANTONIO, 'Musici alla corte de Gonzaga in Mantova del sec. XV al XVIII' (Milan, 1890).
BUKOFZER, MANFRED, 'Music in the Baroque Era — from Monteverdi to Bach' (London, 1948).
CANAL, PIETRO, 'Della musica in Mantova' (Mantua, 1858).
COURVILLE, XAVIER DE, '"L' Ariane" de Monteverdi' (Rev. Mus., Nov. 1921).
DALLAPICCOLA, LUIGI, 'Per una rappresentazione de "Il ritorno d'Ulisse"' ('Musica', II, Florence, 1943).
GALVANI, LIVIO, 'I teatri musicali di Venezia nel sec. XVII' (Milan, 1878).
GOLDSCHMIDT, HUGO, 'Studien zur Geschichte der italienischen Oper', 2 vols. (Leipzig, 1901-4) (containing an incomplete reprint of music and libretto of 'L' incoronazione di Poppea', following the Venetian sources).
'Monteverdi's "Ritorno d'Ulisse"' (S.I.M.G., IV) (1902-3).
'Monteverdi's "Ritorno d'Ulisse"' (S.I.M.G., VII) (1905-6).
GROUT, DONALD JAY, 'A Short History of Opera' (London, 1947).
HAAS, ROBERT, 'Revisionsbericht und Beiheft (IX) zu D.T.O., XXIX' (Vol. 57) ('Ritorno d'Ulisse') (Vienna, 1922).
HEUSS, ALFRED, 'Die Instrumentalstücke des Orfeo und die venezianischen Opernsinfonien' (S.I.M.G., 1905).
KREIDLER, WALTER, 'H. Schutz und der stile concitato Claudio Monteverdis' (Cassel, 1934).
KRENEK, ERNST, Articles on his edition of 'L' incoronazione' in 'Schweizerische Musikzeitung', No. 20, 1936 and 'Anbruch', XVIII, No. 4-5, 1936.
KRETZSCHMAR, HEINRICH, 'Die venezianische Oper und die Werke Cavallis' (V.M.W., VIII, 1892).
'Monteverdis Incoronazione' (V.M.W., X, 1894).
LOEWENBERG, ALFRED, 'Annals of Opera' (London, 1943).
MULLER, KARL FRIEDRICH, 'Die Technik der Ausdrucksdarstellung in Monteverdis monodischen Frühwerken' (Berlin, 1931).
REDLICH, HANS F., 'Zur Bearbeitung von Monteverdis Orfeo' ('Schweiz. Musikzeitung', No. 2-3, 1936).
'Monteverdi-Renaissance' ('Atlantis', VIII, 1936).
'Monteverdi "Incoronazione di Poppea"' ('Schweiz. Musikzeitung', No. 23, 1937).
'Notationsprobleme in Claudio Monteverdis "Incoronazione"' (Acta Mus., V, 3, 1938).
'Aufgaben und Ziele der Monteverdi-Forschung' ('Musikforschung', Vol. IV, No. 4, 1951).

- SONNECK, THEODORE, 'Catalogue of Opera Librettos' (New York, 1911).
WELLESZ, EGON, 'Cavalli und der Stil der venezianischen Oper 1640-60' (S.M.W., I, 1913).
WESTRUP, J. A., 'Monteverdi's "Lamento d'Arianna"' (M. Rev., I, ii, 1940).
'Monteverdi and the Orchestra' (M. & L., XXI, 1940, p. 230).
WIEL, TADDEO, 'I codici Contariniani' (Venice, 1888).

2. Religious Music

- ADRIO, HERMANN, 'Die Anfänge des geistlichen Konzerts' (Berlin, 1935).
BORREN, CHARLES VAN DEN, Introduction to Tirabassi's edition of the 'Missa a 4' from 'Selva morale e spirituale', 1640 (Brussels, 1914).
CAFFI, FRANCESCO, 'Storia della musica sacra nella già cappella ducale di San Marco in Venezia' (Venice, 1858).
LEICHTENTRITT, HUGO, 'Geschichte der Motette' (Leipzig, 1908).
LUPO, BETTINA, 'Sacre monodie Monteverdiane' ('Musica', II, Florence, 1943).
REDLICH, HANS F., 'Claudio Monteverdi — zum Problem der praktischen Ausgabe seiner Werke' (Vespers, 1610) ('Schweiz. Musikzeitung', No. 19-20, 1934) (also: Rass. Mus., VIII, 1935).
'Monteverdi's Religious Music' (M. & L., Oct. 1946).

3. Madrigals

- CESARI, GAETANO, 'Die Entstehung des Madrigals im 16. Jahrhundert' (Cremona, 1908).
'La musica in Cremona' (Ist. e Mon., VI, 1939).
DOHRN, ELLINOR, 'M.A. Ingegneri als Madrigalkomponist' (Hanover, 1936).
DONI, GIAMBATTISTA, 'Lyra Barberina', 2 vols. (Florence, 1763).
EINSTEIN, ALFRED, 'The Italian Madrigal' (Princeton & Oxford, 1949), passim.
HEUSS, ALFRED, 'Claudio Monteverdi als Charakteristiker in seinen Madrigalen' ('Lihencronfestschrift', 1910).
LEICHTENTRITT, HUGO, 'Claudio Monteverdi als Madrigalkomponist' (S.I.M.G., XI, 1910).
MARTINI, GIAMBATTISTA, 'Esemplare ossia saggio fondamentale di contrappunto', 2 vols. (Bologna, 1775-1776).
PANNAIN, GUIDO, Introduction to his edition of 'Cantiunculae sacrae' and 'Canzonetti a 3' (Ist. e Mon., VI, 1939).
REDLICH, HANS F., 'Monteverdi-Gesamtausgabe' ('Anbruch', X, 6, 1928).
'Claudio Monteverdi. Vol. I. Das Madrigalwerk' (Berlin, 1932).
'Das Orchester Claudio Monteverdis (Katalog) I. Instrumentalpraxis in Monteverdis Madrigalwerk' ('Musica Viva', I, Brussels, Apr. 1936).
SCHMITZ, EUGEN, 'Zur Geschichte des italienischen Continuo Madrigals im 17. Jahrhundert' (S.I.M.G., XI, 1910).
VOGEL, EMIL, 'Bibliothek der gedruckten weltlichen Vokalmusik Italiens', 2 vols. (1892) (reprinting all prefaces of the madrigal books and enumerating all contemporary reprints).
Revision (by Alfred Einstein) in 'Music Library Association Notes', II, iii (U.S.A., 1946-47).
WESTRUP, J. A., 'Monteverdi and the Madrigal' ('The Score', No. 1, Aug. 1949).
WINTERFELD, CARL VON, 'Gabrieli und sein Zeitalter', 2 vols. (1834).
ZINGERLE, HANS, 'Die Harmonie Monteverdis und seiner Zeit' (Innsbruck, 1951).

4. Fragments and Miscellaneous Works

- CIMBRO, ATTILIO, 'I madrigali di Claudio Monteverdi' ('Musica', II, Florence, 1943).
RADICIOTTI, GIUSEPPE, 'L' arte musicale in Tivoli' (Tivoli, 1921).
SOLERTI, ANGELO, 'Gli albori del melodrama' (Milan, 1905).
'Musica, balli e drammatica alla corte Medicea' (Florence, 1905).
TESSIER, A. M. D., 'Les Deux Styles de Monteverdi' (Rev. Mus., Paris, June 1922).
'Monteverdi e la filosofia dell' arte' (Rass. Mus., II, x, 1929).
TORREFRANCA, FAUSTO, '"Il lamento di Erminia" di Claudio Monteverdi' ('Inedito', II, Rome, 1944).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

OPERAS AND BALLETS

Title	Performance	First Issue (Music & Libretto)	Reprints	Modern Editions
a favola d' Orfeo.'	in. ua, ? 24 Feb. 1607.	22 Aug. 1609 (1615), Venice (lib. Mantua, 1607).	1881 (Eitner in P.G.M., IX). 1923 (G. F. Malipiero) 1927 (Sandberger, facsimile of 1616 ed.). 1930 (C.E., XI).	1905 (d'Indy). 1909 (Orefice). 1925 (Westrup, Oxford). 1934 (Respighi). 1934 & 1938 (Benvenuti). 1936 (Redlich, Zurich).
' Ariar a.'	no vio Rinuccini.	Music lost ('Lamento' only preserved, see Frag- ments) (lib. Mantua, 1608). 1638 (M.B., VIII).	1897 ff. (Torchii, VI); C.E., VIII, 2.	1929 ('Tanz der Sproden', C. Orff). 1932 (A. Toni, Milan). 1945 (E. J. Dent, London).
ballo delle ingrate.'	no iecini.	Music & lib. lost.	C.E., VII.
Prologue to 'L' idropica'	Giovanni Battista Gu- rini; Gabriele Chi-	Music & lib. lost.	C.E., VII.
' Tirsi e Clori.'	Striggio.	1619 (M.B., VII).	C.E., VII.
' La Maddalena.'	Giovanni Battista Ar-	Music & lib. lost (but see Fragments). Music & lib. lost.	C.E., VII.
' Le nozze di Peleo e d	Scipione Agnelli.	Music & lib. lost.	C.E., VII.
Tetide.'	Ercole Marigliani.	Music & lib. lost.	C.E., VII.
' Andromeda.'	Torquato Tasso.	Music & lib. lost.	C.E., VII.
' Il combattimento di Tan	Giulio Stro	Music & lib. lost.	C.E., VII.
' credi e Clorinda.'	Tasso; Asc	Music lost.	C.E., VII.
' La finta pazza Licori.'	Claudio Ac	Music lost.	C.E., VII.
' Armida'; 5 intermedii	Strozzi.	Music lost.	C.E., VII.
' & prologue. Mercurio e Marte' (Tor-	Paolo Venc	Music lost; lib. pre- served. ³	C.E., VII.
' neo).	Giacomo B.	Music lost; scenario & lib. preserved.	C.E., VII.
' Proserpina rapita.'	Badaro.	MS (copy), music & lib., Vienna, Nat. Lib., IV., Cl. 18,763. ⁴	C.E., XII.	1927 (d'Indy). 1927 (v. d. Borren). 1927 (J. A. Westrup). 1942 (Dallapiccola).
' La Delia e l' Ulisse
' (? with F. Manelli).
' Adone' (? music by Ma-
' nelli).
' Le nozze di Enco con
' Lavinia.'
' Il ritorno d' Ulisse in pa-
' tria.'
' La vittoria
' (balle'

L' op.	ion	Gior	m B	Venice, Teatro SS. Gio- vanni e Paolo, autumn 1642.	(a) MS (copy, with add. in Monteverdi's hand; Bibl. Marciana, Venice).	1904 (H. Goldschmidt, 'Stu- dien', I-II). 1931 (C.E., XIII). 1938 (G. Benvenuto, facsimile reprod.).	1904 (d'Indy). 1914 (v. d. Borren). 1927 (J. A. Westrup 1937 (Malpiero). 1937 (E. Křenek). 1937 (G. Benvenuti) 1939 (Redlich, fusi publ. 1950).
				Naples, 1651.	(b) MS (copy; Bibl. Cons. S. Pietro a Mai- ella, Naples).	1656 (in 'Ore otiose', Venice). C.E., XIII, App.

RELIGIOUS MUSIC *

Title	D.	ip	Sc	Modern Editions
'Sacrae Cantuiculae tribus vocibus ... Liber I, Lapidabant Stephanum. Veni sponsa Christi. Ego sum pastor bonus. Surge propera. Ubi duo. Quam pulchra es. Ave Maria. Domine pater. Tu es pastor (I). Tu es pastor (II). O magnum pietatis (I). Eli claman. O crux benedicta. Hodie Christus natus est. O Domine Jesu Christe (I). O Domine Jesu Christe (II). Pater venit hora. In tua patientia. Angelus ad pastores ait. Salve crux pretiosa. Quia vidisti me. Lauda Svon Salvatorem. O bone Jesu. Surgens Jesus. Qui vult venire. Justi tulerunt spolia.	Motets bassus. S.A.T. S.A.T. S.A.T. S.A.T. S.A.T. S.A.T. S.A.T. S.A.T. S.S.A. S.S.A. S.S.A. S.S.A. S.S.A. S.S.A. S.S.A. S.S.A. S.A.T. S.A.T. S.A.T. S.S.A. S.A.T. S.A.T. S.A.T. S.A.T.			910 (Terrabugio, Orvi- 932 (C.E., XIV). 939 (1st. e Mon Pannain).

* ABBREVIATIONS.—C.E. = Complete Edition of Monteverdi's Works, ed. by G. reich, 75 vols. to date (1894 ff.); Is. = e Non. — 'Istituzioni e monumenti dell' artischaft fur Musikforschung'; Torchi = 'L' arte musicale in Italia', ed. by Luigi I
* One of them being 'Gli amori d Diana e di Endimione'. * Cf. L
* For the liturgical sources of the words consult 1st. e Mon V & VI (editorial

* Ton likati alto, 1 st yet

Madrigali spirituali a quattro voci*

A venturosa notte

A i piedi havendo

Afflito.

D' empî martir.

De i miei giovenil anni.

Del sacro petto.

Ecco dicea.

Laura del ciel.

Le rose.

L' empio vestia.

L' eterno Dio.

L' human discorse.

Ma quel mendico.

Mentre la stella.

Ond' in ogni pens et.

Poi che benigno.

Sacra Santa di Di.

Scioglier m' additi.

Serpe crudel.

Tal contra Dio.

Tutt' esser vidi.

Sanctissimi Virginis Missa senis

vocibus ad Ecclesiarum choros ac

Vesperae pluribus decanandae cum nonnullis concentibus

Missa da cappella a 6 voci fatta sopra il motetto 'In illo tempore' dal Gomberti.

Vespro della Beata Vergine da concerto, composto sopra i canti fermi 6 vocibus et 6 instrumentis.

In the following 12 parts:

Domine ad adiuvandum.

Dixit Dominus.

Nigra sum.

Laudate pueri.

Pulchra es.

Lactatus sum.

Duo Seraphim.

Nisi Dominus.

Audi coelum.

ida

iata

icta Maria.

Venice.

Sept.

ff. Torchi, VI, reprint

-ta sopra Sancta Maria

Of 'Sonata s. S.M.' (Molinari, Rieti & others).

Of Vespers & Magn. I (Redlich,

Zurich, 1935, publ. Vienna,

1949; Ghedini, Milan, 1952;

L. S. i. - de, New York, 1953).

Of a. II (K. Matthaei, Zu 1942).

6 v. unaccomp. (S.S.A.T.T.B.)

with a 7th v. (B.) added in the final section of 'Agnus Dei',¹

S.S.A.T.T.B., 2 cornetti, 2 violini da braccio, 4 viole da braccio, 3.

trombs., contrabbasso da gamba

& cont.

S.S.A.T.T.B., 6 insts. & cont.²

T. & cont.

S.S.A.A.T.T.B.B. & organ.³

S.S. & cont.

S.S.A.T.T.B. & cont.⁴

T.T.T. & cont.

2 choirs, each S.A.T.T.B.

T. & cont. (with "echo" T.

part); later S.S.A.T.T.B. &

cont.

S.S.M-S.M-S.T.B.B. & cont.

S. (in unison), 2 violini da braccio,

2 cornetti, 2 trombs., 2 viole da braccio, trombone doppio &

cont.

2 choirs, each S.A.T.B. & cont.,
5 insts. & cont., S. & T. solo.
S.S.M-S.A.A.B.B., 2 vns., 3 cornetti, viola da braccio, organ; accessory insts.: 2 trombs., 2
fifare, 2 flutes, solo cornetti & vns.; vocal solos for S., A.
Quintus (T.) & 2 B.
S.S.M-S.A.A.B. & organ.

dric
Ko:

Several numbers in
'Anfänge des geistzerts', App., 1935.

Not in any of M.'s liturgical publications, but included in the following collections:
G. B. Bonometti, 1615.
Giulio Cesare Bianchi (Libro I),
1620.
Bianchi, 'Motetti' (Libro I),
1620.
Ibid.
D. Lauro Calvo, 1620.
Ibid.
Calvi, 1624.
Ibid.
Ibid.
Francesco Sammaruco ('Sacri affetti'), 1625.
Leonardo Simonetti, Venice,
1625.
Ibid.
Ibid.
S. W. Donfried ('Promptuarium musicum'), 1622.
Ibid., 1627.
Gaspere Casati, 1631.
Ibid.
'Raccolta di motetti', Gardano,
Venice, 1645.
1640 (1 May 1641), Venice.

"2 canti o tenori" & cont.
S.S.A.T.T.B. & cont.

S.S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.S.A.T.T.B. & cont.

2 v., vn. & cont.

S.S. & cont.

A. & cont.

S.S. & cont.

T. & cont.

S.B. & cont.

T. & cont.

T. & cont.

T. & cont.

S.S. & cont.

S.S. & cont.

T., 2 vns. & cont.

B. & cont.

S. & cont.

S.S.A.T.B., 2 vns. & cont.

S.T.T.T.B., 2 vns. & cont.

S.S.A.T.B. & cont.

A.T.B. & cont.

T.A.B., 2 vns. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.S.A.T.T.B., 2 vns., 4 viole

braccio or 4 trombs. & cont.

A.T.T.B. & cont.

2 S. or 2 T. & cont.

Magnificat
Sacred Monodi

Motets.

Cantate Domino.

Cantate Domino.

Christe adoramus te.

Domine ne in furore tuo.

Fugge, fuge anima mea.

O beatae viae.

Ego flos campi.

Venite, venite.

Salve o Regina.

Ego dormio.

O quam pulchra.

Currite populi.

Ecce sacrum paratum.

Salve Regina.

O bone Jesu.

Sancta Maria.

En gratulemur hodie.

Laudate Dominum.*

Venite.*

'Selva morale e spirituale'

O ciechi ciechi.*

Voi ch' ascoltate.*

E questa vita un lampo.*

Spontava il di (canzonetta morale in 5 parts).*

Chi vuol che m' innamor.*

Messa a 4 da cappella.

Gloria à 7 v. ci.

Cruci ix

Et re --

* A continuo part is added (in the nature rather of a baso eggs
; For a practical interpretation of this and the following skelet
; The Magnificat for 6 v. is only a simplified version of the pr
; Save for the last 3 bars this item is wholly identical with the Fragment; the vocal part only is extant.

Lactatus
Lactatus sum.
Nisi Dominus.
Nisi Dominus.
Lauda Jerusalem.
Lauda Jerusalem.
Lactante della Beata Vergine.

S.S.T.T.T. 2., 2 vns.
bassoon & cont.^a
S.A.T.T.B. & cont.
S.T.B. 2 vns. & con
S.A.T.T.B.^a & cont.
A.T.B. & cont.
S.A.T.T.B.^a cont.
S.A.T.T.T. & con

ADRIGALIS

of P. a

84.

84, Venice

Ediz

C.E., X, 1929.
1st. e Mod., VI
(Pannain).

(ed. G.

37, Venice

C.E., I, 1926.

5 voci
5 voci
potrai

voci
sing. but licat
et 1

del soprano alla
sing : perhaps it

Canzonette a 3 vi ci, libro primo¹⁹

Qual si può dir
Canzonette d' amore.
La fiera vista.
Raggi dov' è il mio bene.
Vita de l' alma mia.
Il mio marir.
Son questi i crespi crini.
Io mi vivea.
Su su che 'l giorno.
Quando sperai.
Come farò cuor mio.
Corse a la morte.
Tu ridi sempre mai.
Chi vuol veder.
Già mi credea.
Godi pur del bel sen.
Giù lì a quel petto.
Si come crescon.
Io son fenice.
Chi vuol veder.

Hor care canzonette.

Il primo libro de madrigali a 5 voci²⁰

Ch' io ami la mia vita.
Se per haverli oimè.
A che tormi il ben mio.
Amor per tua mercè.
Baci soavi, e cari.
Se pur non ti contenti.
Filli cara e amata.
Poi che del mio dolore.
Fumia la pastorella (i).
Almo divino raccio (ii).
Allegretti.
Allegretti.
All' hora i pastori tutti (iii).

The parts for viols or trombones are misij
The parts for viols or trombones are rasi
"A 5 voci concertato con 2 violini et un second solo T. part. Viola and trombone pau
The A. and B. parts of the second choir a
The different part-books contain widely d
12 v. 2 trombs.; a 5 instrumenti et 6 voci
Described as "a 6 voci".

5 voci
5 voci
potrai

voci
sing. but licat
et 1

del soprano alla
sing : perhaps it

Bernardo T:

Ohimè dov' è il mio ben ?

1. Ohimè dov' è?

2. Dunque ha potuto s

3. Dunque ha potuto in me

4. Ah, sciocco mondo.

Chimè d' oro.

Amor che deggio far.

Non è di gentil core.

O come sei gentile.

Io non pur vezzosetta.

O viva fiamma.

Vorrei baciarti.

Dice la mia bellissima Licori.

Ah, che non si conviene.

Ecco vicino o bella Tigre.

Non vedrò mai le stelle.

Pettché fuggi.

Tornate.

Soave libertate.

S' el vostro cor Madonna.

Interrotte speranze.

Augellin.

Vaga su spina ascosa.

Eccomi pronta ai baci.

Parlo miser o taccio.

Tu dormi.

Al lume delle stelle.

A quest' olmo.

Tirsi e Clori (ballo).

Francesca di
Guarini.Marini.
Guarini.Marini.
Marini.
Chiabrera.
Guarini.
Guarini.Chiabrera.
Marini.
Guarini.Marini.
A. Striggio,

Scherzi musicali cioè aria & madrigal instile recitativo con una ciaccona a 1 & 2 voci, raccolti da Barth. Magni.

Maledetto sia l' aspetto.

Quel sguardo sdegnosetto.

Armatevi pupille.

Begli occhi all' armi.

Eri già tutta mia.

Ecco di dolci raggi.

Et a pur dunque vero.

Io che armato sin hor.

Zefiro torna.

Armato il cor.

Rimuccini.

Music by Giulio Cesare Monteverdi
For 5 v. and cont.

For details of orchestral arrangement The continuo should be performed this Catalogue: Operas and Ballets

"Canzonetta a 2 voci, concertata da 2 violini, chitarone o ipun Canzonetta a 4 concertata a come di sopra."

S.S. & cont.

S.S. & cont.

S.S. & cont.

S.S. & cont.

A.A. & cont.

T.T. & cont.

T.T. & cont.

T.T. & cont.

T.T. & cont.

T.T. & cont.

T.T. & cont.

T.T. & cont.

T.T. & cont.

T.T.B. & cont.

T.T.B. & cont.

T.T.B. & cont.

S.S.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

S.A.T.B. & cont.

To this

* Madrigali guerrieri et amorosi con alcuni opuscoli in genere rappresentativo, che saranno per brevi episodii fra in cantisenza gesto. Libroottavo'.

A. Canti guerrieri

Altri canti d' amor.

Hor che 'l ciel e la terra (in 2 parts)

1. Hor che 'l ciel.
2. Così sol d' una chiara fronte. Gira il nemico insidioso. Ogni amante a guerrier (i). Io che nel' otio naqui (ii).

Ma per quel ampio (iii).

Riedi (iv).

Ardo avvampo.

Il combattimento di Tancredi e

Clorinda.

Il ballo 'Movete'.

?

B. (Canti amorosi)

Altri canti di Marte (in 2 parts)

1. Altri canti.
2. Due bell' occhi.

Vago augelletto.

Petrarch.

Guarini.

?

Mentra vaga Angioletta.

Ninfa che scalza il piede (in 3 parts)

1. Ninfa che scalza.
2. Qui del meco t'arresta.

3. De l' usate mie corde.

Dolcissimo uscignolo.

Chi vol haver felice.

Non havea Febo ancora (in 3 parts)

1. Non havea Febo.
2. Lamento della Ninfa

"Amor".

3. Si tra sdegnosi.

Perchè t' en fuggi o Fillide.

Non partir ritrosetta.

Su, su pastorelli vezzosi.

Il ballo delle ingrate.

?

?

?

Rinuccini

zali e canzonette a 2 e 3 voci.

ono.

stor.

torna.

Rinuccini.

Rinuccini.

A.T.B. & cont.

T.T. & cont.

B. & cont.

T. & cont.

T.T.B. & cont.

"A 8, con 2 violini", chorus S.S.A.A.T.T.B.B., orch. vns. i & ii & cont.

T.T.S., viole da braccio (S.A.T. & B. parts) & harpsichord (cont.).

"A 5 voci con 2 violini", chorus S.S.A.A.T.B., orch. vns. i & ii & cont.

"A 6 voci a 2 violini", chorus S.S.A.T.T.B., orch. vns. i & ii & cont.

"A 6 et 7 voci con 2 violini e un contrabasso", chorus S.S.A.T.T.T.B., orch. vns. i & ii, double bass & cont. (the latter obviously including another double bass part).

T.T. & cont.

T. & cont.

T.T. & cont.

T.T.B. & cont.

"A 5 voci, cantato a voce piena, alla francese", scored for S. solo, chorus S.S.A.T.B. & cont.

As above.

T.T.B. ("rappresentativo") & cont.

T.T.B.B. & cont.

T.T.B. & cont.

A.T.B. & cont.

A.A.B. & cont.

S.A.B. & cont.

"In genere rappresentativo." S. (Amore), S. (Venere), B. (Plutone), S. (una dell' ingrate), chorus S.S.S.A. (4 ombre d' Inferno); orch. 5 viole da braccio, clavicembalo, chitarrone (cont.).¹

Date of Preface

27 June 1651.

First Issue & Contemp. Reprints

1651.

Modern Editions

C.E., IX, 1939.

Scored for

S.T. & cont.

Cf. 'Scherzi musicali', 1632.

Se vittorie si belle.
Armato il cor.
Ardo.
O sia tranquilla il mar
Alcun non mi consigli.
Di far sempre gioiré.
Quando dentro al tuo io.
Non volgio amare.
Come dolce hoggi l' au
Alle danze.
Perchè se m' odiavi.
Si, si ch' io v' amo.
Su, su, pastorelli vezzo
O mio bene.
O come vaghi.
Tact Arnelin.
Ohimè ch' io cado.
La mia Turca.
Si dolce è il tormento.

T.T. & cont.
Cf. 'Scherzi mus.
T.T. & cont.
T.T. & cont.
A.T.B. & cont.
A.T.B. & cont.
T.T.B. & cont.
T.T.B. & cont.
S.S.S. & cont.
T.T.B. & cont.
T.T.B. & cont.
T.T.T. & cont.
T.T.B. & cont.
T.T.B. & cont.
T.T. & cont.
A.T.B. & cont.
S. & cont.
S. & cont.
S. & cont.

Musica tolta da i madrigali di Claudio Monteverdi (spiritual parodies of secular madrigals).

Lamento d' Erminia.
Lamento d' Arianna, madrigal version by the com (for 5 voices unaccomp. in 4 separate madrigals).
'fragment from 'La Maddalena'.
Lamento d' Apollo.
Lamento d' Arianna' (from the lost opera of 1608).

I cinque fratelli, cycle of mad
Messa solennissima.
Tre ariette.

GMEN SP ITUAL PAROD AND LLER WORK

Torquato Tz
Rinuccini.
Andreini.
Rinuccini.
? 1612
1614 (VI), Veni
1617, 'Gardano'
? 1620, 'Gardano'
1623 (a) Ve ice (ed. 'th Mag Gardano);
(b) MS (copies)
XIX, No. 114.
(c) MS at Modet
(d) MS in Rome
1628, 7
1631, 8
1634 (N. Firenze, C.
E. V xcd (V.M.W., III, 1887).

1608 Coppini).
1611 (Melchior).
1623, 1641, 1649 (Profius, from M.
1642 (Profius, from 'Selva morale', 1944 (Torrefranca. 'Inedito', Ror
C.E. VI.
C.E. XI.
C.E. XI.
E. V xcd (V.M.W., III, 1887).

res
2
Mi

MONTEVERDI, Giulio Cesare (b. Cremona, 31 Jan. 1573; d. ?).

Italian composer and organist, brother of the preceding. He was attached to his brother Claudio as musical assistant during the later years of his appointment at the court of Mantua. Giulio Cesare first enters the musical arena in 1607 as editor of Claudio's 'Scherzi musicali a 3 voci' and as author of the famous 'Dichiarazione della lettera stampata nel quinto libro de suoi madrigali', published as an appendix to that volume, which was dedicated to his patron Francesco Gonzaga, heir to the duchy of Mantua. In the following year, 1608, on the occasion of the operatic festival held at Mantua to celebrate the wedding of Francesco Gonzaga and the Infanta Margherita of Savoy, he collaborated with his brother Claudio and his Mantuan colleagues Gastoldi, Gagliano, S. Rossi and Paolo Biat in the composition of music for Guarini's play 'L' idropica', providing the music of its fourth interlude. In 1611 his opera 'Il rapimento di Proserpina', to a libretto by Ercole Marigliani, court councillor and private secretary to Duke Ferdinando Gonzaga, was performed at Casale Monferrato. Marigliani was a trusted friend of Claudio, providing him later on with the libretto of the opera 'Andromeda' (1617, now lost). On 31 July 1612, however, Giulio Cesare was ignominiously dismissed, together with his famous brother, by Francesco Gonzaga, who had by then succeeded his father Vincenzo. Giulio Cesare's dismissal from Mantua apparently terminated the years of close collaboration and artistic companionship with his brother. He seems to have taken no part in Claudio's work at St. Mark's, Venice. Some time after 1612 he was busy as organist at Castelleone, and in 1620 he was appointed maestro di cappella at the Cathedral of Salò (Lake of Garda). In the same year he published a volume of motets, 'Affetti musici'. From then on his name and fate are lost in obscurity.

Giulio Cesare Monteverdi was a progressive composer and learned musical critic, capable of acting as a convincing interpreter of Claudio's revolutionary artistic creed. The 'Dichiarazione' of 1607 is a most explicit exposition of his brother's convictions and the more valuable because Claudio's own promised theoretical treatises never matured. It is a perspicacious commentary on Claudio's preface, 'Studiosi lettori', to the fifth book of madrigals (1605), which in turn had been written in self-defence after Artusi's first attack on his music in 1600. It aims at elucidating the historic antithesis between the prima prattica and the seconda prattica (i.e. the old polyphonic style of composition with its habitual disregard of the requirements of the text as opposed to the new revolutionary method of composing, in which the poetic word regulates musical form) and at determining Claudio's own historic position as heir to a scuola eroica dating from Ockeghem to Cyprien de Rore. The whole essay is also a spirited refutation of Artusi's petty criticism of isolated passages, torn out of their context from unpublished madrigals by Claudio, and proves that a purely technical analysis of madrigalian music is inadmissible, as long as it deliberately ignores the import of the poetical text.

Little of Giulio Cesare's own music has survived. That he identified himself to a very large extent with Claudio's far-reaching experiments in style is borne out by the fact of his editing the 'Scherzi musicali' of 1607, in which for the first time a specified combination of instruments alternates with voices in the fastidiously irregular rhythms of "il canto alla francese in questo modo moderno". The few items from his own pen and included in this volume show Giulio Cesare as a skilful if not original exponent of this new madrigalian manner, obviously inspired by the compositions of Baif and his school. The remarkably early dates of his madrigal with a basso continuo 'Occhi vidi d' amore' (1607) and of his only opera (1611) are equally indicative of his active participation in the transformation of music largely inaugurated by his brother's genius.

H. F. R.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- EINSTEIN, A., 'The Italian Madrigal', 3 vols. (Princeton & Oxford, 1949), pp. 223 ff.
MALIPIERO, G. F., 'Claudio Monteverdi' (Milan, 1929), with a complete reprint of the 'Dichiarazione'.
REDLICH, H. F., 'Claudio Monteverdi', I—'Das Madrigalwerk' (Berlin, 1932), pp. 122 ff., 132 ff., 220 et passim.
'Cl. Monteverdi: Leben und Werk' (Olten, 1949), p. 20 et passim.
SCHNEIDER, L., 'Claudio Monteverdi' (Paris, 1921), p. ii et passim.
VOGEL, EMIL, 'Cl. Monteverdi' (V.M.W., III, 1887).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

(CHRONOLOGICAL)

- Scherzi 'Deh chi tace' and 'Dispiegate guance' (publ. in Claudio Monteverdi's 'Scherzi musicali', Venice, 1607; reprints 1609, 1615, 1628; cf. also C. MONTI VERDI, Catalogue of Works).¹
Madrigal 'Occhi vidi d' amore' (a 3 voci col basso continuo), publ. 1607 in the collection 'I nuovi fioretti musicali a 3 voci, di Amante Franzoni' (Venice, 1607).
Intermedium IV for Guarini's 'L' idropica' (Mantua, 2 June 1608; presumably lost).
Opera 'Il rapimento di Proserpina' (libretto by Ercole Marigliani), perf. Casale Monferrato, 1611; presumably lost.
'Affetti musici'—ne quali si contengono motetti a 1, 2, 3, 4 et 6 voci, per concertarli nel basso per l' organo' (Venice, 1620), 25 compositions altogether.

MONTFORD, Cornelle de. See BROCKLAND.

Montgomerie, Alexander. See Scott (F. G., song).

¹ It is possible also to attribute the concluding ballet 'De la bellezza' to Giulio Cesare's authorship.

MONTGOMERIE, Hugh (afterwards 12th Earl of Eglinton) (b. ? , 29 Nov. 1739; d. ? , 14 or 15 Dec. 1819).

Scottish amateur composer. He joined the army and became a colonel. On succeeding to the title and estates in Ayrshire he devoted himself to musical studies and became a fair composer. He was a prominent figure in Edinburgh musical society and patronized the Gow family.

Some of his compositions appear in the Gow publications, and in 1796 Nathaniel Gow issued a thin folio volume (24 pp.) entirely of his Strathspeys. It was issued anonymously, its title being 'New Strathspey Reels . . . composed by a gentleman, and given with permission to be published by Nathaniel Gow'. 'Ayrshire Lasses', his best-known Strathspey, is included in this work. Niel Gow dedicated his 'Fourth Collection of Strathspey Reels' (1800) to him. A volume of his vocal airs and marches, apparently from his hitherto unpublished manuscripts, was issued at Glasgow about 1835-40 with pianoforte arrangements by John Turnbull. Mrs. John Hunter had in most instances supplied the words. F. K.

MONTGOMERY, (Robert) Bruce (b. Chesham Bois, Bucks, 2 Oct. 1921).

English composer and author. He was educated in London, at Merchant Taylors' School, and St. John's College, Oxford, where he took the B.A. for modern languages in 1943. In 1940-43 he was organist of his Oxford college and in 1943-45 assistant master at The Schools, Shrewsbury. As an author he has not written on musical subjects, but published a number of detective novels under the pseudonym of Edmund Crispin. His compositions include the following:

'Mary Ambree' for chorus & orch.
'On the Resurrection of Christ' for chorus & orch.
'Christ's Birthday', suite of carols for chorus & orch.
Overture 'Bartholomew Fair' (Ben Jonson) for orch.
Concertino for stg. orch.
Pf. pieces.
Sunday songs, partsongs, carols, anthems, &c. E. B.

MONTICELLI, Angelo Maria (b. Milan, c. 1710; d. Dresden, 1764).

Italian male soprano singer. He first appeared in opera at Rome in 1730 and, having a beautiful face and figure, began in that city, where no women were then allowed on the stage, by representing female characters. His voice was clear and sweet, and singularly free from defects. "He was", says Burney, "a chaste performer, and . . . a good actor." In 1731 and 1732 he appeared at Venice with Carestini, Bernacchi and Faustina Bordoni. He went to London in the autumn of 1741 and made his début there in the pasticcio 'Alessandro in Persia'. On 1 May 1742, after other attempts, Pergolesi's 'Olimpiade' (originally produced in Rome in 1735, the year before the composer's death) was brought out in London for the first time under the title of 'Meraspe, overo L' Olimpiade'. It was more or less a pasticcio, with the libretto altered by Paolo Antonio Rolli, but most of the original airs were retained. The first in Monticelli's part, "Tremende, oscuri, atroci", was sung for ten years after the end of the run of this opera, and the whole scene, in which "Se cerca se dice" occurs, was rendered so interesting by the manner in which it was acted as well as sung by Monticelli that the union of poetry and music, expression and gesture, have seldom had a more powerful effect on an English audience.¹

Monticelli continued to perform in London through 1743 and in 1744 he sang, in 'Alfonso', songs of greater bravura execution than he had previously attempted. During 1745 and 1746 he still belonged to the Opera in London, and in the latter year he sang in Gluck's 'Caduta de' giganti', and described one of his songs as an aria tedesca owing to the richness of the accompaniment. Galuppi's 'Antigono' (produced on 13 May) was the last opera in which Monticelli appeared on the English stage. He sang at Naples with Regina Mingotti in the same year and afterwards in Vienna. In 1756 Hasse engaged him for the Dresden theatre.

A capital mezzotint portrait of Monticelli was scraped by Faber after Casali. J. M.

MONTIGNY-RÉMAURY, (Fanny Marc-elline) Caroline (b. Pamiers, Ariège, 22 Jan. 1843; d. Pamiers, 29 June 1913).

French pianist. Her elder sister and god-mother, Elvira Rémaury (Mme Ambroise Thomas), an excellent pianist, first taught her music; but, anxious to secure her every advantage, entered her in 1854 at the Paris Conservatoire, in the pianoforte class of Le Couppey. In 1858 she gained the first prize for pianoforte, in 1859 a medal for solfège and in 1862 the first prize for harmony. Shortly after, she played Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor at one of the concerts of the Conservatoire, and her animated and vigorous interpretation at once placed her in the first rank of French pianists. In 1866 she married Léon Montigny, a political writer on the staff of 'Le Temps', but was left a widow in 1871. She was for long the head of the pianoforte virtuosi of France, and her visits to England and tours on the Continent extended her reputation over Europe. G. C.

See also Cellier (ded.).

MONTRE. See ORGAN STOPS.

MONTSAIVATGE, Xavier (b. Gnona, 1912).

Spanish composer. He studied composition at Barcelona with Millet Morera and Pahissa, and the violin with Costa. In 1934 he was awarded the Concepción Rabell foundation prize for his three Impromptus for pianoforte. In 1936 he won the Felipe Pedrell composition prize for small burlesque pieces ('Pequeñas piezas burlescas') for violin and string quartet. In 1941 he published three Divertimenti for pianoforte — the first work which the composer himself considered to be of original content: he marks this as the year in which he was definitely launched as an independent composer. Owing to the presence at Barcelona of the young dancer Paul Goubé of the Paris Opéra and Yvonne Alexander, who had created a company, Montsalvatge became attracted to ballet music and wrote the following for the company: 'Pastoral', 'Leyenda', 'La Vénus d'Elne' and the three-act ballet 'Manfred'. His success with this art-form prompted him to write music for the orchestra and for the stage, and he wrote music for a magic opera, 'El gato con botas' ('Puss-in-Boots'), to a libretto by Nestor Luján. The opera, which was produced in 1947 in the Llico opera-house at Barcelona, aroused considerable comment among the critics and was a success with the public. It was repeated in 1948.

¹ Burney. The air is given at length in O.H.M., IV, 221 ff.

In 1946 he gained the collaboration of the well-known Catalan singer Mercedes Plan-tada, who gave the first performance of his 'Canciones negras' ('Negro Songs') both in Madrid and Barcelona. These songs, which have undoubted lyrical charm, are well written for the voice. They have been successfully performed in the U.S.A. and Canada by Nan Merriman. Among the chamber music composed by Montsalvatge special mention should be made of the sparkling Concertino for string quartet and pianoforte, which was proxime accessit for the National Music Composition Prize of 1946. In addition to the 'Whimsical Variations on a Theme by Farnaby', which were performed for the first time in the British Institute at Barcelona, he has written for the virtuoso Henry Szeryng a 'Poema concertante' for violin and orchestra, which received its first performance at Barcelona in 1952.

Among the orchestral works of Montsalvatge the most ambitious up to 1952 has been the Mediterranean Symphony, which was awarded the City Council of Barcelona Extraordinary Prize in 1949. It was performed by the Municipal Orchestra under Eduardo Toldrá. In this symphony the composer has followed the inspiration of Berlioz and created music which, by its sinuous melody and rhythmic impressionism, suggests the peculiar Mediterranean qualities evoked by the prose of Gabriel Miró. In Montsalvatge's music, however, one always notes a mysterious exotic strain which means a kind of nostalgia or longing for the exciting and sensual rhythms of Habana and Cartagina de la Indias. This strain is marked in the humble fishermen's habaneras which he collected on the Catalan coast and contributed to the delightful 'Album de habaneras', little gems of exotic song that have remained in the folk memory of the fishermen ever since the days when their fathers and grandfathers sailed to Cuba in windjammers. They explain the tensions that occur in the composer's characteristically Mediterranean temperament and help us to understand the dramatic qualities of his 'Cuarteto indiano' (1952), which was awarded the Samuel Ros Prize and played for the first time in Madrid in the spring of 1952 by the National Ensemble Group. In this work, with its brilliant instrumental writing, its clear and classic outline and its touches here and there of exotic colour, the composer has created a definite style of his own which, like 'Atlántida', the poem by Vndaguer, combines Catalan lyricism with the adventurous spirit of a pioneer sailing out to explore uncharted seas. The work, with its intimate and subtle qualities, was performed by the National Ensemble on the quartet of Stradivari instruments in the Royal Palace, Madrid, and was broadcast to the Spanish public. w. s.

MONUMENTA LEODIENSIIUM MUSI-CORUM. A collection published at Liège under the supervision of Dr. R. Bragard, professor at the Brussels Conservatoire Royal, and devoted to ancient music written by composers belonging to the former principality of Liège. So far only one volume has appeared, the 'Livre d'Orgue' (1695) of Lambert Chaumont. A. L. C.

MONUMENTA MUSICAE BELGICAE. A collection of ancient music by Flemish and other composers who lived in the southern Netherlands (the Belgium of to-day), published at Antwerp by the Vereniging voor Muziekgeschiedenis (Musicological Society).

The following volumes have appeared so far:

Vol. I. J. B. Lœillet: Complete works for the harpsichord.

Vol. II. A. van Kerckhoven: Works for the organ.

Vol. III. J. H. Fiocco: Works for the harpsichord.

Vol. IV. C. Guillet, J. de Macque, C. Luythou: Works for the organ or for 4 instruments.

Vol. V. J. Boutmy: Works for the harpsichord.

Vol. VI. D. Raick & C. J. vom Helmont: Works for organ or harpsichord.

Vols. I-IV are edited by Joseph Watelet, Vols. V & VI by him and Suzanne Clercx.

Apart from this series, the Vereniging has also published:

W. de Fesch: 2 Sonatas for cello and harpsichord.

J. B. Lœillet: 2 Sonatas for flute and harpsichord.

R. Schrijver: 19 Psalms.

Willem Vermooten: 6 Sacred Songs.

A. L. C.

MONUMENTA MUSICAE BYZANTINAE. The publication of this authoritative edition of the liturgical music of the ancient Byzantine Church was undertaken in 1930 through the instrumentality of the Danish Academy, and is issued from Copenhagen by the Union Académique Internationale (Brussels). An editorial committee was formed consisting of Professor Carsten Høeg of Copenhagen (Administrative Director), Professor Egon Wellesz, then of Vienna (Director of the Scientific Research Department), and Professor H. J. W. Tillyard of Cardiff.¹ In the following year a conference was held in Copenhagen by invitation of the Danish Academy to determine questions of method. In 1938 the critical edition of the 'Lectio-naria', edited by C. Høeg and Silva Lake, was included in the M.M.B. During the 1939-45 war Professor Thomas Whittenore, Director of the Byzantine Institute at Boston, Mass., undertook the publication of two volumes of the M.M.B., of Vol. II of the 'Subsidia' and Vol. IV of the 'Transcriptions'. In 1950 co-operation was reached between the monks of Grottaferrata and the editors of the M.M.B., and the Abbot of Grottaferrata joined the editorial committee.

The whole series of the 'Monumenta' comprises four types of publication: facsimiles; transcriptions; editions of the lessons from the Prophets, the Epistles and the Gospels; critical studies. The volumes issued to date are as follows:

PRINCIPAL SERIES

Vol.

1. 'Sticherarium', ed. C. Høeg, E. Wellesz & H. J. W. Tillyard (facsimile of musical MS in Vienna, with Introduction) (Copenhagen, 1935).
2. 'Hirmologium Athoum' (facsimile of MS at the Iviron Monastery, Mount Athos). Introduction by C. Høeg (1938).
3. 'Hirmologium e Codice Cryptensi E. γ ii' (Part I: Facsimile of a Grottaferrata MS) (Rome, 1950).

SUBSIDIA

- 1, fasc. i. 'Handbook of the Middle Byzantine Musical Notation', by H. J. W. Tillyard (1935).
- 1, fasc. ii. 'La Notation ecphonétique', by C. Høeg (1935).
2. 'Eastern Elements in Western Chant', by E. Wellesz (Vol. I of the American Series) (Boston, Mass., 1947).
3. 'La Musique byzantine chez les Slaves', by R. Palikarova Verdeil (Copenhagen, 1953).

TRANSCRIPTIONS

1. 'Die Hymnen des Sticherarium für September', transcribed by E. Wellesz (112 hymns in European notation, with commentary) (1936).
2. 'The Hymns of the Sticherarium for November', transcribed by H. J. W. Tillyard (88 hymns in European notation, with commentary and critical notes) (1938).
3. 'The Hymns of the Octoechus', Part I, transcribed by H. J. W. Tillyard (1940).
4. 'Twenty Canons from the Trinity Hirmologium', transcribed by H. J. W. Tillyard (Vol. II of the American Series) (Boston, 1951).
5. 'The Hymns of the Octoechus', Part II, transcribed by H. J. W. Tillyard (1949).
6. 'The Hymns of the Hirmologium', Part I, transcribed by A. Ajoutanti & M. Stohr, rev. and annotated by Carsten Høeg (1952).

¹ Author of the article BYZANTINE MUSIC in this Dictionary.

LECTIONARIA

Vol.

- 1, fasc. i. 'Prophetologium', ed. C. Høeg and G. Zuntz (1939).
- 1, fasc. ii. 'Prophetologium', ed. C. Høeg and G. Zuntz (1940).
- 1, fasc. iii. 'Prophetologium', ed. C. Høeg and G. Zuntz (1952).

H. C. C., adds.

MONUMENTA MUSICES SACRAE IN POLONIA (KOMPOZYCE KOŚCIELNE WZOROWYCH MISTRZÓW MUZYCZNYCH Z EPOKI KLASYCZNEJ W POLSCE). A collection comprising sacred choral compositions by representative Polish composers of the 16th and 17th centuries, selected from manuscripts preserved in Polish cathedrals, particularly in that of Cracow. The four volumes, published at Poznań between 1885 and 1896, were edited, with a historical preface (printed in Polish and French), and with notes (in Polish) on each of the items included, by the Abbé Józef Surzyński, director of the choir of Poznań cathedral. The works are all for four-part choirs except where indicated as for five-part.

Vol. I (1885)

Historical preface.

Szadek, Tomasz, 'Missa in melodiam moteti Pismene' (1580).

Zieleński, Mikołaj, 'Adoramus te Christe' (1611).

Vol. II (1887)

Gorczycki, Grzegorz G., 'Ave Maria (Offertorium toni peregrini)'.

Zieleński, M., 'In Nativitate Domini'.

Gorczycki, G. G., 'Sepulto Domino'.

Zieleński, M., 'In Monte Oliveti' (5-pt.).

Szamatulski, Wacław, 'Ego sum Pastor bonus'.

Zieleński, M., 'In festo Inventionis S. Crucis'.

Felsztynski, Sebastian, 'Prosa ad rorate. Tempore Paschali'.

Zieleński, M., 'In festo SS. Trinitatis. Benedicimus Deum coeli' (5-pt.).

Vol. III (1889)

Leopolda, Martinus (Marcin ze Lwowa), 'Missa Paschalis' (5-pt.).

Vol. IV (1896)

Pękiel, Bartłomiej, 'Missa Pulcherrima ad instar Praenestini' (1669).

K. D.

MONUMENTS DE LA MUSIQUE FRANÇAISE AU TEMPS DE LA RENAISSANCE. A collection including sacred and secular vocal music by French composers of the Renaissance, edited by Henry Expert and published by the Negib Sursock Foundation (Editions Maurice Senart), Paris, from 1924 onwards.

Vol.

1. Le Jeune, C., 'Octonaires de la vanité et inconstance du monde' (I-VIII).
2. Certon, P., Four-part Masses: 'Sur le pont d'Avignon', 'Adieu me', 'Regnum mundi'.
3. Le Blanc, D., 'Airs de plusieurs musiciens réduits à 4 parties'.
4. Bertrand, A. de, 'Premier Livre des Amours de Pierre de Ronsard' (I-XXIX).
5. Bertrand, A. de, 'Premier Livre des Amours de Pierre de Ronsard' (XX-XXXV).
6. Bertrand, A. de, 'Second Livre des Amours de Pierre de Ronsard' (I-XXV).
7. Bertrand, A. de, 'Troisième Livre de chansons' (I-XXV).

8. Le Jeune, C., 'Octonaires de la vanité et inconstance du monde' (IX-XII).
 'Psaumes des Meslanges de 1612.'
 'Dialogue à sept parties' (1564).
 9. Goudimel, C., Four-part Masses, 1558: 'Audi filia', 'Tant plus ie metz', 'De mes ennus'.
 10. L'Estocart, Paschal de, 'Premier Livre des Octonaires de la vanité du monde', 1582. K. D.

Monvel, Jacques Marie Boutet de. See Auber (libs.). Dalayrac (6 libs.).

MONZANI, Tebaldo (Theobald) (b. ?; d. London, 14 June 1839).

Italian flautist, flute maker and publisher. He was established in London by 1787 or earlier and published a number of his own compositions and other works. From 1787 to 1788 he was at 10 Princes Street, Cavendish Square, but during 1789 and 1790 he appears to have employed James Ball of 1 Duke Street, Grosvenor Square, to print and sell some of his publications. In 1792 his works give the address of 6 Coventry Street, corner of Coventry Court, Haymarket; in 1793, 6 Great Marlborough Street, and Ball's address, Duke Street; in 1795, 16 Down Street, Piccadilly; in 1796 to Feb. 1798, 5 Hamilton Street, Piccadilly; from Feb. 1798 to early in 1800, 2 Pall Mall.

For a few years Monzani was in partnership with Giambattista Cimadoro as Monzani & Cimadoro at 2 Pall Mall, 1800 to about 1803, and at 3 Old Bond Street, about 1803 to 1805 (Cimadoro's name appearing in the directories variously as Cringdon, Cundon and Cungdor). The partnership was then dissolved, and Monzani continued as Monzani & Co. until c. 1807, when the firm became Monzani & Hill at 3 Old Bond Street until 1813, at 24 Dover Street until c. 1819 and at 28 Regent Street (Regent Circus) until 1829, with additional premises at 100 Cheapside from about 1808 to 1814. When this partnership too was dissolved in 1829, Henry Hill continued as musical-instrument maker, music seller and publisher at 28 Regent Street from 1829 to 1844, and 3 Old Bond Street, c. 1844 to 1845, the firm being known in the later years as Hill & Co. and Hill & Sons. Henry Hill died in Jan. 1839, and the stock-in-trade was sold by auction in May 1845.

Monzani and his successors issued a great deal of sheet music, much of it being Italian vocal pieces, while their reputation as flute makers was of the highest. Monzani acquired some fame as an orchestral flautist and wrote 'Instructions for the German Flute' (1801) and other works; but his son Theobald excelled his father in taste and execution, and in 1826 was referred to in W. N. James's 'A Word or Two on the Flute' as "perhaps the most promising performer in England". W. G. S.

MOOD¹ (Lat. modus; Ital. modo; old Eng. "mode" or "moode"). A term employed in medieval music to indicate the relative duration of notes, as between the large and the long, the long and the breve. G.

See also Notation.

MOODIE, Alma (b. Brisbane, 12 Sept. 1900; d. Frankfurt o/M., 7 Mar. 1943).

Australian violinist. She studied in Brussels (1907-10) with César Thomson, and her style recalled the exceptionally easy technical command of that master. Her performance of Busoni's violin Concerto at a Royal Philharmonic concert in London in 1934 made a deep impression, as much on account of its violinistic excellence as for the familiarity it showed with the composer's unusual idiom.

Alma Moodie, who was very well known in Germany, was long on terms of close friendship with the most important figures of the German musical world. She married a German lawyer, Dr. Stengler, and lived at Cologne. The claims of family life led her to give up the career of the travelling virtuoso, but she still played occasionally and held master classes for advanced violinists at the Conservatory of Frankfurt o/M. F. B.

MOODY, Charles Harry (b. Stourbridge, Worcestershire, 22 Mar. 1874).

English organist. He received his early training at Bangor Cathedral and after holding various posts (acting organist, Wells Cathedral, 1894-95; Wigan Parish Church, 1895-99; Holy Trinity, Coventry, 1899-1902) he was appointed to Ripon Cathedral in 1902. There he has maintained the music at a high standard, being notably successful as a trainer of boys. It was due mainly to his influence that during the war of 1914-18 and post-war periods Ripon was one of the few cathedrals that, in the face of difficulties and discouragement, maintained its normal quota of week-day choral services. From 1912 to 1924 Moody conducted the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society. He has long served as external examiner for the R.C.M., the Royal Manchester College of Music and the United Universities Board.

In 1920 Moody was awarded the C.B.E. and in the same year made an Honorary Fellow of the R.C.O. The Lambeth degree of D.Mus. was conferred on him in 1923, and he became F.S.A. in 1927. He holds the Masonic rank of Grand Organist of England. He has written church music and is the author of a book, 'The Choir Boy in the Making'. H. G.

MOODY, Fanny (b. Redruth, Cornwall, 23 Nov. 1866; d. Dundrum, Co. Dublin, 21 July 1945).

English soprano singer. She was taught singing by Charlotte Sainton-Dolby at her private academy. On 25 Apr. 1885 she sang the principal soprano music in her mistress's last composition, 'Florimel', a cantata for female voices, at a Memorial Concert at Prince's Hall, under Sainton. In Feb. 1887 she made her début as Arline in Balfe's 'Bohemian Girl' at Liverpool with the Carl Rosa Company, and on 30 Apr. appeared very successfully as Micaela at Drury Lane Theatre in London. After singing in the provinces with that company for three years she reappeared at Drury Lane in 1890 as Mignon, Margaret, etc.

¹ For "Mood" in its normal modern sense see EXPRESSION (1).

Fanny Moody was married to the bass Charles Manners on 5 July 1890, and in Oct. sang in Italian. In 1892 she was the original English Tatiana in Tchaikovsky's 'Eugene Onegin'. She accompanied her husband on all his tours and sang in his London seasons, in addition to parts mentioned, Elizabeth, Elsa, Brunnhilde in 'Siegfried' and Juliet. On 26 Sept. 1902 she was the heroine on the production of Pizzi's 'Rosalba' at Covent Garden; on 22 Sept. 1903 Militza on the production at Covent Garden of M'Alpin's 'Crescent and the Cross', founded on Coppée's 'Pour la couronne', which won the £250 prize offered by the artists; on 17 June 1904 she sang the part of Senta in the revival of Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman' at Drury Lane, etc. The possessor of a pleasant light soprano voice, an actress and singer of great charm, Fanny Moody excelled in the poetic and pathetic parts formerly associated with Christine Nilsson. A. C.

MOOKE (Mocke), Marie. See PLEYEL (3).

MOONIE, William (Beaton) (b. Stobo, Peeblesshire, 29 May 1883).

Scottish composer. He is the son of a musician, James A. Moonie, famous in the Edinburgh of his day, and founder of a well-known Scottish choir. W. B. Moonie was educated at Daniel Stewart's College, Edinburgh, and Edinburgh University, where he studied under Frederick Niecks. He took his Mus.B. degree in 1902, and was awarded the Bucher Scholarship, which in 1905 took him for three years to Frankfurt o/M. In 1908 he returned to Edinburgh, where he received his first teaching appointment. In 1923, on his father's death, he took over "Mr. Moonie's Choir". Edinburgh University conferred its Mus.D. degree upon him in 1947 for his services to Scottish music.

The following are Moonie's outstanding works: opera, 'The Weird of Colbar' (libretto by George M. Reith); choral ode, 'Caledonia'; choral ballad, 'Glenara'; 2 Symphonies (No. 1 entitled 'Deeside'); tone poems, 'Riders of the Sidhe' and 'Springtide on Tweed'; concert overture '1745'; chamber music, including Trio for violin, cello and pianoforte; a number of songs. M. L.

"MOONLIGHT" SONATA. This label became attached to Beethoven's pianoforte

'Sonata quasi una fantasia' in C# minor, Op. 27 No. 2, by a critic's fanciful description of the effect of the first movement upon himself. The work has no connection with a picture, 'Die Beterin' ('The Pleader'). W. M.

MOÓR, Emanuel (b. Kecskenét, 19 Feb. 1863; d. Vevey, Switzerland, 21 Sept. 1931).

Hungarian pianist, composer and inventor. He grew up in a musical atmosphere and showed his musical talents early. His parents allowed him to learn the organ, first locally and then in Prague, where he won a gold medal at the final examinations. Subsequently he studied in Vienna and Budapest, and there followed a period of musical activity at Szeged, where he gave lessons, conducted performances of light operas and conceived the idea of becoming an architect. He toured Europe and America (1885-87) as accompanist (with Lilli Lehmann), conductor and pianist. His first marriage took place in 1888, and after a stay in Sussex he settled in Switzerland. An important event in his life was his meeting there with Henri Marteau, who asked him to write a violin Concerto for him. The next commission came from Casals, for a cello Concerto, and this was followed by works for Ysaye and Carl Flesch.

The first world war temporarily interrupted Moór's feverish activity as a composer, and after his second marriage to the pianist Winifred Christie in 1923 he was occupied mainly with his invention, the Emanuel Moór Pianoforte. He was also occupied with other instrumental problems, writing a pamphlet on the reconstruction of the orchestra and devising a system of string-instrument building.¹

J. S. W.

BIBL.² — HILLER, P. 'Andreas Hofer' (N.Z.M., Vol. XLIX, 29 Nov. 1902).

LANGER, VIKTOR, 'Moór Manó szimfóniájáról' ('Of Emanuel Moór's Symphony' ('Művészeti Lapok', Vol. III, 26 Jan. 1896).

MILLIOUB, M. M., 'Emanuel Moór' ('Gazette de Lausanne', No. 309, 2 1909).

TOVEY, DONALD F., 'The Pianoforte Music of Emanuel Moór' (M. & L., III, 1922, p. 29).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

OPERAS

'La Pompadour', 2 acts (libretto by L. F. Ferri & Anita Moór, after Alfred de Musset), prod. Cologne, Municipal Theatre, 22 Feb. 1902; perf. London, Lyceum Theatre, 26 Jan. 1911.

'Andreas Hofer', 4 acts, prod. Cologne, Municipal Theatre, 9 Nov. 1902.

'Hochzeitglocken', 1 act, prod. Cassel, 2 Aug. 1908; perf. London, Lyceum Theatre ('Wedding Bells'), 26 Jan. 1911.

'Der Goldschmied von Paris', 3 acts (lib. by T. Reibbaum).

'Hertha', 3 acts (lib. by D. Hollins). Unfinished.

¹ MSS of his compositions are preserved in the Central Music Library in London. There is a MS Reference Catalogue of Compositions in which works without opus numbers are listed with numbers given by Mrs. Winifred Christie-Moór.

² For bibliography dealing with Moór's invention see EMANUEL MOÓR PIANOFORTE.

CHORAL WORKS

- Op.*
 127. Mass for solo voices, chorus & orch.
 138. 'Stabat Mater' for contralto, women's chorus, orch. or organ (1911).
 — 'Roi' for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1912).
 151. Requiem for 4 solo voices, chorus & orch. (1916).
 — 'Spring Songs' for unaccomp. chorus.
 — 'Benediction', anthem for 2-part chorus & organ (1914).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

16. Serenade for stgs. (1881).
 — 'Consolation' No. 1 (1887).
 — Funeral March, F mi. (1887).
 — 'Frühlingszauber' (1888).
 — Symphony No. 1, E mi. (1893).
 24. Concert Overture, D mi. (1893).
 38. 'Barcarolle' for stgs. (1895).
 — Symphony No. 2, C ma. ('Kossuth') (1895).
 45. Symphony No. 3, D mi. (1895).
 — Symphony No. 4, Bb ma. (1898).
 53. Symphony No. 5, A mi. (1901).
 63. Improvisation on an Original Theme (1906).
 65. Symphony No. 6, E mi. (1906).
 67. Symphony No. 7, C ma. (1906).
 75. 'Pensées symphoniques' (1908).
 — 'Chant funèbre' (1910).
 90. 'Cinq Impressions en forme de suite' (1910).
 92. Symphony No. 8, A mi. (1908-10).
 93. Rhapsody (1909).
 124. 'Quatre Esquisses'.
 132. 'Chant héroïque' (1911).
 — 'Consolation' No. 2.
 — Hungarian Dance, C mi.

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

25. Adagio for vn.
 — Concerto No. 1 for pf. (1886).
 46. Concerto No. 2, C mi., for pf. (1888).
 57. Concerto No. 3, Db ma., for pf. (1906).
 — Concerto No. 1, for vn.
 61. Concerto No. 1, E ma., for cello (1905).
 62. Concerto No. 2, G ma., for vn. (1905).
 64. Concerto No. 2, for cello.
 66. Concerto No. 3, for vn. (1906-7).
 69. Concerto for 2 cellos (for Casals and Suggia) (1908).
 70. Triple Concerto for vn., cello & pf. (1907).
 72. Concerto No. 4, for vn. (1908).
 73. Suite for vn. & stgs. (1907-8).
 78. Rhapsody No. 1, G mi., for cello.
 84. Rhapsody for vn. (1907).
 85. Concerto No. 4, Eb ma., for pf. (1911).
 88. 'Concertstück' No. 1 for pf. (? 1908).
 98. 'Concertstück' for vn. & cello (1909).
 — Rhapsody No. 2, A ma., for cello (1911).
 — Concerto for vn. & pf. (1911).
 113. 'Concertstück' for pf. (1909).
 141. Concerto for harp (1913).
 143a. 'Concertstück' for vn.
 143b. Rhapsody, B ma., for pf.
 — 'Ballade', E ma., for cello (1914).
 — Suite, A ma., for pf. (1914).
 — Concerto for stg. 4tet (1916).
 — 'Concertstück', C# mi., for viola.
 — Concerto for viola.

VOICE AND ORCHESTRA

104. 'La Jeune Tarantine' for mezzo-soprano.

CHAMBER MUSIC

19. Quintet, C mi., for 2 vns., viola, cello & pf.
 59. String Quartet No. 1, A ma. (1905).
 81. Trio No. 1, C mi., for vn., cello & pf. (1908).
 87. String Quartet No. 2.
 89. Trio No. 2 for vn., cello & pf.
 95. Suite for 4 cellos (1909).
 97. Quintet, C ma., for 2 vns., viola, cello & pf.
 103. Suite for double stg. & wind 5tet.
 110. Suite for 2 cellos.
 — Prelude and Fugue for stg. 4tet. (1917).
 133. Suite for 3 vns.
 144. Suite for 2 vns. & pf. (1912).
 — Suite for 2 vns. (1914).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

- 12 Sonatas (Opp. 12, 21, 23, 26, 51, 54, 56, 74 & 4 without op.).
 4 Suites (Opp. 26, 50, 52 & 142).
 3 Ballades (without op.).
 Also various pieces.

VIOLA AND PIANOFORTE

- 'Romance' (1895).

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

- 7 Sonatas (Opp. 22, 53, 55, 76, 148 & 2 without op.).
 2 Suites (Op. 117 & unfinished).
 Also various pieces.

PIANOFORTE SOLO

- 3 Sonatas (Opp. 60, 103 & without op.).
 2 Suites (Opp. 77 & 106).
 Studies (Opp. 42, 43 & 114).
 Variations (Opp. 17, 24 & 80).
 Hungarian Dances (Opp. 31, 32 & 41).
 Also numerous pieces.

TWO PIANOFORTES

- 4 Pieces.

HARP MUSIC

- Op.*
 68. 2 Solos (? 1908)
 1. Sonata.
 2. Prelude.
 72. 4 Preludes (? 1908).
 74. Sonata for 4 harps.
 82. 'Dix Esquisses' (1909).
 99. 3 Pieces.
 — Sonata, A mi. (1908).
 — Suite for 4 harps (1910).
 — 'Concertstück'.
 — 2 Studies.

SONGS

- 4 Sets of Collected Songs (Opp. 88, 91, 112 & 118).
 15 Songs (German poets).
 14 Songs (French poets).
 9 Songs (early English poets).
 6 Songs (later English poets).
 'Gitanjali' (Tagore).
 11 Biblical Songs.

Also many others.

See also Christie (Winifred). Emanuel Moór Piano-forte.

MOOR, Karel (b. Bělohrad, 26 Dec. 1873).

Czech conductor, composer and writer. His works include: two operas, 'Vij' (1903), based on Gogol's tale of witchcraft, and 'Hjerdís' (1905), after Ibsen's play 'The Vikings at Helgeland'; incidental music for plays; the symphonic poems 'Polonia' (reminiscences of Mickiewicz), 'Requiem' (the life of Smetana) and 'The Sea'; Polish dances for orchestra; a string Quartet; songs, etc. Moor also wrote a novel of musical life, 'Karel Martens'.

R. N.

MOORE, Douglas Stuart (b. Cutchogue, N.Y., 10 Aug. 1893).

American composer and author. His early education took place at Hotchkiss School, and later he went to Yale University, where he received the B.A. degree in 1915 and the B.Mus. in 1917. He served as lieutenant in the U.S. Navy in the first world war, during which period he composed some amusing songs that appeared under the title of 'Songs my Mother Never Taught Me'. Demobilized in 1919, he went to Europe and made further studies in music with Vincent d'Indy at the Schola Cantorum in Paris and with Nadia Boulanger, with whom he studied the organ.

In 1921 Moore was appointed Director of Music at the Art Museum of Cleveland, where in his spare time he worked in the composition master classes of Ernest Bloch. In 1925 a Pulitzer Fellowship enabled him to return to Europe for further study in composition. In 1934 he won a Guggenheim Fellowship and in 1946 he became President of the National Institute of Arts and Letters. He is hon. Mus. Doc. of the Cincinnati Conservatory (1946) and of Rochester University (1947). He is at present (1952) executive officer of the Department of Music and MacDowell Professor of Music at Columbia University in New York.

Douglas Moore's music is highly melodic in its basic nature, though it has also a rich, often unusual harmonic texture. There is a certain American folk sound to it, as though the composer had absorbed, digested and forgotten the whole rich American folk music heritage; or as though it had become a spring, deep underground. There is a fresh spontaneity and romanticism about his work that has perhaps caused it to be underestimated during recent periods when certain "modern-at-all-costs" groups have held the stage; but the fine craftsmanship, real eloquence, dignity and true inspiration behind Moore's music have marked a steady growth both in itself and in its public estimation.

Such pieces as the Quintet for clarinet and strings, written in 1946, and the opera 'Giants in the Earth' (1950), which gained for him the 1951 Pulitzer Prize in Music, are important contributions to the American chamber-music and opera repertory.

Moore is the author of 'Listening to Music' (1931) and 'From Madrigal to Modern Music' (1942), and his chief compositions are the following:

OPERAS

- 'White Wings' (Philip Barry) (1935).
- 'The Devil and Daniel Webster' (S. V. Benet) (1938).
- 'Giants in the Earth' (Arnold Sundgaard) (1950).

OPERETTAS

- 'The Headless Horseman' (Benet) (1937).
- 'The Emperor's New Clothes' (Abrashkin, after Hans Andersen) (1948).

CHORAL WORKS

- 'Prayer for the United Nations' (S. V. Benet) for contralto, chorus and orch. (1943).
- Various unaccomp. choruses (1937-43).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 'Pageant of P. T. Barnum' (1924).
- 'Moby Dick' (after Herman Melville) (1928).
- 'A Symphony of Autumn' (1930).
- 'Overture on an American Tune' (1931).
- 'Village Music' (1942).
- 'In Memoriam' (1943).
- Symphony, A ma. (1945).
- 'Farm Journal' for chamber orch. (1947).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- String Quartet (1933).
- Quintet for woodwind & horn (1942).
- Quintet for clar., 2 vns., viola & cello (1946).

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

- Sonata (1929).
- Suite 'Down East' (1944).

P. G.-H.

Moore, Edward. See ARNE, T., 'Foundling', incid. m.). Battishill (do., song for; 'Gaiester', song for). Boyce ('Solomon', serenata; 'Gaiester', song for).

Moore, George. See ELGAR ('Gramia and Diarimid', incid. m.). Jacob (G., 'Esther Waters', film). Mellers ('Trial of Jeweller Peacock', puppet masque). O'Neill (song).

BIBL. - HENEKER, JAMES, 'George Moore: "Evelyn Innes", "Sister Teresa"', in 'Overtones' (New York, 1928).

MOORE, Gerald (b. Watford, 30 July 1899).

English accompanist and ensemble pianist. For many years he has been one of the foremost accompanists in England, associated with many of the world's most famous singers and instrumentalists on their visits to Britain. With his accomplished technique, his uncommonly beautiful tone and his enormous repertory, which extends over the whole field of vocal and instrumental music with piano-forte parts, he has raised the art of accompanying to the greatest heights. Besides lecturing and broadcasting on the subject of accompanying he has done several recordings and made solo piano arrangements of various songs. He is a contributor to 'A Career in Music', published in 1950. His book 'The Unashamed Accompanist', which is at once entertaining and instructive, was first published in 1943. Besides dealing with every aspect of the accompanist's difficult and complex task and rejecting the mistaken idea that he is a musician of less ability than a virtuoso and of no importance compared with the soloist for whom he plays, it is full of shrewd observations on music and musicians in general. M. K. W.

MOORE, Grace (b. Slabtown, Tenn., 5 Dec. 1901; d. Copenhagen, 26 Jan. 1947).

American soprano singer and film actress. She spent most of her childhood at Jellico, Tenn., and had her early musical training at Ward-Belmont College, Nashville, and the Wilson-Greene School of Music, Washington, D.C. Despite parental opposition she went in 1919 to New York, where she studied with P. Mario Marafioti and began her career in musical comedy, making her Broadway debut in Jerome Kern's 'Hitchy-Koo' in 1920, scoring a distinct success in 1923 in 'The Music Box Revue' with music by Irving Berlin. She also starred in the next two years' versions of this revue. Determined, however, on an operatic career, she studied in France and made her debut with the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York on 7 Feb. 1928 as Mimi in Puccini's 'Bo-hème'. Mimi was also the part of her débuts at the Paris Opéra-Comique the following season and in London, at Covent Garden, in 1935. She remained attached to the Metropolitan for the rest of her life, except for the seasons of 1932-33 and 1933-34. Her other principal parts were Juliet in Gounod's 'Roméo et Juliette', Micaela in 'Carmen', Marguerite in 'Faust', the title-parts in 'Louise' (probably her best characterization) and 'Tosca', and Fiora in Montemezzi's 'L' amore dei tre re'.

After making her motion-picture début in 'A Lady's Morals' (1930) she gained international renown in this field with 'One Night of Love' (1934). She also played the title-part in the film version of 'Louise'. Her film success was a factor in the expansion of a career which took her to several countries of Europe for opera and concerts, throughout the U.S.A. and, in 1941, to Latin America. On 26 Jan. 1947, leaving Copenhagen for an engagement in Stockholm, she was killed in an aeroplane crash.

Her voice was of a pleasing if not memorable quality; her vocal technique, while not flawless, gained considerably in the later years of her career. Her dramatic limitations were at least partly compensated for by care in the study and preparation of her parts, and personality and determination were assets in her popularity in her various fields of musical activity.

F. D. P.

Moore, T. Sturge. See Sturge Moore.

MOORE, Thomas (b. ?; d. ?).

English 17th-century printer. He worked in London and was the first to introduce the "new tied" note in musical typography, where the tails of the quavers and semiquavers are united instead of being printed separately, as was the case before Moore printed. This kind of note is used in the second book of 'Comes Amoris' (1688), the first book (1687) having the old lozenge-shaped notes.

In later years Moore was associated with J. Heptinstall, another London printer. In 1700 William Pearson made great improvements in the tied note, and Fougat, at a much later date, effected still greater improvements.

F. K.

MOORE, Thomas (b. Dublin, 28 May 1779; d. Dublin, 28 Feb. 1852).

Irish poet and musician. He was the son of John Moore and his wife Anastasia. In his fragmentary 'Memoirs' he speaks of himself as a "show child" and tells of his infantile recitations and of taking part in private theatrical performances. After some private schooling he entered Trinity College, Dublin, in 1793, and remained until 1798. At this time he became associated with Robert Emmet and other members of a revolutionary party. He escaped the fate which befell some of the others, and in 1799 he went to London to enter the Middle Temple. All this while he had written much ephemeral work and translated the 'Odes of Anacreon', which formed a small volume. It is not necessary here to refer in any detail to his literary work, which during his life was very varied and popular. His musical education was mostly what he picked up from his sister's music master and his own independent study.

Having lived in London from 1799 to 1803, he was appointed in the latter year to a government post in Bermuda. Not liking his position he left the affair in the hands of a deputy who involved him in a deficit of something like £3000. The debt was paid by Lord Lansdowne, who was afterwards repaid by Moore. He went to North America, including Canada, where he wrote the 'Canadian Boat Song', one of the most popular of his early pieces.

In 1801 Moore wrote the libretto of a comic opera, 'The Gypsy Prince', for Michael Kelly, which was performed at the Haymarket Theatre on 24 July. About 1802-3 he was fully engaged in writing songs, which were published, with the music (much of it being his own composition), by James Carpenter of Old Bond Street. Of single songs he was prolific, some published by Carpenter and others at a later period by Power. When the 'Irish Melodies' came forth they eclipsed all Moore's previous efforts. William Power, music-seller of Dublin, projected an edition of Irish airs with English words by different poets. The musical arrangements were to be done by Dr. John Stevenson. In Feb. 1807 Power wrote to Moore telling him of his project and soliciting his aid. Moore replied enthusiastically and promised all the help he could give.

It is quite evident that Power's scheme was suggested by George Thomson's collection of Scottish songs, then publishing, to which work Burns was the chief poetical contributor. The get-up of the Irish publication was a distinct copy of the Scottish collection. The scheme was launched and the 'Selection of Irish Melodies, with Symphonies and Accompaniments by Sir John Stevenson, Mus.Doc., and characteristic words by Thomas Moore, Esq.', began publication in numbers, Moore being the sole poet employed. The 'Melodies' reached ten numbers and a supplement extending to 1834.

The first number was issued at the latter end of 1807 or beginning of 1808, and consisted of 51 pages. It contained about twelve songs, some of which were arranged for two or more voices. The numbers were published at 15s. each and the work was issued in green paper boards, decorated with a rude woodcut depicting a lady (supposed to be "Erin") reclining against a harp. It is said that this woodcut had adorned a Dublin ballad sheet. It was replaced by a far more beautiful design after Stotherd in 1821.

The dates of the publications of the numbers are as follows: 1807-8, 1810-11, 1813, 1815-1818, 1821, 1824-34. The six early numbers contain all the most popular of Moore's songs. The popularity of these from the date of their publication was enormous, and the numbers were republished again and again.

For the airs Moore robbed without scruple the collections of Irish airs made by Edward Bunting and published in 1796 and 1807, much to Bunting's chagrin. It is said that Moore made serious alterations in the airs, but an examination of Bunting's and Holden's works, which he also used, will show that these alterations, when present, were of the slightest. Sir Charles Stanford published in 1895 'The Irish Melodies of Thomas Moore: the original airs restored'. Stanford's restorations are not always justified, as pointed out in Moffat's 'Minstrelsy of Ireland'.

One thing has not been noticed before: Moore was bold enough to take for serious songs tunes which were familiar with comic or semi-comic songs, such as 'Paddy Whack' for 'While History's Muse' and 'The Pretty Girl of Darby, O' for 'Eveleen's Bower'.

After the publication of the seventh number William Power brought an action against his brother James, who then had an extensive trade in London, to prevent him from publishing the eighth number, 1821, contending that he had the sole copyright. James, however, won the case.

The ninth and tenth numbers were harmonized by Bishop, who afterwards did most of the musical arrangements for Moore. At James Power's death, in Aug. 1836, his widow retained the copyright of the Irish melodies, which afterwards passed into the hands of Addison & Hollier, who reissued them in the same style of paper boards as the original. When the 'Melodies' became free of copyright numerous musicians edited them and wrote new arrangements of the airs, Sir John Stevenson's being old-fashioned and by no means satisfactory for modern singing.

In 1811 Moore married the actress Bessie Dykes. The same year he wrote a comic opera, 'M.P., or The Blue Stocking', with music composed and selected by himself.¹ This was produced at the Lyceum Theatre on 9 Sept. with the music orchestrated and provided with an overture by Charles Edward Horn.

In 1816 Moore published the first number of 'Sacred Songs, the words by Thomas Moore, Esq., the music composed and selected by Sir John Stevenson and Mr. Moore', folio. After that came a 'Selection of Popular National Airs', in six numbers, beginning in 1818 and continuing to 1828. The first number was arranged by Sir John Stevenson and contained the charming song 'Oft in the stilly night'. The remaining numbers were harmonized by Bishop. A volume of 'Evenings in Greece' followed.

Moore's songs were, during the first fifty or sixty years after their publication, in immense favour, and they were sung among all classes of people. They entered into the country's literature and, to go no farther, they are greatly quoted and referred to in Dickens's novels.

His voice was delightful and charmed everybody with its sweetness. He was fond of singing his songs at the society functions which he attended, and his small stature was hidden by the cluster of admirers who surrounded him. His relations with his publisher, James Power, were extraordinary. Although he drew immense sums for his works he was continually overdrawing his account with Power, and looked to him for the performance of many extraordinary tasks. Power said: "I am his banker, his bill acceptor and fish agent, letter carrier, hotel keeper and publisher, and now he wants me to be his shoe-black".

In the latter part of his life, by the exertions of Lord John Russell, he was granted a government pension; but he ended miserably, suffering from softening of the brain.

F. K., adds.

BIBL. - MUIR, PERCY H., 'Thomas Moore's Irish Melodies, 1808-1834' ('The Colophon', Sept. 1933).

See also Bantock ('Fire Worshipers', choral work; 'Lalla Rookh', symph. poem). Barnett (J. F., 'Paradise and the Peri', choral work). Bennett (W. S., do., overture). Berlioz ('Méditation religieuse', chorus; 'Belle Voyageuse', voice & orch.; 'Irlande', songs). Brian (songs). Carolan (use of tune by C.). Clay ('Lalla Rookh', cantata). Cogan (teacher). Cornelius (chorus). David (Félicien, 'Lalla Rookh', opera). Duparc (H., 'Élégie', song). Glover (J. W., memorial ode). Hindemith (song). Horn (C. E., overture; orchestration of M.'s opera 'M. P.'; opera on 'Lalla Rookh'). Ireland (J., partsong). Jensen (3, 7 songs). Jongen (J., 'Lalla Rookh', symph. poem). Kashin ('Nourmahal', opera). Knight (J. P., song & duet). Komorowski (song). Kryzhanovsky (cantata, 'Paradise and Peri'). Mackenzie (5 partsongs). Mendelssohn (2 songs). National Anthems (Ireland). Oswald (J., 'Gamester', song for). Paradise and the Peri (Schumann). Parry (H., partsong; 4 songs). Petrie (Irish folk tunes supplied by). Power (J., commission for words to folk tunes). Rubinstein (A., 'Feramors', opera). Schumann ('Paradise and Peri', choral work; 2 songs). Smith (A. M., 'Lalla Rookh', overture). Spontini ('Nurmahal', opera; 'Lalla Rookh', tableaux vivants). Stanford ('Veiled Prophet', opera; 6 partsongs). Stevenson (J., accomps. for songs). Taneyev (S. I., song). Thomas (A. G., 'Light of the Harem', opera). Veiled Prophet (Stanford, opera). Walker (E., 2 songs). Warlock (song). Weber (12, song). Zolotarev ('Paradise and the Peri', cantata).

Moore, (Sir) Thomas. See Paganini (ref. in 'Memories').

MOORE, William. See MORE.

MOOREHEAD, John (b. Ireland, ?; d. nr. Deal, Mar. 1804).

Irish violinist and composer. He received his first musical instruction in Ireland, but went to England when young and was for several years engaged in the orchestras of various country theatres. He was one of the violins at the Worcester Festival of 1794, and in 1796 was in London as principal viola at Sadler's Wells Theatre. In 1798 he was engaged in the orchestra at Covent Garden and soon after employed to compose for that theatre. During his engagement he composed music for 'The Philosopher's Stone' (1795), 'Birds of a Feather' (1796), 'The Volcano' and 'Speed the Plough', 'Harlequin's Tour' and 'The Dominion of Fancy', both with Attwood (1800), 'Il Bondocani' (with Attwood) and 'Perouse', with Davy (1801), 'Harlequin's Habeas', 'The Cabinet', with Braham, Davy, etc. and 'Family Quarrels' with Braham and Reeve (1802).

¹ Not by M. P. King, to whom it is sometimes attributed.

In that year he became insane and, having transgressed the laws, was confined successively in Tothill Fields Prison and Northampton House, Clerkenwell. On his liberation he entered the Navy as a common sailor, and was quickly promoted to be bandmaster. A short time afterwards he hanged himself in a fit of insanity near Deal.

"F. Moorehead", described as the composer of 'The Naval Pillar', 1799 (see Q.-L.), is probably a printer's error for John Moorehead.

His brother, Alexander Moorehead, was also a violinist of merit and led the orchestra at Sadler's Wells Theatre; he also became insane and died in an asylum at Liverpool.¹

W. H. H., adds. F. K.

See also Attwood (collabs.). Davy (J., collabs.). Reeve (2 collabs.).

MOORHOUSE, Kathleen (b. Cleckheaton, Yorkshire, 27 Jan. 1900).

English violoncellist. She studied at the Royal (Manchester) College of Music from 1915 to 1919 and also took lessons from Arnold Trowell. In 1944 she was made a Fellow of the R.M.C.M. and in 1946 was appointed a professor there, which posts he still holds (1954). She is well known as a soloist, having appeared with most of the best-known orchestras in Great Britain, and she has broadcast over two hundred times besides playing frequently in chamber music.

M. K. W.

MOORISH MUSIC. The name "Moors" is a generic one given by classical authors to the inhabitants of Mauretania or Mediterranean Africa. Later the term was used for the Arab conquerors of that territory, more especially after they, and their Berber allies, had crossed the straits at Gibraltar and conquered the Iberian peninsula as far as the Pyrenees. It is of the music of these Moors of Spain and Portugal that this article treats, as distinct from Maghribí and Berber music proper, which are considered separately.

The Moors ruled over this land, with a gradually lessening territorial control, from 712 until 1492, after which they were a subject race, dubbed Moriscos, until their final expulsion in 1610. For three centuries and more (712-1086) the Arab factions were the political masters of a vast portion of the peninsula. Music flourished on every hand under the pleasure-loving Umayyad rulers, although the powerful Berber following, under Málikí persuasion, whom Dozy calls the "Calvinists of Islam", frowned on music as an unworthy practice and considered the Arabs as pagans. Still, from the time of 'Abd al-Rahmán I (d. 788) the palaces of royalty, nobility and official classes were given up to those forbidden pleasures (maláht)—wine, woman and song—so much so that the minstrel was named mulhí in the 10th century. The court singing-girls (qainát, jariyát) and other female singers (mughanniyát) were the rage in those days. They were as essential in the household of people of quality as the pianoforte is to-day. Even before the time of Ziryáb the names of 'Ulún and Zarquín had become history. Many a famous Andalusian poet sang of his singing-girl. Háshim b. 'Abd al-'Azíz (d. 886) sighed for 'Aj. Ibn Júdí (d. 897) visualized Jaihán. Al-Zubaidí al-Ishbílí (d. 928) could only think of Salma. Ja'far b. 'Uthmán (d. 978) wrote exquisite verses on the incomparable singing-girls, and the great Al-Mu'tamid (d. 1095), while in prison, still dreamed of his "wondrous castles and singing-girls". Even the gallant Cid (d. 1099) chided the Moorish amirs for their dalliance with singing-girls, while the 12th-century poet Al-Abyád satirized Al-Zubair of Cordova for the same thing. In his verses he pictured him "saying his prayers to the chink of wine glasses and the melody of strings, with his singing-girls worshipping behind him". Nor was the male musician (ghanna'í) of any less importance. A great fuss was made over 'Abbás b. al-Nasa'í and Mañsúr al-Yahúdí, who were the chief court minstrels of Al-Hakam I (d. 822), the first ruler to oppose the purist of Islam who wished to proscribe music. Under 'Abd al-Rahmán II (d. 852) began the beneficent influence of Ziryáb, who arrived at court in 822. His music school was looked upon as the brightest jewel in the crown of Moorish Spain. He claimed to know 10,000 songs by heart and to have outshone Ptolemy in his musical knowledge! Aslám b. 'Abd al-'Azíz collected and edited Ziryáb's songs after his death. The latter's sons and daughters—'Ubaidalláh, 'Abd al-Rahmán, Al-Qásim, Hamdúna and 'Ulayya—carried on his work, traces of which were discernible in the 11th century.

It is interesting to note how the court, while outwardly scorning music—in order to placate the puritans — was privately patronizing it. 'Abd al-Rahmán III (d. 961), who founded the Umayyad caliphate in Spain, allowed his children to indulge in music to their hearts' content. One of them played both the pandore (tunbúr) and guitar (kaithára), while another, Abu'l-'Aşbagh, said that so long as Alláh permitted birds to sing he would do the same.

¹ See T. Dibdin's 'Reminiscences' (1827), I, 314-33.

Although his successor, Al-Hakam II (d. 976), had no court singing-girls, the arts and sciences flourished even more brilliantly. His own library held 400,000 volumes, one of which was an autograph copy of the great 'Book of Songs' ('Kitáb al-aghání') of Al-İsfahání in the East. In this vast corpus of Arabian music he could see what obtained in the East, although the 'Unique Necklace' of Ibn 'Abd Rabbihi (d. 940) of Cordova would have already given him a foretaste of that, more especially since the twentieth jewel in that necklace sparkled with music. Two centuries later, Yahyá b. al-Khudujj al-Mursí made a similar collection of Moorish singers and songs in his 'Kitáb al-aghání al-Andalusíya'. The next caliph was Hishám II, but he was ruled by his vizier Al-Manşúr. Under the latter, as we know from the historian Ibn Hazm (d. 1064), there was music everywhere. Al-Mahdí (1008–10), who held the throne for a brief spell, shocked the puritans by having a hundred each of strings ('idán) and woodwind (mazámír) at court. One of the most famous poetesses, who was also a musician, was Walláda, the daughter of Al-Mustakfi (1027–32), the second-last of the Umayyad caliphs of Spain. The end of this dynasty came in 1031, a year which closed the most picturesque period of the history of Spain, during which, as Reynold A. Nicholson has said, "the Andalusian nation . . . advanced with incredible swiftness to a height of culture with was the envy of Europe".

The land was then split up under "party kings" who governed in their stead at Cordova, Seville, Toledo, Granada and elsewhere; although even there these rulers "made their courts the homes of poets and musicians", as Al-Maqqarí tells us. Perhaps the most important of the kings were the 'Abbáids of Seville. Al-Mu'tamid, the last king (1068–1091), was not only a famous poet, but a singer and lutenist, as was his son 'Ubaidalláh al-Rashid. The latter's love of music offended the more pious of his subjects. The songs of Ibn Hamdí (d. 1132), the court poet, delighted the Sevillian musicians. Another songwriter was Abú Bakr ibn Zuhri (d. 1198), whose works were still charming ears in 17th-century Morocco. Ibn Rushd (d. 1198), Al-Shaqundí (d. 1231) and Ibn Khaldún (d. 1404) attest to the musical pre-eminence of Seville. The splendour of the entertainments at the court at Toledo gave rise to the proverb "Like a Dhu'l-Núnid banquet", the house of Nún being the dynasty (1036–85). When this city fell to the Spaniards (1085) it became the centre for the radiation of Moorish art and science. As the Spanish historian Al-tamira says, Toledo had "the outward appearance of a Muslim city, in dress, custom, art and even in the current language". It was there, in the following century, that Gerard of Cremona and John of Seville translated two works by Al-Fárábí from Arabic into Latin as 'De scientiis' and 'De órtu scientiarum', both of which dealt with music. Gundisalus (González) borrowed from these works in his 'De divisione philosophiae'. It was much the same in the other petty kingdoms. Al-Shaqundí remarks on the fondness and fame of the people of Ubeda near Jaen for music and dancing, while a certain Ahmád b. Muḥammad al-Yamaní refers to the inordinate passion for music in the people of Málaga in 1015.

After the fall of Toledo the Berber Almora-vids from the Maghrib made themselves masters of Muslim Spain and suppressed each of the "party kings" in turn. These newcomers were stern religionists who looked askance at music as one of the "wiles of Satan", although the Moorish population took little heed of their puritanic frowns. Their successors, the Berber Almohads, also from the Maghrib, were even more fanatical in this respect and, under the impulsion of Ibn Tumart (d. 1130), went so far as to encourage the destruction of musical instruments. It is exhilarating to see Ibn Quzmán (d. 1160), the song-writer, chiding the puritans: "The faqth cries 'Repent'; but how can one be contrite with the air so fragrant, the birds warbling, the flowers perfuming and music (ghina') from a clever flautist (zámir) and a heavenly voice?". This question of the impropriety of listening to music (al-samá') was just as much debated in Moorish Spain as in the Maghrib and the East, and among those whose opinions held sway among the Moors were Abú Bakr al-Turtúshí (d. 1126) and Abú Bakr b. al-'Arabí (d. 1148), while a century later came Abu'l-'Abbás al-Ishbílí (d. 1253) and Abu'l-'Abbás al-Qurtubí (d. 1258) who, as their surnames indicate, belonged to Tortosa, Seville and Cordova. In time, however, as we know from Avenpace (d. 1138) and Ibn al-Khaṭīb (d. 1374), the puritans relented somewhat on the question of music.

After the Christian armies had completely routed the Berber and Moorish array in 1212, the former returned to the Maghrib, leaving the latter to their own devices, and they, before long, were pushed back to the frontiers of Granada (1236), which not only became the last Moorish stronghold, but the hub of culture for the western world of Islam. Here, as Reynold A. Nicholson assures us, "the latest bloom of Arabic culture renewed, if it did not equal, the glorious memories of Cordova and Seville". Unfortunately we have but scant details of its music on account of the vandalism of the Christian conquerors of Granada in 1492. Yet we know what the Christian courts were doing in music. The 'Cantigas de Santa María' of Alfonso X (1252-84), with their charming miniatures, are sufficient evidence of the Moorish influence on his court music. Pedro III of Aragon, when a prince in 1269, heard his "moros trombadors" and "moros juglars". The court of his son, Sancho IV (1284-95), was filled with Moorish minstrels, whose very names have been preserved. When Fernando IV of Castile (1295-1312) sent his son to the court of Jaime II of Aragon, there was a "Mahomet, trompero", sounding his fanfares. Alfonso IV of Aragon (1327-36) begged Alfonso XI of Castile to dispatch him players on the shabbāba and qánún. We find Pedro IV of Aragon (1336-87) beseeching that Moorish rabāb and shabbāba players be sent him. Juan I (1387-95) had an entire family of Moorish musicians from Valencia sojourning at his court. At the wedding of the Prince of Viana to Anne of Cleves (1439) both male and female Moorish minstrels from Játiva were engaged. Indeed Menéndez Pidal says that Játiva was one of the "most important schools for Moorish minstrels" in the late middle ages, and gives proof of this during the 13th-15th centuries.

With the fall of Granada to the Christian armies in 1492 the scene changed. During their stay of nearly eight centuries in the peninsula the Moors had been a cultural asset, not only to that land, but to all western civilization. How much art, music, letters and science were influenced by them is universally acknowledged. Just as the Mudéjares, i.e. the Muslims "who stayed behind" in the early days of the Christian reconquest, were still able to influence the conquerors, so the Moriscos, i.e. the Muslims who were forced to stay in the land after the fall of Granada, were captivating their new masters. The writings of Ginés Pérez of Hita, Francisco López de Gómara of Seville and others of the 16th century most eloquently attest to the attraction of Moorish music for the Spaniards. In the former's 'Guerras civiles de Granada' we see one of these Moorish music festivals in full swing, with Moorish youth of both sexes singing and dancing to the lute and tambourine. But the sands were now running low for the Moors in Spain, and in the mid-16th century came the total prohibition of their costume, language and customs, including the zumra and laila, which meant the suppression of their traditional music and song. Yet at the tragic expulsion of the Moors in 1610, which even Cardinal Richelieu stigmatized as "the most barbarous in human annals", some of them marched down to the coast with "music and song".

What was Moorish music in the middle ages? It was an Arabian art into which had infiltrated, over the centuries, some Persian and Syrian features, as well as something from an indigenous Iberian art. What is significant in the first-mentioned influence is the nomenclature in some of the modes.¹ What features were due to the latter we do not know, but we see three or four Iberian instruments being adopted by the Moors. Fundamentally both peoples used the same scale, the Pythagorean. For five centuries both arts were modal and, in the earlier period, seven of the eight Moorish modes were identical with the Iberian church modes. Precisely what each culture assimilated from the other is not easy to tell, but what happened in language is probably very much like that which occurred in music, as the textos aljamiados reveal. Aljamia (Arab. al-ʿajamiya = "foreign"), i.e. the Romance tongue with Moorish ingredients (or vice versa), was the lingua franca of the Mudéjares and Moriscos, and it was written in Arabic characters. Obviously there had to be considerable adaptation in making Romance orthoëpy fit the Arabic alphabet for the simple reason that each language had vocalic and consonantal sounds which were alien to the other. That is precisely what took place between the borrowings in music of one culture from another.

The music of the Moors of the Iberian peninsula — and that means the Arabs — was, at the outset, that of the Old Arabian School.² Since the Syrian Umayyads were in the ascendant within half a century, we can be fairly certain of their cultural background. In addition there were the Quraish and Yamaní aristocracy, as well as the chiefs of such powerful Bedouin stock as the Qais and Kalb, with all of whom the traditional Arab music of the plain and homely nash, sindd and hazaj variety was a desideratum. Persian influences came much later, and we know that the older terminology and ideas were still flourishing as late as Ibn García (fl. 1070) and Ibn Bājja (d. 1138). Among the privileged classes music was dubbed the sitrā ("curtain") because, following the procedure of the Syrian caliphs — a Persian fancy — it was this which screened off the performers from the listeners, which was a half-submission to orthodoxy in that if they did listen to music they did not see it being performed. On the other hand there was complete unrestraint among the people at large, where the zumra

¹ See MAGHRIBI MUSIC.

² See ARABIAN MUSIC.

(music "gathering") and laila ("night" party) were the outstanding social relaxations. Indeed, the instrument, song and dance had become part and parcel of everyday life among both the urban and rural Moorish population.

What Moorish music was like, per se, in those days, cannot very well be indicated after the passage of the centuries, because not a solitary example of notated or tablatured Moorish music from Moorish sources has been preserved. The conflagrations of books and manuscripts in the Arabic language caused by the Christians after the fall of Granada must have robbed us of as many musical treasures as of literature and science. All the same, the present writer has published examples of 13th-century eastern Arabian music in his 'History of Arabian Music' (1929) and the 'Minstrelsy of the Arabian Nights' (1945). It is true that the descendants of the Moors of the expulsion (1610 and earlier) are to be found in the Maghrib to-day, where they still sing and play the old traditional music which they call al-Andalusīya or al-Gharanīya but this can be but a dim shadow of the glorious music about which the Moorish poets so often rhapsodized. Yet all music that is passed on viva voce is subject to human caprice or frailty, and even the illustrious Arabic historian Ibn Khaldūn (d. 1406) realized this. He knew both lands. Born at Tunis in the Maghrib, he afterwards held a high government post at Granada. In his famous 'Muqaddima' ('Prolegomena' to History) he devotes a chapter to "Music", wherein he says that after the fall of Moorish Spain its music passed to the Maghrib where, in his day, he found "traces of this music, in spite of the decadence of Maghribī civilization".

It is to these "traces", submitted to another five hundred years of viva voce transmission, that we must turn if we are to seek for some slight conception of the music of Moorish Spain in its heyday, especially in the vocal and instrumental suites which are known as the naubāt al-Andalusīya or al-Gharanīya, i.e. of Andalusia or Granada. Both Edmond Yāfil and Jules Rouanet, who have edited much of this music, suggest as early a date as the 8th-9th centuries for it. The poetry of the vocal part of this music -- mostly in the muwashshah form -- is later than the 10th century, some even 12th century, while the music in the modes sikā and jārika can scarcely be earlier than the 16th century. Still, whatever the music may be, as notated, we can rest assured that there has been little if any change in its "form", since this is conditioned to a considerable extent by the "form" of the verse. If we look at the two most favoured vocal types -- the muwashshah and the zajal -- we may be able to understand the importance of these factors, and both have roots going down to the 10th century. Like the Spanish villancico, the Moorish zajal, which was its parent, had, and has, a feature that is unusual, in that the refrain (maṭla) comes first and the verse (ghuṣn) second. To-day the melodies for these two divisions of the song are different, and we may reasonably assume that the same principle obtained in Moorish Spain, more especially because separate melodies for alternate verses were practised by the Old Arabian school of the 8th century.

In all vocal music of this type there is an instrumental prelude (muqaddima, kursī) which is obligatory. In fact the second term is derived from a root (karrasa), which means "to lay the foundation". That this prelude was sometimes rather lengthy we know from an account of a concert at Málaga in 1015 by a certain Ahmad b. Muḥammad al-Yamanī. After the first refrain, and after the verses, there are instrumental interludes, and at the close there comes a postlude. All this is, and was, common to the muwashshah, zajal and rajaḥ verse forms. In the Andalusian or Granadan suites there were the independent instrumental items such as the mustakhhir (introduction) and taushīḥa or taushīya (overture). The first-named is self-explanatory since it "makes known" the gamut of the mode so as to prepare the listener aesthetically (or rather physically according to Moorish theories) for what is coming. As for the second terms, both imply "ornamenting".¹

This music, during the whole of the Moorish period (712-1492 and after) was purely homophonic, save that in the melismata (za'idat) an accompanist was permitted to introduce a simultaneous fourth, fifth or octave as an embellishment. The music was modal, in both the melodic and the rhythmic sense. The eight finger modes (aṣābi) were those of the Old Arabian school.² In the course of time these were extended, through eastern influences, to twenty-four, by adding a tetrachord of one mode to that of another mode. These were called tubū, because they were linked up, even as early as the 9th century, with the cosmos, i.e. with the primary elements (tubū), the natures (ṭabā'i), the seasons, times of day and so on. The rhythmic modes (uṣūl, ḍurūb) were also eight in number originally, and they were conditioned in a similar way. Out of these matrices were pressed certain modal melodies and rhythms which, in spite of their stereotyped forms, were never performed twice alike, since the fioriture or embellishments of singer and player contributed such individual utterances as to produce original creations.

The physical theory of Moorish music, like that of the Arabian school, was basically

¹ See NAUBA.

² See ARABIAN MUSIC.

Pythagorean in its scalar construction, save for the possible intrusion of an optional neutral third between the minor and major third, with its complementary neutral sixth. Although Ziryáb, as the pupil of Ishāq al-Mausilī (d. 850) in Baghdad, was probably responsible for regularizing Moorish musical theory in his day, it is Ibn Fīrnās (d. 888) who is credited with being the "first who taught the science of music in al-Andalus". That the Pythagorean scale, in its purest form, was still holding sway in the following century we know from Maslama al-Majrīfī (d. 1007) and Abū'l-Ḥakam al-Karmānī (d. 1066), who popularized the 'Risālat al-mūsīqī' of the Ikhwān al-Ṣafā'. As their names tell us, the two former came from Madrid and Carmona respectively. In the following century lived Abū'l-Ṣalt Umayya (d. 1134). His 'Risālat al-mūsīqī' has perished, although a Hebrew translation survives in Paris. Greater still was Ibn Bājja or Avenpace (d. 1138), whose 'Kitāb al-mūsīqī' ('Book of Music') took a similar place in the West to that of Al-Fārābī in the East. He was not only a great theorist, but a composer, singer and lutenist. Two other music theorists of the 12th century were Abū'l-Ḥakam al-Bahilī of Almería and Abū Zakariyā al-Bayāsī (Baeza), both of whom also played the lute. A little later there lived the famous Ibn Rushd or Averroes (d. 1198), who taught the doctrine of the spherical propagation of sound in his 'Commentary on Aristotle's "De anima"' ('Sharḥ fi'l-nafs'). Lastly there was Abū Bakr al-Riqūfī (13th cent.) who, after the fall of Murcia (1242), was retained to teach in the Christian schools. In higher education musical theory was taught as one of the subjects of the riyāḍiyyāt (quadrivium), and if we can accept the work of Virgilius Cordubensis, said to have been translated from the Arabic into Latin in 1290, it was being taught at Cordova much earlier. Indeed, Ibn al-Hijārī (d. 1194) tells us that during the Umayyad kingdom (8th–11th cent.) "students from all parts of the world flocked . . . to learn the sciences of which Cordova was the most noble repository". That European Latin music theorists quoted Alfarabius (Al-Fārābī), Avicenna (Ibn Sīnā), Averroes (Ibn Rushd) and others, reveal the high esteem in which the latter were held, an assessment already voiced by Vincent de Beauvais and Roger Bacon. A sidelight on instrumental teaching is revealed in the 'Textos aljamiados' published by Gil and others, in which we read that girls, in addition to other studies, were taught the lute, rebec, organ and other instruments, so that when married they would be "a solace to their husbands".

On the instrumental side the Moors were much advanced. The Moorish instruments are listed (some with copyists' errors, which we correct) by Al-Shaqundī (d. 1231). Among them were the ūd (lute), ṭunbūr (pandore), kaitara or kaithāra (guitar), qānūn (psaltery), rabāb (rebec), ruṭa (? rota), shabbāba (flute), zulāmī (shawm), būq [zamrī] (metal shawm), naḥr (trumpet), būq (horn), duff and bandair (tambourines), ghaiṭa (? bladder pipe), ṭabl (drum), ṣunij (cymbals), nira or lira = al-yard' (recorder), juwāq (fife), abū qurūn (monster horn), khullāl (vase drum) and dabdaba (drum), the last five being Berber instruments. Some of these names — kaitara, ruṭa, ghaiṭa and bandair — are of European origin, being the guitarra, rota, gaita and panderro, although the very form of guitarra seems to reveal a Moorish physiognomy in that it comes from the Maghribī Arabic diminutive of kaitara which is kuwaitira. Seville, before the Christian reconquest (1248) was the centre of the manufacture of instruments, as it was in the previous century, as Averroes tells us. Al-Shaqundī also assures us that there was even an export trade in these instruments, while Ibn Sa'id al-Maghribī (d. 1280) tells us that books existed "on the various instruments and the art of making them".

Most musicographers are agreed that it was chiefly on the instrumental side that Europe benefited by the Moorish cultural impact. Iconographical evidence of this is palpable enough from the pandores and rebecs delineated in the Saint-Médard, Lothair and Notker Manuscripts (8th–10th cent.) and in the 'Beatus Apocalypse' (11th cent.) and 'Cantigas de Santa María' (13th cent.) Manuscripts. Just as eloquent is the verbal testimony of borrowing in such words as "laud" (al-ūd), "atambor" (al-ṭunbūr), "rubebe" (rabāb), "canon" (qānūn), "exa-beba" (ash-shabbāba), "joch" (juwāq), "anafil" (an-naḥr), "atambal" (al-ṭabl, al-tinbdl), "naquaire" (naqqāra), "adufe" (ad-duff) and "sonajas" (ṣunij), mentioned by Juan Ruiz of Hita, Guillaume de Machaut and others (14th cent.). Perhaps of greater benefit was the emergence of "frets" on the fingerboard of Oriental necked string instruments. Before this European harpists and citharists had only their ears to guide them when tuning their instruments, whereas the Moorish lutenists and pandorists had mensurally spaced frets (dasātīn) on their instruments. That Spain derived its first knowledge of an instrumental tablature from "a Moor of the Kingdom of Granada" is openly admitted by the monkish author of the 'Ars de pulsatione lambuti' (? sambuti or lauti), dated 1496–97, but of a much earlier authorship. Both Gevaert and Morphy agree to the Moorish influence on Spanish tablature.

Yet in addition to the "outward and visible signs" in these instruments, there was the "inward spiritual grace". In other words, what was played on them, and how it was played. Ribera claimed, even from the 'Kitáb al-aghání', that the Arabs and Moors used harmony in our sense of the term, a statement which has no support from this or any other Arabic source. He also argued that the melodic strain of Moorish music is traceable in that of the troubadours and the 'Cantigas de Santa María'. On the rhythmic side there is certainly no evidence of specifically Moorish modes, although that may be due to Ribera's erroneous transcriptions of them, which can be checked by reference to the present author's 'Sa'adyah Gaon on the Influence of Music' (1943). Still, this does not necessarily invalidate his melodic theory. Some of his critics, Gennrich for example, argue that since there is no actual written music of the medieval Moors available for comparison, the theory of Ribera may be ignored. Prima facie that seems to be a sound argument; on the other hand, when Pedrell claimed that the Oriental idiom in Spanish music was Byzantine and not Moorish, nobody asked him to produce manuscript proof before they would accept his theses; nor was Falla challenged to submit actual examples of gypsy music from the 15th century, or later, when he suggested a gypsy origin for the Oriental touch in Spanish music. What Ribera did prove was that both the troubadours and the Spaniards owed their song-forms to the Moors, and if we accept that — and Nykl has since confirmed it with overwhelming evidence — surely it is not too much to say that the Moorish melodies may have been borrowed with them. From the time of Fauriel (1846) and Baret (1867), down to Beck (1908) and Apel (1934), the two arts have been considered together in the troubadour problem, and yet specialists like Jeanroy ('Revue des Deux Mondes', 1899, pp. 151, 354) and Suchier ('Der Troubadour Marcabru', p. 300), while acknowledging alien influences, either deny or refuse to admit Moorish claims.

Moorish song was of greater import to the Iberian population than any other expression of music. That is evident from many sources. If one turns to the 11th-century 'Glossarium Arabico-Latinum', it can be seen that musica = "songs" (aghání) and "verse" (ash'ár); armonia = "ode" (qasída) and "voice" (saut); melodia = "prosody" (arúd). That was only natural, since they had immersed themselves in Arabic poetry and song. Such was the burden of the complaint of the 9th-century Álvaro of Cordova who, in his 'Indiculum', lamented that while the Christian Iberians were ignorant of Latin, they could diligently study Arabic, and that although but one in a thousand could write an intelligent letter in his own language, there were many who could "compose Arabic verse as good as the Moors". On the whole there is much to be said for the universality of Moorish music in the peninsula.

Yet what seems to have gained more general acceptance among musicographers on the question of the Moorish musical influence — and we see it in Trend, Westrup and Reese — is that this Oriental persuasion is not to be sought in Moorish music per se, but rather in the manner of its performance, although it is not clear how one can separate the two. Perhaps the fact that the two are considered distinct has been due to the notion, as expressed by Trend, that the scale of the Moors consisted of seventeen "one-third" tones to the octave. Obviously, if Moorish music was built upon a scale of that type it could not possibly have influenced Occidental music. The truth is, however, that such a scale never existed, and the real scale of seventeen intervals to the octave, which proceeded by limma, limma, comma, was an eastern Arabian scale adopted in the 13th century. It was not used by the Moors, who adhered to the Pythagorean scale of the old Arabian school, which was identical with the European. Still, the argument of Trend, that it was rather the style of Moorish music which left "a definite mark on Spanish music", has much in its favour. He has likened it (1925-26) to the Mudfjar ornamentation in Moorish architecture, and the present writer, in the same year, had also urged that Europe itself was influenced by this Moorish festooning of the melody. When the Iberian people listened to a Moorish aravia or mourisca (note the words) they even followed the Muslims in giving vent to resounding cries the names of which are current in Spanish, although Ribera says that "their significance is lost". The shout "alarido" (Arab. al-'aríd) meant that the music was "full, complete". If it were "algazara" (Arab. al-ghazára), it was the "copiousness" of the singer's embellishments that had captured their fancy. Even to-day the Andalusian cante hondo is punctuated by cries of "Olé, Olé", i.e. "Alláh, Alláh", while the singer still vocalizes his embellishments on "ai" or "leli", which are Arabic vocalises. One of the favourite Moorish vocal tricks in embellishment was the nabra, a glottal hiatus which had its counterpart, but in a lesser degree of intensity, in the hamza of Arabic speech. Perhaps the passage in Magister Lambert (= Pseudo-Aristotle, 13th cent.) referring to plicating — "Fit autem plica in voce per compositionem epiglotti cum repercussione gutturis subtiliter inclusa" — alludes to this nabra (a vocal jump from low to high) closing with the Oriental coup de glotte.

Further, a more palpable factor in this Moorish influence was that most dominating feature which is inseparable from plectrum-struck instruments — rhythm; for even Salinas (d. 1590) thought the rhythmic part of music was more delightful than the harmonic part. It was the pulse of the saḡd'a (plectrum) on the lute and pandore, which the Muslims likened to the “heart-beats of Allāh”, that marked off Moorish music from that of the Iberians. That was noted by Juan Ruiz (14th cent.), the archpriest of Hita, in his ‘Libro de buen amor’, when he said that the viol (vihuela de arco), hurdy-gurdy (cinfonía) and flute (citola), with their legato notes, were inappropriate for Moorish music. It was the short, crisp stroke of the plectrum, enunciating the variegated Oriental rhythms, that revealed Moorish music at its best, and anyone who listens to the Andalusian cante hondo of to-day may be able to appreciate how audiences were moved by somewhat similar performances by the Moors in medieval days.

In 1925 the present writer broached the possibility of the medieval European mensural theorists being intrigued by Moorish rhythms, the Arabic name for which was tqā'dt. We know the precise form of the eight Moorish rhythmic modes in the 9th century, and most of them had been used for two centuries earlier. Indeed he hinted that this word tqā'dt was the original of the European word ochet, hoquet, hocket, etc., a suggestion which has now been adopted in authoritative quarters. The tqā'dt of the Moors must have fascinated their neighbours. The very contrariety of Moorish rhythmic element to the metrical in a song would have been looked upon as an infectious novelty. An example will show what the antithesis sounded like; it is from the ‘Kitāb al-aghānī’ (10th cent.), in which the verse-metre of the song is the basīf, and the rhythm of the music is the khaḡf al-thaql:

METRE: — — o — — o — — | — — o — — o — — |
 RHYTHM: oo — | o o — | o o — | o o — |

The metre is a syncopated 6-4, whereas the rhythm is a 2-4. This rhythm, being determined by short plectrum beats on a lute or pandore, or by taps on a tambourine, naturally engendered rests or silences which contrasted strongly against the sustained notes of the melodic line. That was why the Latin theorists equated the hocket with truncation. We also know from Franco of Cologne, as quoted by Jerome of Moravia, that this hocket was applied to songs which had already been composed, whether in the vulgar tongue or in Latin, and the name came to stand for some unusual types of mensural practice. But instead of the mensural contrariety being between the melodic (prosodic) and the rhythmic lines, as with the Moors, Europe gave two or more melodic parts these mensural features.

The present writer also called attention to the use of Arabic words by some of the mensural theorists of the 13th-14th centuries in their names of a few neoteric notation symbols, e.g. elmuahym and elmuarifa which, in 1925, he equated with the Arabic al-ma'luma and al-ma'rūfa, both of which occur in the 11th-century ‘Glossarium Latino-Arabicum’, s.v. “nota”. Elmuahym, in one form, was a plica, with an ascending or/and descending stroke (tractus). Some scribes gave it a square head, but others, so we are told, made it rectangular. In the Latin translation from the Arabic version of Euclid’s ‘Elements’ the word elmuahym stood for the “rhomb”. Elmuahym was also written with an obliquely protracted line, but in this form it was one of the currentes (“running notes”), when it could be “a double, triple or a quadruple elmuahym”, although in some books it was extended to seven values, with the appropriate ligatures. As for the elmuarifa, this is explained as having “a stroke on the left side in descending, just as the English depict it”. It is worth noting that Reese and others have conjectured that the currentes, as such, “may be the result of Arabic [Moorish] influence”. The above Arabic terminology is to be found in the ‘Anonymus IV’ of Coussemaker (13th cent.). Another Arabic term which peeps out in Johannes de Muris (d. c. 1351) is alentrade (Arab. al-inṭarad = “prolongation”).

It is true that the melodic and rhythmic transcriptions of Ribera have been rejected. But he does not stand alone in this non-acceptance. Those made by Beck and Aubry of the music of the troubadours were challenged by Riemann, Combarieu and Gastoué, while the two latter have been criticized by Collet and Villalba. Handschin has even thrown doubt on the advisability of setting all this music in the accepted forms of the mensuralists. It is certain that these transcribers (including Ribera) fight shy of any rhythm which is not either duple, triple or quadruple, although Anglès has not been averse to other schemes. Why should not some other measure, e.g. the Moorish mākhūri, which has a 5-4 character, be read into some of this music? Even Johannes de Grocheo (c. 1300) spoke of the music of the people as being “not precisely measured”, a feature which could be easily applied to a 5-4 rhythm. One hears it in the Basque zortzico, where the “alcalde” (Arab. al-qa'id) and his lieutenant, the “alquazil” (Arab. al-wazīr) play their respective parts, just as the “cadi” (Arab. qādī) does in English May-dancing. Possibly the Morris dance is but the “Moorish dance”. Certainly the Basque zamalzain is a lineal descendant of the Moorish “gala limping horse" (zāmil az-zain), and the hobby-horse and jingles of the medieval masker (Arab. maskhara) were undoubtedly borrowed from the Moors, with whom they are described by Ibn Khaldūn (d. 1406).

This question of the Moorish or Arabian influence on the Occident has been a rather vexed one. At one extreme there was Julian Ribera, the Spanish Arabist, who put forward an almost complete claim for this inference, whereas at the other was Felipe Pedrell, the Spanish musicographer, who argued that Spanish music owed nothing essential to the Moors or Arabs. Others again have taken the via media, since there is ample justification for a certain mean of acceptance. As Westrup says: "It is impossible to live in a complex civilization without being affected by a variety of extraneous influences". And in studying the Iberian peninsula, where, for nearly eight centuries, the Moors were probably one-tenth of the population, and by far the most cultured and industrious among its peoples, one cannot close both eyes to these influences in music, even if they be but a tithe of what is palpable in industrial art, science and literature.

Even A. H. Fox Strangways said in 1933: "The Arabs, who taught to Europe their mathematics and medicine, have influenced our music in ways that we are only now finding out".

H. G. F.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

(European works only)

- AL-KHUSHANI, 'Historia de los jueces de Córdoba por Aljovani. Texto árabe y traducción española por Julián Ribera' (Madrid, 1914), pp. 88, 217, 255.
- AL-MAQQARI, 'The History of the Mohammedan Dynasties in Spain'. Trans. by Pascual de Gayangos (London, 1840-45), I, 37, 42, 54, 58-59, 137, 198-99, 365-67, 410-12, 480-81; Append., xii-xvii; II, 116-21, 126, 254.
- BEICHERT, E. A., 'Die Wissenschaft der Musik bei Al-Farabi', inaugural dissertation . . . Freiburg (Ratisbon, 1931).
- BEN CHENEB, 'Muwashshah' ('Encyclopaedia of Islam' (Leyden, 1913-38), III, 795-97).
- BURDACH, K., 'Über den Ursprung des mittelalterlichen Minnesangs, Liebesromanes und Frauendienstes' ('Vorspiel', 'Gesammelte Schriften zur Geschichte des deutschen Geistes', Halle, 1925), pp. 253 et seq.
- COUSSEMAKER, E. DE, 'Scriptores' (Paris, 1864-76), I, 10, 193, 273, 339-41; II, 419.
- CHOTTIN, A., 'Nouba de Ochchak' ('Corpus de musique marocaine', I, Paris, 1931).
- 'Tableau de la musique marocaine' (Paris, 1939).
- DELPHIN, H. & GUIN, L., 'Notes sur la poésie et la musique arabes dans le Maghreb algérien' (Paris, 1886).
- ECKER, L. E., 'Arabischer, provenzalischer und deutscher Minnesang: eine motiveschichtliche Untersuchung' (Berne & Leipzig, 1934).
- EITINGWOOD, L., 'Ars musica' ('Speculum', XX, 1945), pp. 291-92.
- ERCKMANN, R., 'Der Einfluss der arabisch-spanischen Kultur auf die Entwicklung des Minnesangs' ('Deutsche Vierteljahrsschrift für Literatur . . .', Halle, 1931), pp. 240-349.
- ESTÉBANFZ CALDERÓN, S., 'Escenas andaluzas' (Madrid, 1847).
- FALLA, M. DE, 'El cante jondo: canto primitivo andaluz' (Granada, 1922). Fr. trans. in Rev. Mus., IV (1923), pp. 256 et seq.
- FARMER, HENRY G., 'The Arabian Influence on Musical Theory' (London, 1925).

- 'History of Arabian Music' (London, 1929). See index, s.v. 'Andalus'.
- 'Historical Facts for the Arabian Musical Influence' (London, 1930).
- 'Greek Theorists of Music in Arabic Translation' ('Isis', 1930), pp. 125-33.
- 'Music' ('The Legacy of Islam', ed. Arnold & Guillaume, Oxford, 1931), pp. 356-75.
- 'Studies in Oriental Musical Instruments', Ser. I (London, 1931).
- 'An Old Moorish Music Tutor' (Glasgow, 1933).
- 'Histoire abrégée de l'échelle de la musique arabe' ('Recueil de travaux du Congrès de Musique arabe . . .', Cairo, 1932, Cairo, 1934), pp. 647-55.
- 'Al-Farabi's Arabic-Latin Writings on Music' (Glasgow, 1934).
- Musiqi, Ghina, 'Tabl Khāna, Ziryāb, and all instruments' ('Encyclopaedia of Islam', 1928-38).
- 'Studies in Oriental Musical Instruments', Ser. II (Glasgow, 1939), pp. 26-68, 88-98.
- 'The Sources of Arabian Music' (Bearsden, 1942) and in 'Records of the Glasgow Bibliographical Society', XIII.
- 'Music: The Priceless Jewel' (Bearsden, 1942).
- 'Sa'adyah Gaon on the Influence of Music' (London, 1943).
- GFENRICHT, F., 'Zur Ursprungsfrage des Minnesangs' ('Deutsche Vierteljahrsschrift für Literatur . . .', VII, Halle, 1929), pp. 187-227.
- GONZALEZ, FERNANDEZ, 'Estado social y político de los mudéjares de Castilla' (quoted by Ribera), pp. 207, 228, 239, 294, 387.
- HARIMANN, M., 'Das arabische Strophengedicht'. I, 'Das Muwashshah' (Weimar, 1897).
- HASAN HUSNI 'ABD AL-WAHIDAB, 'Le Développement de la musique arabe en Orient, Espagne et Tunisie' (Tunis, 1918).
- HILA, GINÉS PÉREZ DE, 'Las guerras civiles de Granada', ed. by P. Blanchard (Madrid, 1915), I, xxxix, 46; II, 15, 20-21, 153-54, 181.
- HILA, JUAN RUIZ DE, 'Libro de buen amor. Texte du XIV^e siècle . . . par Jean Ducamin' (Toulouse, 1901), vers 1210 et seq., 1517 et seq.
- IBN KHALDUN, 'Prolégomènes historiques' ('Notices et extraits des manuscrits de la Bibl. du Roi', XIX-XXI), I, 39, 236, 430; II, 48-53, 410-22; III, 123, 422-56.
- IBN KHALLIKAN, 'Biographical Dictionary', trans. from the Arabic by . . . McG. de Slaue (Paris-London, 1843-71), II, 467-74.
- LAMBERTINI, M. A., 'Chansons et instruments' (Lisbon, 1902).
- 'Portugal' (Lavignac's 'Encyclopédie de la musique', IV, Paris, 1920), pp. 2401-69.
- LAPARRA, R., 'La Musique et la danse populaires en Espagne' (Lavignac's 'Encyclopédie de la musique', IV, Paris, 1920), pp. 2353-400.
- LONGAS, P., 'Vida religiosa de los moriscos' (Madrid, 1815), pp. 224, 278, 282-83, 411.
- MENÉNDEZ PELAYO, R., 'Antología de poetas líricos' (Madrid, 1903), II, 36, 68.
- MENÉNDEZ PIDAL, R., 'Poesía juglaresca y juglares' (Madrid, 1924), pp. 1-32, 105-6, 137-40, 264, 314-15, 319, 457 et seq.
- 'Poesía árabe y poesía europea' ('Bulletin hispanique', XL, 1939), pp. 337-432.
- MICHAELIS DE VASCONCELLOS, C., 'Cancionero de Ajuda' (Madrid, 1904), II, 899-900.
- MITJANA, RAFAEL, 'En el Magreb el Aksa' (Valencia, 1906), Chap. xvi.
- 'L'Orientalisme et la musique arabe' ('Le Monde oriental' (Uppsala, 1906), pp. 184-221.
- 'La Musique en Espagne' (Lavignac's 'Encyclopédie de la musique', IV, Paris, 1920), pp. 1920-25, 1928-50.
- MORPHY, G. & GEVAERT, F. A., 'Les Luthistes espagnols du XVI^e siècle' (Leipzig, 1902), pp. xi, xvii.
- NYKL, A. R., 'Ibn Hazm's The Dove's Neck-Ring'. Trans. from the Arabic by Nykl (Paris, 1931).
- 'El cancionero de Aben Guzmán'. Trans. from the Arabic by Nykl (Madrid, 1933).
- 'The Latest in Troubadour Studies' ('Archivum Romanicum', XV, Geneva, 1935), pp. 227-36.
- 'L'Influence arabe-andalouse sur les troubadours' ('Bulletin hispanique', XLI, 1939), pp. 305-15.
- 'Troubadour Studies' (Cambridge, 1944).
- 'Hispano-Arabic Poetry' (Baltimore, 1940).
- 'Speculum: a Journal of Medieval Studies' (Cambridge, Mass., XX, 1945), pp. 252-58.

- PEDRELL, FELIPE, 'Cancionero musical popular español' (Valls, 1918), pp. 69, 84.
- PÉREZ, HENRI, 'La Poésie andalouse en Arabe classique au XI^e siècle' (Paris, 1937), chaps. vii, viii.
- REESE, GUSTAVE, 'Music in the Middle Ages' (London, 1941), pp. 119, 149, 211, 217, 245-47, 260, 274, 298, 321, 326-28.
- RIANO, J. F., 'Critical and Bibliographical Notes on Early Spanish Music' (London, 1887), pp. 41-42, 48-49, 108-32.
- RIBERA, JULIAN, 'La música de las cantigas' (Madrid, 1922). Trans. by E. Hague & M. Leffingwell as 'Music in Ancient Arabia and Spain' (1927).
- 'La música andaluza medieval en las canciones de Trovadores, Troveros y Minnesinger' (Madrid, 1923-25).
- 'Orígenes del justicia de Aragón' (Madrid, 1925).
- 'Historia de la música árabe medieval y su influencia en la Española' (Madrid, 1927).
- 'Dissertaciones y opúsculos' (Madrid, 1928).
- ROBLES, F. G., 'Catálogo de los manuscritos árabes existentes en la Biblioteca Nacional de Madrid' (Madrid, 1889), pp. 95, 145, 249-50.
- ROUANET, JULES, 'La Musique arabe dans le Maghreb' (Lavignac's 'Encyclopédie de la musique', V, Paris, 1922), pp. 2813-944.
- SALINAS, F. DE, 'De musica' (Salamanca, 1577), p. 339.
- SCHACK, A. F. VON, 'Poesie und Kunst der Araber in Spanien und Sizilien' (Stuttgart, 1877), pp. 88-162. Spa. trans. by Valera as 'Poesía y arte de los Árabes en España y Sicilia', 3rd ed. (Seville, 1881).
- SCHLUDKO, D., 'Über die arabischen Lehnwörter im Altprovenzalischen' ('Zeitschrift für romanische Philologie', XLVII, 1927).
- 'Die arabische Theorie' ('Archivum Romanicum', XII, 1928), pp. 30-127.
- SCHIAPARELLI, C., 'Vocabulista in Arabico . . . un codice [XIII saeculo] . . .' (Florence, 1871).
- SEYBOLD, C. F., 'Glossarium Latino-Arabicum . . . undecimo saeculo in Hispania conscripto . . .' (Berlin, 1900).
- SINGER, S., 'Arabische und europäische Poesie im Mittelalter' (Abhandl. Preuss. Akad. Wissensch. Phil. Hist., No. 13, 1918).
- SORIANO FUERTES, M., 'Historia de la música española' (Madrid, 1855-59). With caution.
- 'Música árabe-española' (Barcelona, 1853). With caution.
- SPANKE, H., 'Die Theorie Riberas' ('Volkstum und Kultur der Romanen', III, 1930), pp. 258-78.
- SUTER, H., 'Die Mathematiker und Astronomen der Araber und ihre Werke' (Abhandl. Preuss. Akad. Wissensch. Math. Phys. Kl., XIV, Leipzig, 1900-2).
- TREND, J. B., 'Music in Spanish History' (Oxford, 1926).
- 'Alfonso the Sage' (London, 1926).
- 'Spain and Portugal' ('The Legacy of Islam', 1931) pp. 16-19.
- 'Manuel de Falla and Spanish Music' (New York, 1929), pp. 19-35, 41-42, 74-78.
- URSPRUNG, O., 'Um die Frage nach dem arabischen bzw. maurischen Einfluss auf die abendländische Musik des Mittelalters' (Z.N.W., 1934, pp. 130-41). It ignores all that Farmer had written from 1926 on the subject.
- WESTRUP, J. A., 'Song' (O.H.M., 2nd ed. Oxford, 1932), II, 298-99, 301.
- YAFIL, EDMOND, 'Majmū' al-aghānī wa'l-alhān min kalām al-Andalus' (Algiers, 1904).
- YAFIL, EDMOND & ROUANET, J., 'Répertoire de musique arabe et maure: collection d'ouvertures, mélodies, noubat, chansons, préludes, danses, etc.' (Algiers, 1904, et seq.).

MOORS. Flemish 16th-century family of organ builders and organists. It originated at Lier, in the ancient duchy of Brabant (now part of the province of Antwerp).

(1) Jacob Moors (b. Lier, ?; d. Antwerp, ?). He lived in the 15th century and was the first to settle down at Antwerp, where his four famous sons were born. He was bound by a loyal friendship to Harry Bredemers, another native of Lier, who became court organist to Philip le Bel and later to Margaret of Austria and of the Emperor Charles V. Bredemers induced the court to buy a "manicordium" made by Marc Moors of Lier, a relative of Jacob.

(2) Antoon Moors (b. Antwerp, c. 1490; d. ?, c. 1562), eldest son of the preceding. He began to work on his own account in 1514, as organ builder and mender to the Burgundian court. In 1516 he went into the service of Antwerp cathedral, to which he remained uninterruptedly attached until 1551, as the church accounts testify. In the meantime, in 1523, he delivered an organ to St. Peter's church at Leuven, which was praised for being the best in the country, and in 1553 he built another organ, for Our Lady's church at Dendermonde. In 1527 he had been called to Saint-Omer to repair the organ of St. Bertinus's church. In 1555 he signed an agreement with the Duke Albrecht of Mecklenburg to deliver an organ for the cathedral of Schwerin, and this was followed up by a similar contract with the Elector Joachim II of Brandenburg, for the cathedral of Berlin. In 1557 Antoon Moors went to Schwerin and in 1559 to Berlin in order to mount the instruments made by him. Whether he ever returned to his native land is not known, but he was already dead and buried in Aug. 1562, when his daughter Paulina disposed of her heritage.

The organ of Schwerin exercised a great and lasting influence on the art of organ building in Germany by the original and particularly favourable disposition of its stops, which undoubtedly also influenced organ playing in other Germany. The instrument was hailed with satisfaction as a revelation in organ construction and imitated on a large scale, and had its effect on the forerunners and pioneers of the renowned north German organ school of Samuel Scheidt, itself a branch of the illustrious Netherlands tradition of organ playing established by Sweelinck.

(3) Hieronymus Moors (b. Antwerp, 1519; d. Schwerin, 1598), brother of the preceding. He became organist at the cathedral of Schwerin in 1552, and it appears to have been due to him that his elder brother received the commission to build the organ there.

(4) Jacob Moors (b. Antwerp, ?; d. ?, after 1603), brother of the preceding. He was appointed court organist to the Elector of Saxony at Dresden in 1554 and left for Berlin in 1572 to enter the service of the Elector Johann Georg of Brandenburg. He was still alive in 1603.

(5) Cornelius Moors (b. Antwerp, ?; d. Antwerp, 1556), brother of the preceding. He was the only son of the elder Jacob Moors who remained permanently at Antwerp, where he often replaced his eldest brother, Antoon, as organ builder and mender at the cathedral, e.g. in 1535-38 and 1555. He also built the organ at St. Catherine's church at Mechlin in 1543, and in 1556 he repaired the organ of Our Lady's church there and delivered a large new organ to St. Walpurga's church at Oudenaarde. He must have died that year, for his widow then received a sum in payment for the work done by him at Our Lady's of Mechlin.

(6) Joachim Moors (b. ?; d. ?), son of Jacob Moors, jun. (4), whose former post as court organist at Dresden he was given in 1579.

A. L. C.

BIBL. — CORBET, A., 'Antoon Moors: a Flemish Organ Builder' (M. & L., XXVIII, 262).

HAACKE, WALTHER, 'Die Entwicklungsgeschichte der Orgelbaus im Lande Mecklenburg-Schwerin' (Schwerin, 1935).

KADE, O., 'Die Organistenfamilie Moors im XVI. Jahrh.' ('Monatshefte für Musikgeschichte', XXIX, 43).

STELLFELD, J. A., 'Bronnen tot de Geschiedenis der Antwerpsche Clavecimbel en Orgelbouwers, in de XVI^e. en XVII^e. Eeuwen' (Antwerp, 1942).

MOOSER, Aloys (b. Fribourg, 1770; d. Fribourg, 19 Dec. 1829).

Swiss organ builder. His greatest instruments are those at Fribourg and in the New Temple at Berne. He also made pianofortes.

G.

MOOSER, R. (Robert) Aloys (b. Geneva, 20 Sept. 1876).

Swiss musicologist. He went through a course of study in pianoforte, organ and theory with his father, and in 1896 he began a course in composition with Balakirev and in orchestration with Rimsky-Korsakov in St. Petersburg. In 1897-1909 he was organist of the French Protestant church there and music critic of the French 'Journal'. During that period he laid the foundations for the studies in music in Russia during the 18th century which later on resulted in important publications. In 1909 he became music critic to the Geneva newspaper 'La Suisse', and in 1923-46 he was manager and editor of the periodical 'Dissonances', which took a considerable share in the advocacy of modern music. His publications are:

'L'Opéra comique en Russie au XVIII^e siècle' (Geneva, 1932, 2nd ed. in preparation).

'Violonistes-compositeurs italiens en Russie au XVIII^e siècle' (Milan, 1938-48).

'Opéras, intermezzos, ballets, cantates, oratorios joués en Russie durant le XVIII^e siècle' (Geneva, 1945).

'Regards sur la musique contemporaine, 1921-46' (Lausanne, 1946).

'Annales de la musique et des musiciens en Russie au XVIII^e siècle', 3 vols. (Geneva, 1948-52).

E. B.

MOQUÉ, Antoine (b. Ostend, 1 Aug. 1659; d. Ostend, 23 Aug. 1723).

Netherlands organist, carillonist and composer. He became a choir-boy in the parish church of his native town and remained attached to it as an adult singer after 1677. At the same time he studied the humanities at the Oratory. On 9 Aug. 1680 he left his post to go to Louvain as a novice of the Oratorians, but he lived at Bruges as organist of the church of St. Donat. He received holy orders there in 1691 and became a priest on 20 Sept. 1692. From 1689 his name appears as that of a musician attached to the Ostend church, and by 1691 he was chapel master there. After another absence from 1706 to 1709, he was engaged in 1711 to try out the new carillon made by Guillaume Witlockx of Antwerp to replace that destroyed in the bombardment of 1706. In 1722 he performed a similar service at Bruges.

Mouqué published various musical works from 1690 onwards: in 1704 a book of carols, in 1710 a 'Messe solennelle' and a motet, in 1712-13 two other masses, and other sacred works in 1715 and 1718-19. His church music includes a Magnificat, an 'Opus Soloon', a Passion, a 'Salve Regina', Lamentations for 4 voices, etc. He also wrote some instrumental music.

E. B.

MORALES, Cristóbal de (b. Seville, c. 1500; d. ? Marchena, between 4 Sept. & 7 Oct. 1553).

Spanish composer. In contemporary documents the addition of the latinized hispalensis after his name denotes he was a native of Seville. He himself, long after he had left his native city and won fame elsewhere, harked back to his Sevillian origin with what now seems a certain fierce pride. In Rome, for instance, where in 1544 he published sixteen of his masses in sumptuous twin folio volumes, he not only signed himself in each of the Latin dedications "Christophorus Morales Hispalensis", but also the printers were instructed at the beginning of each mass throughout both volumes to display after his name in bold type the identifying "hispalensis" in equally bold type.

His pride in being known as a Sevillian seems not misplaced when it is remembered that as a youth at Seville he was the beneficiary of an exceptionally rich musical heritage. Two theoretical treatises written there during the 15th century, one by Fernand Esteban and the other anonymous (1480), show that musical studies at Seville were equal to those at Salamanca during the century anterior to Morales. Both the first and second printed Spanish music books appeared (1492 and 1494) at Seville, "the chief city of the world", according to the printers' boast on the title-page of the 1494 book. Of the three principal composers in Spain during Morales's earliest years, Anchieta, Peñalosa and Escobar, two are known to have enjoyed official dignities in Seville Cathedral. Francisco de Peñalosa, among predecessor Spaniards the composer whose technique most closely resembles that of Morales, was resident there as a canon during 1513¹ and thence went to Rome, where he is known to have been a singer in the pontifical choir a dozen years before Morales gained a similar distinction. Pedro Escobar, the other of the three pre-eminent Spanish composers during Morales's youth, became maestro de capilla at Seville on 24 May 1507. Later he was appointed master of the boy choristers (seises) in the cathedral. Escobar, who remained chapelmaster until 3 Jan. 1513, though inferior to Peñalosa in musical craftsmanship, was nevertheless a composer whose fame passed national boundaries. With personalities such as these resident at Seville during his youth Morales had no need to look beyond it for musical instruction. He has been assumed to have profited also from the instruction of Escobar's successor in the Seville chapelmastership, Pedro Fernández de Castilleja², appointed on 13 Aug. 1514 and active occupant of the post during the next thirty-five years.

Morales's education extended beyond music. Both his lengthy Latin dedications (1544 Masses, Bks. I and II) show him to have been a master of Ciceronian prose. In his case, as in that of Goudimel, a period of intensive classical training must be assumed. Morales himself (dedication, Bk. I) claimed that he had from a very early age (ab ineunte aetate) wholeheartedly addressed himself to those disciplines known as the liberal arts (trivium and quadrivium). He said he had worked sedulously at his studies so that no one engaged in his own art might despise his preparation in the other liberal arts.

His first professional appointment was to the post of maestro de capilla of the oldest Gothic cathedral in Spain, that at Ávila.³ This lasted from 8 Aug. 1526 until 12 Oct. 1530 and carried with it an annual salary of 100 ducats. His next notable appointment was to the papal choir in Rome, where he was admitted as a singer on 1 Sept. 1535.⁴

The pontifical choir had included Spanish singers a full century before his time; the Spanish popes, Calixtus III and Alexander VI, had especially favoured them. Julius II (1512)⁵ hoped to end the dominating position of the French and Spanish in the pontifical choir, but his successor, Clement VII, still relied heavily upon them. Morales therefore found himself but one of several Spaniards when he joined the choir, and before he left it a decade later two more had joined it.

Since from the Sistine diaries it is apparent that a spirit of intense clannishness prevailed among the Spaniards, it is among these others, Nuñez, Calasanz and Sánchez of the senior group and Escobedo and Ordoñez among the juniors that we must look for Morales's closest personal associates in the choir.

Morales, in the dedication of his second book of masses, said he owed his appointment to the personal interest of Paul III. During the ten years he was in the choir Paul III (who became pope in 1534) enlarged the personnel from twenty-four to thirty-three, raised the pay of its members and gave it new regulations. Because of his exceptional liberality to singers later historians of the pontifical choir looked back on his time as a golden age. In every way, it can be shown, Morales profited from Paul III's musical interests.

Morales was listed on the date of his entrance ('Liber Punctorum', f. 17) as "clericus hispalensis d[iocesis]". From other evidence, however, it is likely that he was not a presbyter but only a deacon or less. In order to share in all the money gifts and feasts from which the choir benefited beyond the regular salary, he paid ten ducats into the chest on the day of his formal admission, this sum to be divided among the older members of the choir. His own regular salary was fixed at 8 ducats a month. He was also provided with a servant and, when he travelled in the pope's retinue to such places as Nice, Loreto or Bologna, a horse. His actual earnings were always much greater than his stated salary. On such occasions as Charles V's entry into Rome during Apr. 1536, for instance, he had an opportunity to sing for the emperor and along with the other choir members to receive a handsome gift. One reason for the rapid diffusion of his own music throughout all Europe was the opportunity he shared with the other choristers to perform it frequently before the greatest rulers.

His earliest dated composition for an official event was the 6-part cantata 'Jubilemus omnis terra', written for the peace celebrations at Nice during June 1538. The pope, in order properly to garb the twenty singers who accompanied him to Nice, spent on 8 June 300 baiochi for new velvet gowns out of his privy purse. Thus not only was the texture of Morales's music for the occasion rich, but the singers performing it made a sumptuous appearance. The pope, though unable to bring Charles V and Francis I actually face to face at Nice, at least prevailed upon them to sign a ten years' peace treaty. Morales's cantata — a composition in two extended movements throughout both of which one voice incessantly repeats the word "gaudeamus" over a short ostinato figure while the other five voices discourse on the merits of

¹ H. Anglés, 'La música en la corte de los Reyes Católicos', p. 7.

² Called "maestro de los maestros de España" in F. Guerrero's 'Viaje de Hierusalem' (prologue).

³ Z.M.W., 1920, p. 551.

⁴ Riv. Mus. It., 1907, p. 98.

⁵ Bullarium Vaticanum¹, II, 348.

pope, emperor and king — was sung in celebration of this happy presage. Unlike other occasional compositions, this survived its day and remained popular in Spain even after Morales's death. Enríquez de Valderrábano in 1547 transcribed it for two lutes and Fuenllana in 1554 for one lute.

Among other occasional compositions Morales is known to have written is the 6-part cantata 'Gaude et lactare Ferrariensis civitas', sung at Ferrara cathedral on Sunday, 9 Mar. 1539¹, when news of Ippolito II d'Este's elevation to a cardinalate was released. Ippolito had for a considerable time known of the new dignity in store for him, having been named at the consistory of 20 Dec. 1538, though public announcement was withheld. He had used the intervening time to prepare for the public announcement which was made at Ferrara with pomp and splendour enhanced by previously prepared poems, congratulatory addresses and musical compliments. Morales also wrote occasional motets honouring patron saints of societies devoted to Martin, Lucia, Andrew and others, but whether he was actually paid for these is not known. His occasional compositions, unlike those of better-known composers, are remarkable because not inferior in quality to his unsolicited music.

As a day-by-day record of choir activities was kept², it is still possible to reconstruct Morales's whereabouts and activities during nearly the whole time he sang in it. The choir occasionally performed in the Sistine Chapel (whose walls Michelangelo was in the process of covering during Morales's decade in Rome), but more often in the Pauline Chapel or in churches outside the Vatican. Though entirely an adult men's choir, trebles were available because of the presence of falsettists in it. Formerly Morales was thought to have been himself a falsettist, as were many other Spaniards in the choir during his century, but recent evidence gathered from the Sistine diaries seems to show that he was a baritone.³ His sixteen masses published in 1544, having been written especially for the choir⁴, give some idea of the qualifications of its singers during his decade.

Morales's publications began to appear in 1539. Jacques Moderne, the publisher at Lyons, printed in that year two 4-part motets as part of an anthology, 'Motetti del fiore'. In that year also appeared Morales's madrigal 'Ditimi o sì o no', his only secular composition and his only music with Italian words to appear during his lifetime. This madrigal was published at the instance of Arcadelt, who was at the moment maestro of the Cappella Giulia, but a year later joined Morales in the pontifical choir. In 1540 three of Morales's masses were published in collections issued by Scotto at Venice. The further bibliography of his works shows that these were but small beginnings: every year thereafter during the 1540s and 1550s a steady stream of his works flowed from music presses at Lyons, Wittenberg, Nuremberg, Augsburg, Antwerp, Milan, Rome and, more especially, Venice.

His next important journey after that to Nice occurred in Sept. 1539, when he accompanied the pope to Loreto. This trip lasted a month. On 4 Apr. 1540, having served his first five-year term in the choir (after which, according to the choir constitutions⁵, he was entitled to a ten months' leave in his own country with pay), he left for Spain. His name does not appear in the Sistine diaries until a year later. During the intervening months, however, the mandati di pagamento now preserved in the Sistine archives⁶ show his monthly payments of eight ducats to have continued until Nov. 1540, after which his pay was raised to nine ducats a month.

On 25 May 1541 he was again in Rome and received the special feast-box sent from the pope's kitchen on a rotated list to choir members. He did not, however, sing regularly again until the autumn. His second five years in Rome are notable because of the extraordinary amount of publication his works achieved during that period; but also for the ever-increasing number of days he lost from his choir duties on account of illness. In 1536 he lost nine, in 1537 fourteen; but in 1543 he lost thirty-five and in 1544 ninety. Possibly connected in some way with the deterioration of his health was his change of lodgings on 10 July 1542.

His last extensive journey as papal chorister occurred in the spring of 1543. On 4 Mar. the pope left Rome, reaching Bologna two weeks later. Thereafter until 1 July the papal retinue moved constantly through northern Italy. On 16 May Morales obtained special leave for a short excursion to Genoa⁷, where the Emperor Charles V was expected. The exact nature of Morales's private business cannot now be determined, but since his time there coincided exactly with the week the imperial forces were there (25 May to 2 June) it is now thought that he spent his time exploring possibilities for a change of service from pope to emperor. This seems the more likely since a day or so after his return to the choir he had a violent quarrel with a senior Spaniard, the bass Calasanz.⁸ Morales was

¹ F. Rodi, 'Annali di Ferrara' (MS Bibl. Estense).

² 'Liber Punctorum', 1535-40; 'Puncta Cantorum', 1540-45.

³ 'Note d' Archivio', 1934, p. 76.

⁴ 'Qualiacunque ea sint ut in agello tua nata' (Ded. Bk. II, 1544).

⁵ F. X. Haberl, 'Die römische Schola Cantorum . . .', p. 101.

⁶ Capp. Sist. MS 678, ff. 99-101.

⁷ Capp. Sist. Diar. 2, f. 35v.

⁸ Ibid., f. 44.

fined 200 baiocchi for misconduct. This quarrel is Morales's only recorded breach of discipline during his whole time of service in the choir.

The pope's objective during his spring tour of 1543 was another conference with Charles. At last the two met at Busseto on 21 June. Like the Nice conference this four-day meeting was a brilliant event, with Titian present to paint pope and emperor, and with the grandees of Spain and Italy present to hear the papal and imperial choirs. Soon after the Busseto conference the papal choir members were rewarded with a three months' vacation. Despite this opportunity for recuperation, however, and a like opportunity the next summer, Morales was ill during the mid-winters of both 1543-44 and 1544-45. The first time he lost 36 consecutive days and the second 42. Yet it cannot be said that his duties as a chorister were physically arduous at any time. He had Wednesdays free regularly each week. The calibre of his professional associates in the choir can be judged from the fact that two others free on the same day of the week were Costanzo Festa and Arcadelt.¹

Not only those with famous names but also several others in the choir during his decade were prolific composers. Morales had, moreover, opportunities for constant contact with the eminent in the other arts in Paul III's employ. Nevertheless, when the time came for his second ten months' leave with pay in 1545, he left the choir for good.

His dedications in both 1544 books of masses show him to have been actively searching for more lucrative employment. In the first he promised Cosimo de' Medici to dedicate all his future works to him if he would take him under his protection. That the Grand Duke of Tuscany did not rise to the offer is evident from the second dedication, which was to the pope. Having failed to win the favour of Cosimo, Morales boldly asked the pope to confer an ecclesiastical dignity on him. The pope, however, failed to do so, while giving lucrative benefices to three others in the choir, none of whom had distinguished themselves as composers of sacred music — Arcadelt, Dankerts and Ivo Barry.² Arcadelt was, moreover, Morales's junior in the choir by some five years.

On 1 May 1545 Morales "abiit ad partes de licentia per menses decem". On 31 Aug. of the same year, having passed the various prescribed tests, he was appointed maestro de capilla of the primatial cathedral in Spain, that of Toledo. The Toledo cabildo (governing body) decided that 43,500 maravedis were annually to be paid him³ — a sum much larger than that paid the previous chapel master — because of his "reputation" gained by the publication in Rome of his two books of masses. But even with this salary Morales failed to manage his finances. According to his agreement with the Toledo authorities he was obliged to board and lodge the choirboys out of the sum paid to him. The ensuing year, 1546, was one of high prices and food shortages at Toledo. In Mar. Morales had to borrow and again in Oct.⁴ To make matters worse he was gravely ill during the intervening months. On 9 Aug. 1547 he renounced the chapel mastership and with it the attached prebend (Ración 44 de Tenor). His reason was clear enough: he had gone to Toledo to make money and instead had run into debt.

Even had he made money at Toledo, however, his previous style of composition would hardly have suited the requirements there. His reputation had been built with works for a unified, unaccompanied choir; the documents of financial control certify that copyists and librarians were part of the papal choir personnel, but not organists. But at Toledo, except during prohibited ecclesiastical seasons, organs were in constant use during the whole of the 16th century. Two organists were paid during Morales's tenure, one of them the blind Francisco Sacedo.⁵ The Toledo choir was, moreover, divided into two disjunct units, the dean's choir and the archbishop's choir. Effective as these groups may have been in antiphonally conceived music, Morales's Roman style could not but suffer in performance by a divided choir. Had he chosen, he could undoubtedly have adapted his style to Spanish requirements — as later Victoria did under similar circumstances — but he did not. Only one of the various Morales masses copied into the Toledo choir-books can reasonably be regarded as a product of the Toledo period, and that one is a missa cortilla ("short mass").

After leaving Toledo Morales escapes notice until 1549. In 'El Arte Tripharia' (privilege granted 18 Nov. 1549) Juan Bermudo locates him at Marchena as "maestro de capilla de mi señor el Duque de Arcos". He held this post at least a year. While still serving at Marchena as private chapel master to the Duke of Arcos, Morales, on 20 Oct. 1550, wrote a commendatory letter for insertion in Bermudo's forthcoming second edition of the 'Declaración de instrumentos'. In this letter⁶ he commends Bermudo's method of instruction because it led from the easy to the difficult, the known to the unknown. He approves of Bermudo's brevity and, at the

¹ F. Rubio Piqueras, 'Música y músicos toledanos', pp. 86-87.

² Ibid., p. 66. For Morales's own pejorative comment on Spanish organists see 'Declaración' (1555), f. cxxviii^v.

³ 'Declaración' (1555), f. cxxviii^v.

⁴ Capp. Sist. Diar. 2, f. 94.

⁵ 'Note d' Archivio', 1933, p. 110.

⁶ F. Pedrell, 'Hispaniæ Schola Musica Sacra', I, xxiii.

same time, concern for finishing a topic once begun. He also praises Bermudo's fluent and easy style, and his insistence that theory and practice move constantly hand in hand. Because one of Morales's known opponents at Toledo was the maestrescuela (schoolmaster), what he has to say on educational method in his commendatory letter for Bermudo's 'Declaración' makes pertinent reading. Whether he was himself as progressive as were the methods he admired in Bermudo cannot now be ascertained, but he did have at least one pupil after his return from Italy whose success would commend even the most obscure of teachers — Francisco Guerrero.

On 27 Nov. 1551 Morales was appointed maestro de capilla of the inferior cathedral at Málaga.¹ There, during the last two years of his life, he is known to have been even unhappier than he had been at Toledo. He did not start well with his singers; within a week of his appointment (4 Dec.) the cathedral chapter had to order the singers to obey the new chapel master. Shortly before Christmas Morales moved into a house provided by the chapter; presumably he was responsible, as he had been at Toledo, for boarding and educating the choir-boys. In July of the next year, 1552, he asked permission to go home; the cabildo warily responded, giving him leave to depart at the end of the month, but for the statutory time-limit "and no more". On 29 May 1553 he was reprimanded at a chapter meeting because his singers had misbehaved during a procession. He himself was fined a day's pay and the singers three days' pay. On 14 June he appeared before the chapter and asked leave to travel again "out of absolute necessity". The chapter consented and also remitted the fines imposed on him and his singers.

In Aug., the Toledo chapelmastership having unexpectedly become vacant again, he wrote asking for consideration. A determined minority — including the *maestrescuela*² — pronounced against inviting him back. Although the cabildo could have allowed his immediate return without further formality, the members instead voted that if he wished to return he must stand trial in an open competition just as he had done eight years before, when first appointed at Toledo. The four other competitors were persons of no consequence and Morales was one of the most eminent composers in Europe. At the very moment, for instance, that he submitted himself a second time to the Toledo formalities Rabelais in France was writing³ of a fanciful garden in which he imagined he heard Morales and other delightful musicians sweetly singing ("Morales . . . & autres joyeux musiciens . . . mignonement chantans"). He nevertheless persisted in his candidacy despite the rebuff and sent in his name with the proper attestations on 4 Sept. But he was not to compete: by 7 Oct. he was dead, and the Málaga house he had occupied was ready for disposal to a new occupant.

His reputation continued to grow after his death. During the next thirty years compositions of his appeared on an average once a year in France, Germany, Italy, Spain or the Low Countries. His fame spread as far afield as Mexico, where his music was chosen for performance in 1559 at what was surely the most sumptuous event in 16th-century Mexico — the commemorative services for Charles V. Cervantes de Salazar ('Túmulo imperial', 1560) praised the choice of music for the occasion and said Morales "gave great contentment to the hearers". The earliest printed polyphony copied for use in the New World was by Morales — the 1544 masses.⁴

At present his works are known to have appeared in at least 65 different imprints before 1600. Because of his international popularity his bibliography is extremely complicated — more nearly comparable, in fact, with Lassus's than with Victoria's or Guerrero's. The gathering of references to his music from theoretical sources of his own and the next century is an even more complex task. A list of those theorists who within a hundred years of his death referred to his works, citing them as technical models, would include Bermudo and Montanos in Spain; Zacconi, Artusi, Baccusi, de Grandis, Bonini and Cerone in Italy; and Antonio Fernandez, Alvarez Frouvo and Nunes da Silva in Portugal.

The opinion of the 18th century was summed up by Adami in 1711 when he listed Morales as the most important composer in the papal chapel between Josquin des Prés and Palestrina.⁵ Adami particularly praised the masses because of their polish, their learned contrivance and their elevated style. He called Morales's 'Lamentabatur Jaco*' the most precious work in the entire Sistine Chapel archives, referring to it as "a marvel of art". Fornari in 1749, discussing Palestrina's achievement ('Missa Papae Marcelli') in placing the words so that they could be properly understood, praised Morales as the composer who first showed the right way to set words intelligibly in a contrapuntal fabric.⁶

Late 19th-century historians saw Morales through Wagnerian eyes⁷, but at least in that

¹ Documents in Pedrell, H.S.M.S., I, Introduction.

² Rubio Piqueras, p. 79.

³ 'La vie, faits & dicts heroïques de Gargantua . . .', 1553, p. 668.

⁴ Tesoro artístico of the Puebla Cathedral (Puebla, Mexico).

⁵ 'Osservazioni', pp. 10-11.

⁶ Capp. Sist. MS 606, p. 18.

⁷ Pedrell was representative.

century an effort was made to publish his works in modern score. Disservice was, however, done him by Eslava and Pedrell, both of whom insisted on attributing to Morales Victoria's highly expressive motet 'O vos omnes', while at the same time calling it Morales's most typical work. Pedrell later discovered his error when he came to edit the complete works of Victoria, but having already called 'O vos omnes' the elder master's most characteristic composition he was hardly in a position to admit his lapse publicly. In order properly to understand Morales's style it is therefore now necessary to discount much of what Pedrell — who really sketched the profile of Victoria rather than Morales — had to say, and instead to return to 16th-century critics such as Bermudo, who knew Morales's works, or better still, to go to the music itself.

Bermudo, thoroughly a Spaniard himself, called Morales "the light of Spain in music", but at the same time listed "the excellent Morales" along with "the profound Gombert" as foreign. "I count", he explained, "our Morales as a foreign composer because, though his music possesses the charm and pleasing sound of Spanish music, yet at the same time it does not lack the profundity, the technical skill and the artifice of foreign music."¹ As examples of Morales's principal achievements he listed not the languorous motets which we know, but rather two amazingly adroit canons above a given plain-song.² The transcriptions Fuenllana made of Morales's music prove that Bermudo was not the only Spaniard who placed his canons among his principal compositions.

Morales's musical style has not yet been subjected to the close scrutiny given to Palestrina's by Jeppesen or Gombert's by Schmidt-Görg³; but already it is apparent that Morales was much nearer to Gombert than Palestrina as far as technique is concerned. The distinguishing traits of Morales's style include: (1) a frequent use of cross-rhythms of the type in which one voice sings threes against twos or fours in the other voices; (2) frequent cross-rhythms of the type in which one or more voices sing melodic figures whose natural rhythms run counter to the sense of the written metre; (3) frequent use of melodic sequence and melodic repetition, but not of harmonic sequence or repetition; (4) excessive use of the incomplete nota cambiata, i.e. the first three notes of the changing-note figure without the addition of the crucial stepwise turn upwards on the fourth note later deemed indispensable⁴; (5) skips from dissonances that cannot be justified even as incomplete changing-note figures; (6) harmonic cross-relationships, guaranteed by printed accidentals, of the type Tudor composers favoured; (7) a systematic use of consecutives banned in the later Palestrina style; (8) an impartial use of all the modes, i.e. with the Phrygian as often used as the other more familiar ones; (9) occasional harmonic daring, such as the use of the diminished triad in root position on a relatively strong beat. Bermudo was responsible for calling attention to this last trait in Morales's style⁵, which we now in our uncertainty regarding the use of accidentals in the 16th century could not be sure of without Bermudo's authority and citation of example. Other theorists of the same century were as well aware as Bermudo of Morales's individuality, and in some instances — Artusi⁶ and Zacconi⁷, for example — cited Morales as an authority for procedures that could not be justified from the works of Palestrina.

Morales is now more frequently praised for the plangent expressiveness of his great motets 'Emendemus in melius' and 'Lamentabatur Jacob' than for his canonic feats in such a mass as the 'Ave maris stella'. But these motets show only one phase of his genius. Like Bach, whose 'Vom Himmel hoch' Variations need to be known along with his expressive sarabands, Morales, to be fully known, must be seen not only as one of the expressive geniuses of his epoch, but also as a composer who could write his masses ad fugam.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ANGLÈS, H., 'Morales: Opera Omnia' (Barcelona, 1953-).
 (ed.), 'Anuario musical', 1953.
 Catalogue, Biblioteca Medinaceli ('Revue Hispanique', 1927, pp. 485-554).
 ELÚSTIZA, J. B. DE & CASTRILLO HERNÁNDEZ, G., 'Antología musical' (Barcelona, 1933).
 MITJANA, R., 'Cristóbal de Morales: estudio crítico-biográfico' (Madrid, 1920).
 'Cristóbal de Morales' in 'Estudios sobre algunos músicos españoles' (Madrid, 1918).
 TREND, J. B., 'Cristóbal Morales' (M. & L., Jan., 1925)
See also footnote references.

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

The following is a provisional list of works by Morales. The earliest printed editions are mentioned, so far as they are known. MSS are mentioned only when no printed edition has been discovered.

1. MASSES

(a) PRINTED

- 'Aspice Domine, 4 v. Missarum Liber I.' (Rome: Dorici fratres, 1544.) — 'Missarum quinque cum quatuor vocibus. Secundus liber.' (Venice: Gardano, 1544.) — 'Missae quinque cum quatuor vocibus.' (Venice: Rampazetto, 1563.)
 'Ave Maria, 4 v. Missae cum quatuor vocibus paribus decantandae, Moralis Hispani, ac aliorum auctorum.' (Venice: Scotto, 1542.) — 'Missarum Liber II.' (Rome: Dorici fratres, 1544.) —

¹ 'Declaración' (1549), f. xv (Prologo).

² Ibid. (1555), f. cxxxviii.

³ See, however, the present author's article in 'Anuario musical' (1953).

⁴ The "incomplete nota cambiata" is also a hallmark of Peñalosa's style.

⁵ 'Declaración', f. cxxxix.

⁶ 'L'arte del contrappunto', 1598, p. 40.

⁷ 'Prattica di musica', 1596, ff. 164v, 188, 190, 192, 210v.

- 'Liber quartus Missarum quinque cum quatuor vocibus paribus canendum.' (Venice: Gardano, 1544.) 'Et resurrexit', 'Osanna' and 'Agnus Dei' transcribed for lute by Fuenllana, 'Orphenica lyra'. (Seville, 1554; Madrid, 1564.)
- 'Ave maris stella, 5 v. Liber I.' (Rome, 1544.)
- 'Benedicta es, colorum Regina, 4 v. Liber II.' (Rome, 1544.) 'Et ascendit' and 'Benedictus' transcr. by Fuenllana, t.c.
- 'Benedictus' and 'Osanna' intab. in Matelart's 'Intavolatura de leuto' (Venice, 1551).
- 'Cum sancto spirito' transcr. for lute in Enriquez de Valderrábano's 'Silva de sirenas' (Valladolid, 1547).
- 'De beata Virgine, 4 v. Excellentissimi musici Moralis Hispani, Gomberti, ac Jacheti, cum quatuor vocibus Missae.' (Venice: Scotto, 1540.)— 'Liber I.' (Rome, 1544.)— 'Missarum quinque . . . Secundus liber.' (Venice: Gardano, 1544.)— 'Missae quinque . . .' (Venice: Rampazetto, 1563.)
- 'De beata Virgine, 5 v. Quinque Missae Moralis Hispani, ac Jacheti musici excellentissimi.' (Venice: Scotto, 1540.)— 'Quinque Missarum harmonia diapente, idest quinque voces referens.' (Venice: Scotto, 1543.)— 'Liber II.' (Rome, 1544.)— 'Quinque Missarum harmonia diapente.' (Venice: Gardano, 1547.)— 'Quinque Missarum harmonia cum quinque vocibus.' (Venice: Scotto, 1565.)
- 'Gaude Barbara, 4 v. Liber II.' (Rome, 1544.) 'Benedictus' transcr. by Fuenllana, t.c.
- 'L'homme armé, 5 v. Quinque Missae . . .' (Venice: Scotto, 1540.)— 'Quinque Missarum harmonia diapente.' (Venice: Scotto, 1543.)— 'Liber I.' (Rome, 1544.)— 'Quinque Missarum harmonia diapente.' (Venice: Gardano, 1547.)— 'Quinque Missarum harmonia cum quinque vocibus.' (Venice: Scotto, 1565.)
- 'L'homme armé, 4 v. Liber II.' (Rome, 1544.) 'Et resurrexit', 'Benedictus' and 'Agnus Dei' transcr. by Fuenllana, t.c.
- 'Mille regretz, 6 v. Liber I.' (Rome, 1544.) 'Benedictus' transcr. for lute by Fuenllana, t.c. and 'Et in Spiritum' for 2 lutes by Enriquez de Valderrábano, 'Silva de Sirenas'. (Valladolid, 1547.)
- 'Pro defunctis, 5 v. Liber II.' (Rome, 1544.)
- 'Quaeramus cum pastoribus, 5 v. Quinque Missarum harmonia diapente.' (Venice: Scotto, 1543.)— 'Liber I.' (Rome, 1544.)— 'Quinque Missarum harmonia cum quinque vocibus.' (Venice: Scotto, 1565.)
- 'Quem dicunt homines, 5 v. Liber II.' (Rome, 1544.)
- 'Si bona suscepimus, 6 v. Liber I.' (Rome, 1544.)
- 'Tu es vas electionis, 4 v. Liber II.' (Rome, 1544.) 'Crucifixus' transcr. by Fuenllana, t.c.
- 'Vulnerasti cor meum, 4 v. Missae cum quatuor vocibus paribus.' (Venice: Scotto, 1542.)— 'Liber I.' (Rome, 1544.)— 'Missarum quinque . . . Secundus liber.' (Venice: Gardano, 1544.)— 'Missae quinque . . .' (Venice: Rampazetto, 1563.)
- Moderne at Lyons reprinted Lib. I 'Missarum' in 1546 and Lib. II in 1551.

(b) MANUSCRIPTS

- 'Missa Caça, 4 v.' Madrid: Bibl. Medinaceli, MS 607.
- 'Missa cortilla, 4 v.' Toledo: Codex 26. Valladolid: Santiago Codex. Madrid: Bibl. Medinaceli, MS 607 (where it is entitled 'Fa Re Ut Fa Sol La').
- 'Missa Decidle' al cavallero.' Milan: Bibl. Ambrosiana, MS Mus. E. 46.
- 'Missa Pro Defunctis, 4 v.' Valladolid: Santiago Codex.
- 'Tristeza me matan triste de my, 5 v.' Rome: Cappella Sistina, 17 cart.
- 'Ut Re Mi Fa Sol La, 4 v.' Madrid: Bibl. Medinaceli, MS 607.

2. LAMENTATIONS

Lamentationi di Morales a quatro, a cinque, et a sei voci.' (Venice: Rampazetto, 1564; also Gardano, 1564.) 'Et factum est postquam captivitatem' ('Lamentation a cinco') transcr. for lute by Fuenllana, t. c.

3. MAGNIFICATS

- 'Magnificat cum quatuor vocibus Moralis Hispani, aliorumque authorum.' (Venice: Scotto, 1542.) I, II, IV, VI and VII tones.

- 'Postremum vespertini officii opus . . .' (Wittenberg: Rhaw, 1544.) I, II, IV, VI and VII tones.
- 'Magnificat Moralis Ispani cum quatuor vocibus. Liber Primus.' (Venice: Gardano, 1545.)— 'Magnificat Moralis Ispani cum quatuor vocibus.' (Venice: Gardano, 1547, 1552, 1559.)— 'Magnificat omnium cum quatuor vocibus Christophori Moralis Hispani aliorumque excellentium viro- rum.' (Venice: Gardano, 1562.)— 'Magnificat Moralis Ispani.' (Venice: Rampazetto, 1563; Gorreggio, 1568; Gardano, 1575, 1583, 1597, 1614.) Though differing in such details as the order of printing the odd and even verses, these ten successive editions all contained the same music, i.e. Morales's settings of the whole of the Magnificat in each of the eight tones.
- 'Versos de una Magnificat.' Lute transcription in Enriquez de Valderrábano's 'Silva de Sirenas'. (Valladolid, 1547.)
- 'Maria cantra vulgo Magnificat dicta.' (Lyons: Moderne, 1550.) I, II, IV, and VI tones ('Et exultavit' verses).
- 'Fecit potentiam' and 'Suscepit Israel'. Lute transcriptions in Fuenllana's 'Orphenica lyra' (Seville, 1554.)
- 'Magnificat di Morales fatti a voci pari a 4 del Borsaro.' (Venice: Vincenti, 19. . . 19.)

4. MOTETS, HYMNS AND OTHER LITURGICAL PIECES

(a) PRINTED

- 'Ad Dominum cum tribularet, 4 v. Moralis Hispani et reliquorum, musica vocum quatuor . . .' (Venice: Scotto, 1543.)— 'Moralis Hispani et multorum eximiae artis viro- rum . . .' (Venice: Gardano, 1546.)
- 'Adest dux, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . .' (Venice, 1543.)
- 'Antequam comedam suspiro . . . Nonne dissimulavi, 4 v. Gomberti excellentissimi, et inventione . . . additis etiam nonnullis excellentissimi Morales . . .' (Venice: Scotto, 1541.)
- 'Andreas Christi famulus . . . Dilexit Andream, 8 v. 'Thesaurus Musicus'. (Nuremberg: Montanus, 1564.)
- 'Andreas Christi famulus . . . Videns Andreas, 5 v. Sacramum cantionum, liber quartus.' (Antwerp: Waelrant, 1556.)
- 'Andreas Christi Sancte Andrea ora pro nobis, 5 v.' Arr. for two lutes, Enriquez de Valderrábano, t.c. Pt. ii ('Nonne dissimulavi') intab. by Valderrábano, 1547.
- 'At illi dixerunt, 3 v. Libro secondo de li Motetti a tre voce da diversi excellentissimi musici.' (Venice: Scotto, 1549.)— 'Selectissimarum sacrarum cantionum . . . liber tertius.' (Louvain: Phalèse, 1569.)
- 'Ave Domine Jesu Christe, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . .' (Venice, 1543.)— 'Moralis Hispani et multorum . . .' (Venice, 1546.)
- 'Beati omnes . . . Ecce sic benedictus, 6 v. 'Tomus tertius psalmorum selectorum.' (Nuremberg: Montanus, 1553.)— 'Beati omnes. Psalmus CXXVIII Davidis . . .' (Nuremberg, 1569.)
- 'Candida virginitas . . . Quae meruit, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . .' (Venice, 1543.)— 'Musica quatuor vocum . . . paribus decantanda.' (Venice: Gardano, 1549.)
- 'Cantate Domino, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . .' (Venice, 1543.)
- 'Clementissime Christi confessor, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . .' (Venice, 1543.)— 'Moralis Hispani et multorum . . .' (Venice, 1546.)
- 'Cum inducerent puerum Jesum, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . .' (Venice, 1543.)
- 'Cum natus esset Jesus, 5 v. . . At illi dixerunt, 3 v. . . Et ecce stella, 5 v. Nicolai Gomberti musici excellentissimi pentaphthongos harmonia . . .' (Venice: Scotto, 1541.)— 'Officium (ut vocant) de nativitate, circumcissione . . . tomus primus.' (Wittenberg: Rhaw, 1545.)— 'Evangelia dominicorum, et festorum dierum . . .' (Nuremberg: Montanus, 1554.)
- 'Descendit angelus', transcr. for lute in Diego Pisador's 'Libro de música de vihuela' (Salamanca, 1552.)
- 'Domine Deus agnus Dei, 3 v. Libro secondo de li Motetti a tre voci.' (Venice, 1549.)

- 'Ecce amica mea, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)—'Moralis Hispani et multorum . . . (Venice, 1546.)
- 'Gaude et letare Ferrariensis civitas . . . Jubilemus Hippolyto, 6 v. Il primo libro de motetti a sei voce.' (Venice: Scotto, 1549.)
- 'Haec est vera fraternitas, 4 v. Moralis Hispani et multorum . . . (Venice, 1546.)
- 'Immutemur habitu . . . Juxta vestibulum, 4 v. Moralis Hispani et multorum . . . (Venice, 1546.)—'Secundus tomus evangeliorum et piarum sententiarum . . . (Nuremberg, 1556.)
- 'Inclina Domine aurem tuam . . . In die tribulationis meae . . . Confitebor tibi, 4 v. Gomberti excellentissimi . . . additis etiam nonnullis excellentissimi Morales . . . (Venice, 1541.)—'Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)—'Moralis Hispani et multorum . . . (Venice, 1546.)—'Psalmorum selectorum.' (Nuremberg, 1553.)
- 'In die tribulationis, 3 v. Elezione de motetti a tre voci libro primo.' (Venice: Scotto, 1549.)—'Variarum linguarum tricinia, a praestantissimis, ad voces fere aequales composita.' (Nuremberg, 1559.)
- 'Ingrediente Domino, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)—'Moralis Hispani et multorum . . . (Venice, 1546.)
- 'In illo tempore dixit Jesus modicum, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)—'Moralis Hispani et multorum . . . (Venice, 1546.)
- 'In illo tempore dixit Jesus nolite, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)—'Moralis Hispani et multorum . . . (Venice, 1546.)
- 'In illo tempore stabant autem, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)—'Moralis Hispani et multorum . . . (Venice, 1546.)—'Quartus tomus evangeliorum . . . (Nuremberg, 1555.)
- 'Inter natos mulierum, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)—'Moralis Hispani et multorum . . . (Venice, 1546.) Lute transcription in Fuenllana, t.c.
- 'In tua patientia, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)
- 'Jam non dicam vos servos, 4 v. Motetti del fiore. Quartus liber.' (Lyons: Moderne, 1539.)
- 'Job tonso capite . . . Dominus dedit, 5 v. Primo libro de motetti a cinque voci da diversi excellentissimi musici.' (Venice: Scotto, 1549.)
- 'Jubilare Deo omnis terra . . . O felix etas, 6 v. Il primo libro de motetti a sei voce.' (Venice: Scotto, 1549.) Transcription for two lutes in Enriquez de Valderrábano, t.c. Transcription for single lute in Fuenllana, t.c.
- 'Lamentabatur Jacob . . . Prosterne sc, 5 v. Mute-tarum divinitatis liber primus quae quinque absolutae vocibus . . . (Milan: Caluschus, 1543.)—'Mute-tarum divinitatis . . . (Venice: Corregio, 1569.) Lute transcription (part 1) in Fuenllana, t.c.
- 'Manustuae Domine, 5 v.' Lute transcr. in Fuenllana, t.c.
- 'Martinus Abrahe sinu letus, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)—'Moralis Hispani et multorum . . . (Venice, 1546.)
- 'Miserere nostri Deus, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)
- 'Missus est Gabriel . . . Quaecum audisset, 4 v. Selectissimae symphoniae compositae . . . (Nuremberg: Montanus, 1546.)
- 'O beatum pontificem, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)
- 'O crux ave spes unica, 5 v. Liber primus cum quinque vocibus.' (Venice, 1543.)
- 'O Jesu bone, 4 v. Concentus octo, sex, quinque, & quatuor vocum, omnium jucundissimi.' (Augsburg: Uhlard, 1545.)
- 'O quam veneranda, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)
- 'Pastores dicite quidnam . . . Infantem vidimus, 4 v. Moralis Hispani et multorum . . . (Venice, 1546.)—'Evangelia dominicorum et festorum tomus primus . . . (Nuremberg, 1554.)
- 'Paulus apostolus, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)—'Moralis Hispani et multorum . . . (Venice, 1546.)
- 'Puer natus est nobis, 3 v. Motetta trium vocum.' (Venice, 1543.)—'Elezione de motetti a tre voci libro primo.' (Venice, 1549.)
- 'Puer qui natus est, 5 v. Nicolai Gomberti . . . pentaphthongos harmonia.' (Venice, 1541.)
- 'Quanti mercenarii . . . Pater peccavi, 6 v. Novum et insigne opus musicum, sex, quinque, et quatuor vocum.' (Nuremberg, 1558.) Arr. for two lutes by Enriquez de Valderrábano, t.c.
- 'Regina coeli, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)
- 'Sacris solemnibus Joseph vir, 4 v.' Transcription for keyboard in Venegas de Henestrosa, 'Libro de cifra nueva para tecla, harpa y vihuela'. (Alcalá de Henares, 1557.)
- 'Sancta Maria, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)—'Moralis Hispani et multorum . . . (Venice, 1546.)
- 'Sancta et immaculata virginitas . . . Benedicta tu in mulieribus, 4 v. Gomberti excellentissimi . . . nonnullis excellentissimi Morales motectis.' (Venice, 1541.) Lute transcription in Fuenllana, t.c.
- 'Sancte Antoni pater monachorum . . . Sancte Antoni gemma confessorum, 4 v. Gomberti excellentissimi . . . nonnullis excellentissimi Morales motectis.' (Venice, 1541.)
- 'Signum crucis . . . Haec arbor est, 4 v. Moralis Hispani, et reliquorum . . . (Venice, 1543.)—'Moralis Hispani et multorum . . . (Venice, 1546.)—'Quartus tomus evangeliorum . . . de baptisato Christo . . . de passione et cruce.' (Nuremberg, 1555.)
- 'Spem in alium nunquam habui . . . Domine Deus Creator, 4 v. Nicolai Gomberti . . . pentaphthongos harmonia.' (Venice, 1541.)—'Quintus liber motetorum . . . (Lyons: Moderne, 1542.)
- 'Sub tuum presidium configimus, 4 v. Motetti del fiore . . . Quartus liber.' (Lyons: Moderne, 1539.)
- 'Tu es Petrus, 3 v. Motetta trium vocum.' (Venice: Gardano, 1543; 1551.)—'Elezione de motetti a tre voci libro primo.' (Venice, 1549.)—'Selectissimum sacrarum cantionum librum secundum.' (Louvain: Phalèse, 1569.)
- 'Tu es Petrus . . . Quodcumque ligaveris, 5 v. Nicolai Gomberti . . . pentaphthongos harmonia.' (Venice, 1541.)—'Cantiones septem, sex, et quinque vocum.' (Augsburg: Kreisstein, 1545.)—'Liber secundus sacrarum cantionum.' (Antwerp: Susato, 1546.)
- 'Ve Babylon . . . Veve civitas illa magna, 4 v. Selectissimae symphoniae compositae.' (Nuremberg, 1546.)
- 'Veni Domine et noli tardare . . . Veni ad liberandum, 6 v. Il primo libro de motetti a sei voci.' (Venice, 1549.)—'Sextus tomus evangeliorum et piarum sententiarum.' (Nuremberg, 1556.)
- 'Veni Domine, 4 v.' Lute transcription in Fuenllana, t.c.
- 'Verbum iniquum et dolosum, 5 v. Liber primus cum quinque vocibus.' (Venice, 1543.) Lute transcription in Fuenllana, t.c.
- 'Verso glosado de Palero, 4 v.' Transcription for keyboard in Venegas de Henestrosa, t.c.
- 'Victimae paschali laudes, 4 v. Moralis Hispani et multorum . . . (Venice, 1546.)
- 'Virgo Maria, 5 v.' Lute transcription in Fuenllana, t.c.

(b) MANUSCRIPTS

- 'Accepit Jesus panes', 4 v. Madrid: Bibl. Medinaceli, MS 13230. Valladolid, Santuago Codex.
- 'Ad tante nativitat', 4 v. Toledo, Cod. 21.
- 'Agnus redimitoris', 4 v. Toledo, Cod. 21.
- 'Ave Maria gratia plena', 5 v. Seville, Bibl. del Coro.
- 'Ave Maria' (canon in diapente), 4 v. Rome: Capp. Sist., 38 cart. Madrid: Bibl. Medinaceli MS 13230.
- 'Christus resurgens', 5 v. Vienna: State Lib. MSS 15604 and 16237.
- 'Circumdederunt me', 5 v. Toledo, Cod. 21.
- 'Clamabat autem mulier Chananea', 5 v. Toledo, Cod. 17.
- 'Conceptio tua Genetrix Virgo', 6 v. Valladolid, Santiago Codex.
- 'Dixit Dominus', 4 v. Madrid: Bibl. Medinaceli, MS 13230.
- 'Ecce Virgo concipiet', 4 v. Seville, Bibl. del Coro.
- 'Egredientem de templo', 4 v. Toledo, Cod. 21.
- 'Emendemus in melius', 5 v. Escorial, Libro 8 de facistol.
- 'Exaltata est Sancta Dei Genetrix', 6 v. Rome: Capp. Sist., MS 64. Valladolid, Santiago Codex.
- 'Gloriosus confessor Domini', 5 v. Toledo, Cod. 17.
- 'Hi sunt olivae duae', 4 v. Toledo, Cod. 25.

- * Hoc est praeceptum meum, 5 v. Valladolid, Santiago Codex.
- * Hodie si vocem eius, 4 v. Puebla (Mexico): Bibl. del Coro MS 4.
- * Inter vestibulum et altare, 4 v. Rome: Capp. Sist. MSS 484-7. Madrid: Bibl. Medinaceli MS 13230.
- * Invitatorio de difuntos, 4 v. Escorial, Libro 10 de facistol.
- * Israel es Tu, Rex Davidis, 4 v. Toledo, Cod. 22.
- * Manus tuae Domine, 5 v. Escorial, Libro 3 de facistol. (Intab. by Fuenllana.)
- * Noctis recolitur (Himno del Sacramento), 4 v. Toledo, Cod. 25. Seville: alto, tenor, and bass in part-books.
- * Officium Defunctorum, 4 v. Ávila, Bibl. del Coro.
- * O sacrum convivium, 5 v. Rome: Capp. Sist., 13 cart. Toledo, Cod. 17. Madrid: Bibl. Medinaceli MS 607. Valladolid, Santiago Codex. Vienna: State Lib. MS 15604.
- * O magnum mysterium, 4 v. Valladolid, Santiago Codex.
- * Pater noster (canon in diatessaron), 4 v. Rome: Capp. Sist., 38 cart.
- * Peccantem me quotidie, 4 v. Valladolid, Santiago Cod.
- * Per tuam crucem . . . Miserere nostri, 4 v. Toledo, Cod. 13. Valladolid, Santiago Codex.
- * Quod Eva tristis, ? 4 v. Seville alto, tenor and bass in part-books.
- * Quoniam Deus magnus, 4 v. Puebla (Mexico): Bibl. del Coro, MS 4.
- * Quoniam ipsius est more, 4 v. Puebla, Bibl. del Coro, MS 4.
- Regina coeli*, 5 v. Valladolid, Santiago Codex.
- Regina coeli*, 6 v. Valladolid, Santiago Codex.
- Sacerdos et pontifex*, 4 v. Valladolid, Santiago Codex.
- Salva nos stella*, 5 v. Toledo, Cod. 21.
- Salve Regina*, 4 v. Madrid: Bibl. Medinaceli, MS 13230. Valladolid, Santiago Codex.
- * Salve Regina, 5 v. Rome: Capp. Sist., 17 cart. Toledo, Cod. 17. Seville, Bibl. del Coro.
- * Solemnis urgebat (canon in diatessaron sine pausis) 4 v. Toledo, Cod. 25.
- * Tu lumen splendor, 4 v. Toledo, Cod. 18. Guadalupe: Real monasterio de Guadalupe.
- * Vigilate et orate, 4 v. Escorial, Libro 1 de facistol.

5. COMPOSITIONS WITH ITALIAN OR SPANISH WORDS

- * De Antequera sale el Moro (Romance), 4 v. Intab. in Fuenllana, t.c.
- * Di timi o si o no, 4 v. Il quarto libro di madrigali d' Archadelt . . . con alcune madrigali d' altri autori. (Venice: Gardano, 1539, 1541, 1545.)
- * Juicio fuerte será dado y muy cruel morte, 4 v. Toledo, Cod. 21 (dated 1549).
- * Omni mal de amor procede. Lute transcription in Enriquez de Valderrábano, t.c. A spurious work; actually a frottola by Tromboncino.
- * Quando lieta sperai, 5 v. Nuova spoglia amorosa, nelle quale si contengono madrigali . . . (Venice: Vincenti, 1593.) A doubtful attribution, "di Morales secondo alcuni". Intab. by V. Galilei in Fronimo (1584).
- * Si vos uviero mirado. Barcelona: Bibl. Central, 'Cancionero musical de Barcelona'. R. s.

See also Bermudo (friendship with).

MORALES, Melesio (b. Mexico City, 4 Dec. 1838; d. Mexico City, 12 May, 1908).

Mexican composer. He studied with Paniagua. At the age of twelve he palmed off a composition of his own as a "mazurka by Thalberg". When the deception was discovered he began to be taken seriously as a composer. Before he was twenty he had sketched his first opera, 'Romeo y Julieta'. After revising the orchestration three times he succeeded in getting it produced by the resident Italian company in Jan. 1863. One of the singers, Roncari, advised him to leave Mexico and make a name in Europe. He was unable to leave, however, until the spring of 1866. In the meantime a second opera of his, 'Ildegonda', was produced (27 Jan. 1866) after Maximilian had personally intervened to guarantee the costs of production.

Morales spent three years in Europe and shortly before his return saw his 'Ildegonda' mounted at Florence, where it achieved considerable success and was given three times. True to prediction, his reputation in Mexico was tremendously enhanced by his new-found European success, and he returned a conquering hero. At the Conservatorio Nacional of Mexico City he organized his own department of composition, "founded on Neapolitan principles", and numbered among his pupils Ricardo Castro and Julián Carrillo. Of his five operas written after his return from Europe the most successful was 'Cleopatra', produced at the Teatro Nacional on 14 Nov. 1891. His last opera, 'Anita', telling the story of the 1867 siege of Puebla, though unproduced, was his best. All his librettos were written in Italian. A large number of his compositions printed in Italy are preserved in the library of the Conservatorio Nacional at Madrid; others are in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris. He was the first to conduct Beethoven's symphonies in Mexico. His own orchestral fantasy, 'La locomotiva' (1869), performed at the opening of the Mexico-Puebla railway, was probably the first attempt at an orchestral interpretation of the sound of a locomotive.¹

R. s.

MORALES, Olallo (Juan Magnus) (b. Almería, 13 Oct. 1874).

Swedish critic, conductor, organist and composer of Spanish birth. His mother being Swedish, he was educated in Sweden. After studying at the Stockholm Conservatory in 1891-99 (composition with J. Dente and W. Stenhammar, and pianoforte with Hilda Thegerstrom and L. Lundberg) he went to Berlin (1899-1901) to study composition with H. Urban, pianoforte with Teresa Carreño and conducting with Pfitzner. On his return to Sweden he was music critic of 'Göteborgs Handelstidning' in 1901-5, of 'Dagens Nyheter' in 1909-11 and of 'Svenska Dagbladet' in 1911-18. He conducted the Göteborg Symphony Orchestra in 1905-9 and was organist of the Göteborg Synagogue in 1908-9. From 1917 to 1939 he taught score-reading, orchestration, conducting and ensemble at the Stockholm Conservatory (with Professor's title from 1921). He was secretary of the Academy of Music in 1918-40 and director musices at the University of Uppsala in 1921-22 and 1924. In 1905 he was conductor of the Lausanne Symphony Orchestra. He was elected a member of the Academy of Music in 1910 and is a member of the Spanish Academy of Liberal Arts. He has held many posts as conductor and administrator and has written extensively on Swedish musical history.

¹ Alkan's pianoforte study, 'Le Chemin de fer', is earlier.

In 1902 Morales married Clary (Charlotta) Asplund (b. Kristinehamn, 31 May 1876), who as Clary Morales has sung at concerts in Sweden and abroad and has taught singing at the Stockholm Conservatory. She was elected a member of the Academy of Music in 1919.

Among his publications are:

- 'Svenska musikens historia', in 'Musikern' (Göteborg, 1909).
- 'Kungliga musikaliska Akademien, 1921-1931' (Stockholm, 1932).
- 'Kungliga musikaliska Akademien, 1932-1941' (Stockholm, 1942).
- 'Kungliga musikaliska Akademien, 1771-1921' (with T. Norlind) (Stockholm, 1921).
- 'Handbok i dirigering' (Stockholm, 1946).

His compositions include:

- Ballet 'Gamacho's Wedding' (from Cervantes's 'Don Quixote').
- Works for chorus & orch.
- Symphony, G mi., Op. 5.
- Concert overture 'Forsommar', Op. 10.
- Overture 'Abu Casems tofflor'.
- Serenade, E♭ ma., for orch., Op. 4.
- 'Andante lugubre' for orch., Op. 8.
- 'Nostalgia' for orch., Op. 15.
- Concerto for vn. & orch.
- Berceuse for flute (or vn.) & stgs., Op. 36.
- Songs with orch.
- Sonata and other pieces for pf.

K. D.

BIBL.—Articles in 'Svensk musikutdning' (Stockholm, 1913), 'Musikern' (Stockholm, 1924), 'Vår sång' (Stockholm, 1934).

MORALES, Pedro (García) (b. Huelva, 1879; d. Huelva, 9 Dec. 1938).

Spanish man of letters and composer. He studied at Seville and then at the R.G.M. in London. Being himself a poet, whose verse is praised by the best judges of Spanish literature, his activities as a composer are chiefly concerned with the modern Spanish song. His instrumental works include 'Esquisse andalouse' for violin and orchestra and 'Bagatelle' for violin and pianoforte. His energy during the first world war, in organizing concerts of Spanish music in aid of war victims, made modern Spanish music (especially the works of Falla, Granados and Turina) well known in England. J. B. T.

MORALT. German family of musicians, five brothers. Four of them formed a string quartet at Munich and became celebrated for their performances of Haydn's quartets.

(1) Joseph Moralt (b. Schwetzingen, 5 Aug. 1775; d. Munich, ?), violinist. He entered the court band at Munich in 1797 and became Konzertmeister in 1800, a post he held until his death, which occurred some time after 1836.

(2) Johann Baptist Moralt (b. Mannheim, 10 Jan. 1777; d. Munich, 7 Oct. 1825), violinist and composer. He was in the Mannheim court orchestra and entered that of Munich in 1792. He was the second violin in the family quartet and also composed two symphonies for orchestra and 'Leçons méthodiques' for the violin, two string quartets, a manuscript Mass, etc.

(3) Philipp Moralt (b. Munich, 1780; d. Munich, 18 Mar. 1874), violoncellist. He was in the Munich orchestra from 1795 till his death and played the cello in the family quartet.

(4) Jakob Moralt (b. Munich, 1780; d. Munich, 1803), violinist, twin brother of the preceding. He also played in the Munich orchestra, but not in the quartet.

(5) Georg Moralt (b. Munich, 1781; d. Munich, 1818), violist. He played the viola in the family quartet.

(6) A Moralt, probably one of the same family, was well known in England in the early part of the 19th century. He was first viola player at the Philharmonic concerts till 1842, when his name disappears, possibly on account of his death, and is succeeded by that of Hill. He took a prominent part in the provincial festivals and music generally.

J. A. F.-M., rev.

Morand, Eugène. See Albert (E. d., 'Izeyl', opera). Gounod ('Dramas sacrés', incid. m.). Pierné ('Izeyl', do.; 'Nuit de Noël', cantata).

Morand, Paul. See Milhaud (3 songs). Ravel ('Don Quichotte à Dulcinée', 3 songs).

Morandi, Bernardo. See Monteverdi ('Vittoria d'Amore', lib.).

MORATELLI, Sebastiano (b. Vicenza, c. 1640; d. ? Vicenza, Sept. 1706).

Italian composer. He entered the imperial court chapel in Vienna and about 1679 transferred his services to the Elector-Palatine Philip William, then residing at Düsseldorf. Some time after 1696 he returned to Italy. For the palatine court he wrote the following operas: 'La gemma Ceraunia d'Ulissipone hora Lisbona' (performed at Heidelberg, 1 July 1687, celebrating the wedding of Peter II of Portugal with a palatine princess); 'Erminia ne' boschi' and 'Erminia al campo' (two short operas from Tasso's 'Gerusalemme liberata', Düsseldorf, 10 Dec. 1687 and Carnival 1688); 'Didone' (ibid., Oct. 1688); 'I bianchi e i neri' and 'I florali' (two serenatas, Augsburg, 1691, at the wedding of the new Elector, John William, with a Medici princess); 'I giochi olimpici' (Düsseldorf, 26 July 1694); 'Il fabro pittore' (ibid., 20 Jan. 1695). The subject of this last opera is quite remarkable, considering the date, for it deals anecdotally with the life of the Flemish painter Quentin Matsys. So far only the librettos of Moratelli's operas are known and not a note of his music has been discovered.

A. L.

BIBL.—EINSTEIN, ALFRED, 'Italienische Musiker am Hofe der Neuburger Wittelsbacher' (S.I.M.G., IX, 398-400).

WALTER, FRIEDRICH, 'Geschichte des Theaters und der Musik am kurpfälzischen Hofe' (Leipzig, 1898).

MORAVEC, Karel. See ŠEVČÍK-LHOTSKÝ QUARTET.

MORAWSKI, Eugeniusz (b. Warsaw, 2 Nov. 1876; d. Warsaw, Oct. 1948).

Polish composer and painter. After completing his studies in composition under Noskowski at the Warsaw Conservatory he entered the Academy of Art. From 1903 he was much concerned in the political movement for the independence of Poland, and after the unsuccessful rising against tsarist Russia he had to leave Poland and went to Paris (1906). There he continued his musical studies with André Gédalge (counterpoint) and Camille Chevillard (orchestration), as well as studies in painting at the Académie Julien and later the Académie Colorossi, and sculpture under Bourdelle. From 1930, back in Poland, he was director of the Warsaw Conservatory.

As a composer Morawski belonged to the ultra-modern group, and his works are programmatic, especially his symphonic poems and incidental music for the stage. They include the following:

OPERAS

- 'Lilla Weneda' (after a tragedy by J. Slowacki).
- 'Aspazja'.
- 'Salammbô' (after Flaubert).
- 'Pan Tadeusz' (after Adam Mickiewicz), unfinished.
- 'Dafnis i Chloë', unfinished.

BALLETS

- 'Gotycki' ('Gothic').
- 'Świtezianka' ('The Mermaid of Świtez'), prod. Warsaw, 1931.
- 'Miłość' ('Love'), dance poem.
- 'Krak i smok' ('Krak and the Dragon').

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

- 'Kuszenie św. Antoniego' ('The Temptation of St. Anthony') after Flaubert.
- 'Acropolis'.
- 'Wesele' ('The Wedding'), play by S. Wyspiański.

CHORAL WORK

Symphony, 'Prometheus' (with solo voices & choruses).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Symphony No. 1, B mi.
- Symphony No. 2, E mi.
- Symphony No. 3, G mi.
- Symphony 'Fleurs du mal' (after Baudelaire).
- Symphony 'Vae victis'.
- 6 Symph. poems, including
 - 'Don Quixote' (after Cervantes).
 - 'Nevermore' (after Poe's 'The Raven').
 - 'Ulalume' (after Poe).

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

- 2 pf. Concertos.
- Vn. Concerto.

CHAMBER MUSIC

- 7 String Quartets.

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

- 2 Sonatas.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- 8 Sonatas.

SONGS

- 15 Religious Songs with organ.
- Numerous songs with pf.

C. R. H.

Morax, René. See Beck (C., 'Tod des Oedipus', cantata). Honegger (4 libs.). Marescotti ('Lampe d'argile', symph. legend).

Morbili, Nicola Giuseppe. See Tractta ('Disfatta di Dario', lib.).

MORDENT. See ORNAMENTS, B (iv); E; S (ii) (1).

MORDENTE FRESCO (Ital. = tremolo). See ORNAMENTS, B (i).

MÖRDER, HOFFNUNG DER FRAUEN (Opera). See HINDEMITH.

More, Hannah. See Hook ('Search after Happiness', songs). Latrobe (C., songs).

MORE, Margaret (Elizabeth) (b. Harlech, 26 June 1903).

British composer. She studied music at home under a governess and had two terms at the T.C.M. in London, where she was taught composition by Edward d'Evry. But although family circumstances prevented her from making more continuous studies, she derived much benefit from the help and advice of Josef Holbrooke and Eugene Goossens, who frequently visited Harlech, and after her marriage to a son of Granville Bantock she learnt much about orchestration from her father-in-law. After much domestic repression she began an opera, 'The Mermaid', based on Hans Andersen's fairy-story 'Lille Havfruen', about 1920. This was slightly revised much later and produced at last by the Barfield Opera Company at Birmingham during the 1951 Festival of Britain. Little else of her work has been performed, but she conducted her symphonic poem 'Summer Night in the Austrian Tyrol' at Harlech in 1930 and in South Wales in 1931, and in the season of 1948-49 the Children's Theatre at Johannesburg produced Michael Martin-Harvey's dramatic version of Andersen's 'Snow Queen' with incidental music by Margaret More.

Other works by her are the ballets 'Celtic Legend' (scenario by Christopher Casson) and 'Medium in White' (scenario by Myrrha Bantock), a suite, 'Matris Carmina', for pianoforte, solo strings and wind, two Trios for violin, cello and pianoforte, a Sonata for violin and pianoforte, two pianoforte pieces, 'Harlequin' and 'Columbine', and a number of songs.

More, (Sir) Thomas. See Abyngdon (epitaphs). Bantock ('Pageant of Human Life', choral symphony).

MORE (Moore), William (b. ?; d. London, 1565).

English harper and composer. He is described (B.M., Add. MSS 30,480-84) as "har-pour to Edw. VI". This is a manuscript of Elizabeth's time and includes a motet by More, 'Levavi oculos' (sic), arranged for 4 viols. His name occurs, however, as early as 1525 among the list of payments to the king's musicians in the household book of Henry VIII (B.M., Egerton MSS 2604). Apparently he also held similar office in the royal household under Elizabeth, for in the 'Declaration of the accounts by Sir John Masone, knight' for 1560 (Public Record Office) he is described as a harper and is granted "12^d a day to be paid quarterly during life, paid for 2 years & three quarters ended Michaelmas 2 (Eliz.)". A further entry under his name occurs in 1562, and in 1565 there is a record of the last payment made on his account: "William Moore, Harper, due for half a year ending at the Annunciation, at which time he died".¹ He is probably identical with the "Morum" mentioned in John Case's 'Apologia musices' (1588) along with Taverner, Blitheman and Tallis, as below:

Angli non ita pridem Tavernerum, Blithmanum, Tallisium, Morum, aliosque insignes musicos magnis premiis affecerunt.²

Besides the motet referred to above (score in B.M., Add. MSS 31,226/103) there is a single part of another 5-part one, 'Ad Dominum contritularer' (Harl. 7578/104b). J. M. (ii).

Moréas, Jean. See Beydts (songs). Chausson (song). Freitas Branco (L., song). Harsányi (song). Poldowski (song). Poulenc (4 songs).

MOREAU, Jean-Baptiste (b. Angers, 1656; d. Paris, 24 Aug. 1733).

French composer. He early showed a musical disposition and was educated as a choir-boy in the Cathedral of Angers. While still quite a lad he composed motets which were notable. He continued his career as a church musician in the provinces and became successively maître de musique at Langres Cathedral (a post which he quitted after his marriage, celebrated in that town), then at Dijon, where he remained about a year. He then went to Paris, without introductions and without a post. The exact date of his arrival is not known, but he was there in 1686. At that time, when in all the Parisian churches thanksgiving services were held for the recovery of the king, a 'Te Deum', sung on 24 Jan. 1687, in the church of Saint-Côme, at the expense of the Company of Master Surgeons, is announced as being the composition of Moreau.

A little later he succeeded in obtaining the protection of the dauphine and through her mediation entered the court. He went to Versailles and succeeded in slipping into the apartments of the princess. He had the audacity to address her direct and to propose to sing to her an air of his own composition. The dauphine, who was very musical, was amused by the unconventionality of the unknown countryman and granted his request, and being pleased with his song she spoke of Moreau forthwith to the king. The king bade him come two days later to the apartments of Mme de Maintenon, where he wished to hear him in his turn. The king liked him and ordered from him the music of several little operas, which were given in the years 1687 and 1688. This gave Moreau the right, without being, properly speaking, in charge of the court music, to take the title Maitre de Musique du Roi. The first of these divertissements to be sung, called 'Les Bergers de Marly', composed on a libretto by Banzy, was given at Marly, in the summer of 1687, two months after Moreau's audition at Mme de Maintenon's; it was much applauded.

In 1688 Racine received the command for 'Esther', a play intended to serve for a literary exercise and for the entertainment of the young ladies of Saint-Cyr; Moreau was chosen by the king and Mme de Maintenon to write the musical interludes to the tragedy, which was composed of recitatives and choruses in the classic manner. The famous performances of 'Esther' at Saint-Cyr in Jan. and Feb. 1689 established the reputation of Moreau, whom Racine esteemed highly and to whom the king gave several distinctions, together with a pension of 600 livres, continued until his death. After this Moreau became, concurrently with the organist Nivers and later with Clérambault, the official musician to Saint-Cyr. For this institution he composed in the following years the music for a great number of tragedies and divertissements which were not otherwise played in public, Mme de Maintenon having asserted that performances of 'Esther' had introduced a spirit of disorder and worldliness into her religious house. The most celebrated of these compositions are the interludes to 'Athalie' (Racine, 1691), to 'Jephté' (1692) and 'Judith' (1695) by the Abbé Boyer, to 'Jonathas' (1700), 'Absalon' (1702) and 'Débora' (1706) by Duché, the music to an 'Idylle sur la naissance de notre Seigneur', and lastly the music to the three 'Cantiques spirituels' which Racine wrote for Saint-Cyr in 1689.

In 1697 Moreau adapted his interludes to 'Esther' into a kind of oratorio called 'Concert spirituel, où le peuple juif est délivré par Esther'. The alterations in the text and the necessary additions are by Banzy. The work was performed in Paris, under the composer's direction, but it has not been preserved in this form.

Moreau's works, of which the library of the Dames de Saint-Louis has numerous copies, remained during the whole of the 18th century, together with those of Nivers and Clérambault, with the 'Stances chrétiennes' of Oudot and the prologues of the operas of Lully, the foundation of the musical repertory at Saint-Cyr.

Appreciated as a composer, assured of the favour of the king and of Mme de Maintenon,

¹ See Mus. Ant., Oct. 1910.

² Davey, Hist. Eng. Mus.

Moreau would have made a fine fortune if he had led a regular life, and if he had not had such a great intimacy with the bacchic poet Laînez, whose libertine ways were disapproved of in high quarters. Moreau employed a great deal of his time in setting Laînez's songs to music, in which form they were widely distributed in manuscript copies and had great success. In 1694 he accepted the charge of Intendant de la musique des États de Languedoc, but as he preferred Parisian to provincial life, he spent little time in this employment and sold the reversion to a musician called Mallet. His chief resource outside his royal salary came from his teaching. He was renowned for his method of singing, and among his pupils, both for singing and composition, were to be counted some of the best musicians of the 18th century: Montéclair, Clérambault, Dandrieu; the celebrated singers Marie-Claude Moreau, his daughter (who died before he did, after her marriage to the viol master Deniau) and Louise Couperin, cousin-german to François Couperin.

During the last years of his life Moreau was employed by the curé of Saint-Sulpice Languet to teach singing to the daughters of the Jesuit community, a convent instituted by this priest. They performed the famous choruses of 'Esther' and 'Athalie'. Moreau was buried in his parish church of Saint-Josse. He left a widow and a daughter.

Besides the tragedies of Saint-Cyr and the chansons by Laînez he composed a certain number of works, both sacred and secular, left in manuscript and now lost. Among these his contemporaries praised a motet 'In exitu Israel de Egypto', with choruses in counterpoint on a plainsong of the psalm, a Requiem, a divertissement written to words by Laînez to be given at the Ermitage de Franchard during a sojourn of the king at Fontainebleau. He also wrote an essay on teaching, 'L'Art mélodique', a subject which Moreau, whose special characteristics were justness of accent and formal grace of melody, should have treated in an interesting way.

For posterity he remains as the musician of Racine. His recitatives and his songs which, like those of other Lullist composers, are smooth and clear in declamation; his choruses, simple in style but informed with elegance and nobility; above all, the personal character of his music, so expressive and touching, spontaneous, Christian, with something fresh and virginal, accord to perfection with the style and spirit of the poet. These religious and literary divertissements, for the use of an institution for girls, which Racine, in spite of his humility, accounted his chef-d'œuvre, found at the first moment the music which fitted them. It would be vain to try to remake them.

A. T.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BORDES, CHARLES, 'Les Chœurs d'Esther et d'Athalie par Jean-Baptiste Moreau' (Preface to Bordes's reprints of these works, see below).
 HALLAYS, ANDRÉ, 'Racine, poète lyrique' ('Tribune de Saint-Gervais', May & June 1899, and excerpts, Paris, 1899).
 LAVALLÉE, T., 'Histoire de la maison royale de Saint-Cyr' (Paris, 1836).
 'Mercure galant', vols. between 1687 and 1702.
 TAPHANEL, ACHILLE, 'Le théâtre de Saint-Cyr' (Paris, 1876).
 TIERSOT, JULIEN, 'Les Chœurs d'Esther de Moreau' (Rev. Mus., Jan., 1903).
 TITON DU TILLET, 'Le Parnasse françois' (Supp. of 1743).

LIST OF WORKS

PUBLISHED

- 'Chœurs de la tragédie d'Esther, avec la musique composée par J. B. Moreau, maître de musique du roy' (Paris, 1689). A second edition was published with the title 'Intermèdes en musique de la tragédie d'Esther propres pour les dames religieuses, et toutes autres personnes. Par Monsieur Moreau, maître de musique et pensionnaire de Sa Majesté' (Paris, 1696).
 'La Musique d'Athalie par J. B. Moreau, maître de musique du roy. Composée par ordre de Sa Majesté, gravée par H. de Bausson . . .' (Paris, n.d.).
 'Cantiques chantez devant le Roy, et composez par Monsieur Moreau, maître de musique et pensionnaire de Sa Majesté. Propres pour les dames religieuses, et toutes autres personnes' (Paris, 1695).

MANUSCRIPTS

- 'Intermèdes de la tragédie de Jephté' (Library of Versailles, from Saint-Cyr).
 'Intermèdes de la tragédie de Jonathas', with Moreau's autograph, dated 1725 (Versailles, from Saint-Cyr).
 The Versailles Library has many other copies of 'Athalie' and of 'Jonathas', one with Moreau's autograph, and a copy of the 'Cantiques spirituels', all from Saint-Cyr. The library of the Paris Conservatoire possesses, from the same source, many MSS of these works, as well as of 'Esther'.
 'Idylle sur la naissance de notre Seigneur' (Versailles, from Saint-Cyr, and Bibl. Nat., Paris).
 'Le Feu de joye du Sr. Moreau pour Mgr. le Duc de Bretagne' (Versailles).
 The MSS of the Bibl. Nat. contain some copies of 'Athalie', 'Esther' and the 'Cantiques spirituels'.
 'Rigaudon de M. Moreau' (Bibl. Nat., Paris).
 'Zaire', cantatille (Darmstadt Lib.).

MODERN REPRINTS

- 'Musique des chœurs d'Esther et d'Athalie et des antiques spirituels' in works by Jean Racine ed. by Paul Mesnard ('Supplément musical', Paris, 1873, exact reproduction of the original editions).
 'Esther', ed. by Charles Bordes (Paris, n.d., not a precise reproduction).
 'Athalie', ed. by Charles Bordes & Léon Saint-Réquier (Paris, n.d.).
See also Clérambault (C. F. N., eds. to Racine choruses).

MOREIRA, Antonio Leal (b. ? Lisbon, c. 1750; d. Lisbon, 21 Nov. 1819).

Portuguese composer. He studied at the Semanaria Patriarchal in Lisbon, under Sousa Carvalho, and in 1775 became assistant teacher there. On 8 Aug. 1777 he joined the Brotherhood of Santa Cecilia and soon became known as a composer of vocal music, masses, services for the dead, psalms, vespers, etc., but also of villancicos and of Italian operas, of which he wrote about a dozen for various court festivals. The scores of nearly all of them are preserved in Lisbon, as is that of an Italian oratorio,

'Ester' (1786). Among Moreira's operas is an 'Ascanio in Alba' (1785), on the libretto Mozart had used in 1771.¹

In 1790 Moreira became conductor at the Theatro da Rua dos Condes, Lisbon, and in 1793 of the newly founded Theatro San Carlos, for which he wrote two operas in the Portuguese language, 'A salaia namorada, ou O remedio é casar' (1793) and 'A vingança da cigana' (1794). Moreira remained conductor until 1800, when Marcos Portugal succeeded him. In the same year his last Italian opera, 'Il disertore', was heard at Turin and at the Scala, Milan, the only work of his to be given outside Portugal.

A. L.

MOREL, Fritz (b. Basel, 30 Nov. 1900).

Swiss organist. He studied in his native town and later in Paris, Leipzig and with Albert Schweitzer. Apart from music he studied law, in which he took a doctor's degree in 1926. From 1930 onwards he has acted as organist at Basel, where in 1939 he was appointed cathedral organist in succession to A. Hamm. He is also professor of organ playing, organ history and hymnology at the Basel Conservatory, as well as lecturer in church music of the theological faculty at the University.

Morel has repeatedly toured abroad, and he also became known as an author with a monograph on Frescobaldi (Winterthur, 1945) and various articles in the periodical 'Musik und Gottesdienst'.

K. V. F.

MORELL, David. } See ENGLISH

MORELL, John. } MUSICIANS ABROAD.

Morell, Thomas. See Alexander Balus (Handel). Handel (7 [?] oratorios). Joshua (Handel). Judas Maccabeus (do.). Occasional Oratorio (do., ? words by M.). Saul (Handel).

MORELLI, Giovanni (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 18th-19th-century bass singer. He was a "running footman" to Lord Cowper at Florence, and seems to have been brought to England by his master on account of his good voice. In Apr. 1787 he appeared in London in Paisiello's 'Gli schiavi per amore', with Nancy Storace, Sestini and Morigi. The last had long been the first buffo caricato, but now became second to Morelli, who was a very good actor if probably, to judge from his early career, not much of a musician. In 1787 he also sang at the Handel Commemoration with Mara and Rubinelli. He continued for many years in great favour and sang at the Opera from time to time till he had scarcely a note left; but he was always kindly received as an old and deserving favourite. He sang the bass part in Pergolesi's 'Serva padrona' with Banti so successfully that the performance was repeated by royal command, and he still sang in 1812, when the rebuilt Pantheon (1795) was again converted into a theatre, with Angelica Catalani and Catherine Stephens (the latter's first appearance).

J. M., rev.

Morelli, Sebastiano. See Pergolesi ('Salustia', lib.).

MORENDO (Ital. = dying). A direction used to indicate the gradual diminuendo at the end of a cadence. Its meaning is well given by Shakespeare in the words "That strain again! it had a dying fall". It is used by Beethoven in the Trio Op. 1 No. 3, at the end of the fourth variation in the slow movement, and in the Quartet Op. 74, also at the end of the slow movement. As a rule it is only used for the end of the movement or in a cadence, but in Beethoven's Quartet Op. 18 No. 7, slow movement, and in the ninth Symphony, slow movement, it is not confined to the end, but occurs in imperfect cadences, to give the effect of a full close. It thus differs from smorzando, as the latter can be used at any time in the movement.

J. A. F.-M.

Moreno. See Milhaud ('Se plaire sur la même fleur', incid. m.).

MORENO GANS, José (b. Algemesi, Valencia, 1897).

Spanish composer. He studied composition at the Royal Madrid Conservatory under Conrado del Campo. One of his early works, 'Pinceladas goyescas', a suite for full orchestra, obtained the National Prize in 1928. It is a brilliantly orchestrated series of impressions of 18th-century Madrid with its varied street types as painted by Goya. Moreno Gans was awarded one of the scholarships of the Conde de Cartagena Foundation, which enabled him to continue his studies in composition in Vienna, Berlin and Paris. Among his other works should be mentioned the following: 'Sinfonía de estampas' for full orchestra, which is a series of precise sketches in impressionism; Symphony in A major for small orchestra; Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra; string Quartet in D major; Suite in B minor for string orchestra; Prelude and Dance in A major for string orchestra.

In 1943 he was awarded the National Prize for his Sonata in F# minor. This work, which is dedicated to Professor Walter Starkie, was performed for the first time in the British Institute, Madrid, in 1944; with its three movements (Allegro, Adagietto and Rondo) with its lyrical evocative qualities and its concise rhythmic patterns it is one of the composer's most characteristic works and a welcome addition to the modern repertory of violin and pianoforte duets.

W. S.

MORERA, Enric (b. Barcelona, 22 May 1865; d. Barcelona, 11 Mar. 1942).

Spanish composer. His youth was spent in Argentina (Buenos Aires and Córdoba), but his musical studies were pursued at Barcelona and Brussels, and the influence of the Belgian school is noticeable in his work. The following operas of his were all produced at Barcelona:

¹ It is generally believed that Giuseppe Parini wrote the text for Mozart, and it is interesting to note that according to the express statement in the Lisbon libretto he had merely altered it from an earlier work by Count Claudio Nicolo Stampa, a Milanese dramatist of the 1720-30s.

- 'Emporium' (1906).
- 'Bruniselda' (1906).
- 'Joan de l'Orleans' (1907).
- 'Titanya' (1912).
- 'Tassarba' (1916).

A much later one, 'Luica Fernanda', came out in Madrid in 1932. He also wrote incidental music to a number of Catalan plays, e.g. 'L'alegria que passa' by Rusiñol. His chief interest was in choral works to Catalan words and arrangements of Catalan folksongs, and this preference tended to prevent his music from becoming widely known in the rest of Spain and consequently in other countries.

J. B. T., rev.

BIBL.—IGLESIAS, I., 'Enric Morera: estudi biogràfic' (Barcelona, 1921).

MORESCA (Spa.). A Moorish dance of remote antiquity first introduced into Europe by the Moors in Spain. It became popular all over Europe in the 15th–16th centuries. The English "Morris dance" derived from it through the old English word "morys" (=Moorish), and the bells or jingles tied to the dancer's legs in the Morris are also a feature of the moresca. "Morisca" is an English corruption of the Spanish word.

MORETA, Ginés de (b. ?; d. ?).

Spanish 16th-century composer. Nothing is known of him except that he wrote madrigals, of which there are twelve for 3 and 4 voices in the Bibl. Medinaceli in Madrid (MS 13230).

J. B. T.

Moreto y Cavanna, Augustin. See Laserna (incid. m.). Reznicek ('Donna Diana', opera). Turina ('Adúltera penitente', incid. m.). Weber (12, 'Donna Diana', do.).

Moretti, Ferdinando. See Cherubini (2 libs.). Cimarosa (2 libs.).

Moreux, Serge. See Martinon ('Hécube', lib.).

MORGAN, ? (b. ?; d. ?).

English or (?) Welsh 17th-century composer. Next to nothing is known of his career except that he was the composer of incidental music for several plays, including probably a jig ('Jegg in Gamut b') which appears in manuscript bound up with the B.M. copy of Purcell's 'Choice Collection of Lessons for the Harpsichord or Spinnet' (published posthumously in 1696). This piece was thus, not unnaturally, taken to be by Purcell, but is now believed to have been by this Morgan.¹ It appears in a score for strings (as distinct from the B.M. harpsichord arrangement) in a set of incidental music by "Mr. Morgan" in a manuscript (No. 1172) at the R.C.M. The pieces there are headed "Matchless", and are therefore probably for a play by Davenant produced in 1634, 'The Courage of Love', published in 1649 as 'Love and Honour', but also known as 'The Nonpareilles', or 'The Matchless Maids'. This was revived at the Theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields in 1661, and if Morgan did write music for it, he probably did so for that or possibly a later revival.

Music to the following plays by "Mr. Morgan" exists, but whether it was in every case written for the original production or for a revival is uncertain.

'The Old Troop, or Monsr. Raggou' by John Lacy (c. 1662).

'Secret Love, or The Maiden Queen' by Dryden (1667).

'Psyche' by Shadwell (1675).

'The Mock Marriage' by Thomas Scott (1695).

Instrumental music only; the songs by Purcell.

'The Younger Brother, or The Amorous Jilt' by Aphra Behn (1696).

'The Imposture Defeated' by George Powell (1697).

A book of songs by Morgan, including pieces from the last-named play and from 'Musick for the Generall Peace', appeared in 1697, together with a Sonata for two recorders and harpsichord. He also contributed, with Daniel Purcell, Akeroyde, Courteville and Packe, to Part III of Durfey's 'Don Quixote'.

E. B.

MORGAN, John (b. Newburgh, Anglesey, c. 1711; d. ?).

Welsh bard. He was the last of the bards who played their national instrument, the crwth.² He was still alive in 1771. A 3-part catch, 'Quoth Jack on a time', in Longman's collection is signed "Morgan", but it is doubtful if this is John.

J. A. F.-M.

MORGAN, Nicholas. See ENGLISH MUSICIANS ABROAD.

Morgenstern, Christian. See Burkhard (W., 2 choruses; cantata for voice & chamber m.; 9 songs). Hindemith ('Melancholie', voice & strg. 4tet; 3 songs). Kaufmann (songs). Kilpinen (22 songs). Marx (K., songs). Reger (8 songs). Reizenstein ('Lunovis', choral work). Schulthess (2 song cycles). Seiber (2 Madrigals for chorus; 3 songs). Strauss (R., song). Toch ('Egon und Emilie', opera).

MORHANGE, Charles Henri Valentin. See ALKAN.

MORI. Italo-English family of musicians.

(1) Nicola(s) Mori (b. London, 24 Jan. 1796 or 1797³; d. London, 14 June 1839), violinist and music publisher. He was the son of an Italian wig-maker in the New Road, London. He was brought out as a prodigy and at the age of eight played in public a concerto of Barthélemon's, from whom he had lessons. Subsequently he studied for six years with Viotti and not only became an excellent solo violinist, but owing to his enthusiasm, industry and judgment occupied a very prominent position in the music of London and England generally from about 1812 till his death. He played at the second concert of the Philharmonic Society in 1814 and from 1816 was for many years one of the leaders of the Philharmonic orchestra and first violin at the Lenten oratorios, the provincial festivals and the majority of concerts of any importance.

¹ Edward Jones, 'Welsh Bards'.

² 1797 is found on a portrait issued in 1805. (D.N.B.)

³ See Frank Dawes, 'A Jig of Morgan's' (Mus. T., Mar. 1930).

He married, in 1819, the widow of the music publisher Lavenu and entered into partnership with her son. Among other music they published the second book of Mendelssohn's 'Songs without Words' and his pianoforte Concerto in G minor.

(2) Frank Mori (b. London, 21 Mar. 1820; d. Chaumont, France, 2 Aug. 1873), composer, son of the preceding. He was well known in London as a musician for many years. His cantata 'Fridolin', brought out at the Worcester Festival of 1851, was performed several times with success, and an operetta, 'The River-Sprite', to words by George Linley, was produced in London, at Covent Garden Theatre, on 9 Feb. 1865.

See also Linley (G., 'River Sprite', lib.).

(3) Nicholas Mori (b. London, 14 Jan. 1822; d. ?), composer, brother of the preceding. Having studied with his father and with Charles Lucas, as well as in Paris, he composed various works, including a setting of Psalm CXXXVII and music for W. S. Gilbert's fairy comedy 'The Wicked World' (1873). G., adds.

BIBL.—DUFFIN, E. W., 'Particulars of the Illness and Death of the late Mr. [Nicola(s)] Mori' (London, 1839).

MORIANI, Napoleone (b. Florence, 10 Mar. 1808; d. Florence, 4 Mar. 1878).

Italian tenor singer. He came of a good family, received a liberal education and studied the law for some time, intending to embrace it as his profession. Seduced, however, by the applause which his beautiful tenor voice obtained for him in society, he changed his intentions and attempted the operatic career at Pavia in 1833, with success. After singing in the principal Italian cities, he returned to Florence in 1839 and in the following year was recognized both there and at Milan and Trieste as the first tenor of Italy. In 1841 he visited Vienna, where he was appointed "Virtuoso di camera" by the emperor. In 1844 and 1845 he sang in London, but pleased little. He sang with success in Lisbon, Madrid and Barcelona in 1846 and was decorated by the Queen of Spain with the Order of Isabella. He sang at Milan in the autumn of 1847, but his voice was gone, and he soon afterwards retired from the stage. Mendelssohn more than once speaks of him as "my favourite tenor, Moriani". J. M.

Móricz, Zsigmond. See Kodály ('Pacsi társzó', incid. m.).

MORIGI, Angelo (b. Rimini, 1725; d. Parma, 22 Jan. 1801).

Italian violinist and composer. Tartini was his violin teacher and Valotti instructed him in theory and harmony. In 1758 he was appointed first violin of the Prince of Parma's orchestra, and later director of the court music, a post he held for many years. He was a composer of some merit and excellently spoken of as a teacher of composition. Among his pupils was Bonifazio Asioli, the dramatic composer, who out of deference to his master's memory published Morigi's 'Trattato di contrappunto fugato' after his death. His compositions are the following:

6 Sonatas for vn. alone (Op. 1).

6 Trios for 2 vns. & cello with figured bass for harpsichord (Op. 2).

6 'Concerti grossi' with principal violin (Op. 3).

6 'Concerti grossi' dedicated to the Infanta Donna Felipe.

E. H.-A.

Mörke, Eduard. See Brahms (2 songs, 1 duet). Dieren ('Schon Rohtraut', song). Franz (9 songs). Lachner (5, 'Regenbruder', lib.). Pfitzner (3 songs). Philipp (F., songs for women's chorus). Reger (2 songs). Schöck (43 songs). Schumann (3 part songs, 4 songs). Smyth (E., song). Staempfli (songs). Trapp ('Letzte König von Orplid', puppet play). Valen (2 songs). Wolf (H., 1 choral work, 31 songs).

BIBL.—KNEISEL, JESSIE HOSKAM, 'Morike and Music' (New York, 1919).

MORIKÉ, EDUARD. 'Mozart on the Way to Prague', trans. by Walter and Catherine Alison Phillips (London, 1946).

MORIN, Gösta (b. Ludvika, 14 Apr. 1900).

Swedish musicologist and librarian. He studied musical history with Tobias Norlind in Sweden and, after travelling in Germany, Austria and Italy for study purposes, graduated Ph.D. at Uppsala in 1929. Between 1928 and 1930 he held a Gunnar Wennerberg stipend at the University of Berlin, where he was a pupil of A. Schering, J. Wolf and J. Biehle. He subsequently studied librarianship at the University Library, Uppsala, in 1932-33 and in America in 1937. Since 1933 he has been Librarian of the Royal Academy of Music, Stockholm, in which capacity he has carried out extensive reorganization. In 1938 he was elected a member of the Royal Academy of Music.

Morin is principal editor of Sohlman's 'Musiklexikon' and he has written many articles on musical subjects, principally upon J. C. F. Haefner and on the history of Swedish chorales. He was secretary of the Swedish Association for Musical Research in 1937-44 and has been secretary of the Society of Musical Art since 1936.

His publications include:

'Haefners musikalska skapande' ('Tidskrift för Kyrkomusik', Lund, 1933), pp. 68-72.

'Bidrag till kannedom om 1700-talets svenska koralboksarbete: en överblick' ('Tidskrift för Kyrkomusik', 1933), pp. 115-25.

'Bidrag till sjuttonhundratalets svenska koralhistoria' (S.T.M., 1944).

'Två bref från Haefner (Meddelade av O. Andersson)' ('Tidskrift för musik', Helsingfors, 1911-12), pp. 118-19.

'Johan Christian Friedrich Haefner' ('Tidskrift för Kyrkomusik', 1933), pp. 17-21, 35-38.

K. D.

MORIN, Jean Baptiste (b. Orléans, c. 1677; d. Paris, 1745).

French composer. He was musician to the Duke of Orléans and one of the first composers of French cantatas (3 books for 1-3 voices, 1706, 1707 and 1712). Among his other works are two books of motets (1704 and 1709), 'Recueil d'airs à boire à 2 voix', 'La Chasse du cerf', 'Divertissement', 'Le Triomphe de l'amour', 'L'Hymen et l'Amour', 'Épithalame', etc. E. v. d. s.

MORINI, Erica (b. Vienna, 5 Jan. 1906).

Austrian violinist. She first studied the violin with her father, Oscar Morini, at his school of music in Vienna, and later with Ševčík. At the age of nine she made her début as an infant prodigy and at fourteen she toured the U.S.A. After that she gave recitals and accepted concerto engagements continually in all parts of Europe, America and Australia. A. H. (ii).

MORISCA. See MORESCA.

MORISSEAU, ? (b. ?; d. ?).

French 19th-century clog maker. He practised at No. 9 rue des Fontaines du Temple in Paris and applied the principles of his craft to the manufacture of violins, carving the back and sides and neck all in one piece out of a solid block of practically green wood, the only glue used in their manufacture being that employed to fasten on the tables. This innovation was considered sufficiently serious by the Société d'Encouragement pour l'Industrie Nationale for a rapport to be inserted in their Bulletin¹ drawn up by J. Lissajous, with the assistance of Guérin, professor at the Conservatoire, and Deloffre and Ferrand, leaders of the orchestras of the Théâtre Lyrique and the Opéra-Comique respectively. E. H.-A.

MORITZ, Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel (b. Cassel, 25 May 1572; d. Eschwege, 14 Mar. 1632).

German patron of music and amateur composer. He was called "the learned" ("der Gelehrte"). Under the musical tuition of Georg Otto, Kapellmeister at Cassel from about 1588 to 1619, he developed considerable talent² for composition and was a patron of musicians.³ In 1601 he published a Lutheran 'Gesangbuch' with tunes only, twenty-four of which were his own invention. In 1612 he republished the book, providing all the tunes with his own 4-part harmony. Meantime, in 1605, he had abandoned Lutheran doctrine and embraced Calvinism, even adopting the extreme Calvinistic view that nothing but words of Scripture in the vernacular should be sung in churches. Under the influence of his new convictions he published a musical edition of Lobwasser's German version of the French Calvinistic Psalms, providing the original French tunes with 4-part harmony and adding some new tunes of his own. His endeavours to force the Calvinistic form of worship on his Lutheran subjects met with some resistance, and he was obliged to concede the use of the Lutheran hymns. It is all the more strange that so enlightened a prince should have adopted this narrow view of the province of church music, considering that he had himself composed a large number of Latin psalms, motets and Magnificats in the a cappella style, for 4 to 12 voices, which are still preserved in manuscript in the library at Cassel. It redounds to his credit, however, that he showed himself so munificent a patron to the young Heinrich Schütz who, brought up as a chorister in his chapel at Cassel, was afterwards sent at his expense to Venice to complete his musical education under Giovanni Gabrieli. Schütz testified his gratitude to his patron by dedicating to him in 1611 his Op. 1, the first-fruits of his Venetian studies, consisting of a book of Italian madrigals for 5 voices, concluding with a flattering poem written by the musician himself in praise of his patron, set for eight voices.

Among the manuscript works by the Landgrave in the Cassel library there are some Italian madrigals and villanelle a 4, also some instrumental pieces, fugues and dances, which all serve to show the interest taken by him in the various branches of music of his time. He laid down the reins of government of his principality in 1627, having lost the confidence of his Lutheran subjects by his Calvinist policy. A considerable number of his 4-part settings of psalm and hymn-tunes have been republished in modern collections, such as those of Erk, Tucher and Winterfeld. J. R. M.

MORLACCHI, Francesco (b. Perugia, 14 June 1784; d. Innsbruck, 28 Oct. 1841).

Italian conductor and composer. He learnt the violin from his father at the age of seven. At twelve he was placed under Caruso, maestro of the Cathedral of Perugia, who taught him singing, the clavier and thorough-bass, while he learned the organ from Mazetti, his maternal great-uncle. At thirteen he had already composed much, and during his years of boyhood he wrote several pieces for the church, among which a short oratorio, 'Gli angeli al sepolcro', attracted the attention of many amateurs, among them his godfather, Count Pietro Baglioni, who sent him to study counterpoint with Zingarelli at Loreto. But the severe conventional teaching of Zingarelli clashed with the aspirations of his young, impatient mind, and after a year and a half he returned to Perugia. Conscious, however, that he had still a great deal to learn, he went to Bologna to complete his studies under Mattei.

His first opera was 'Il Simoncino' (1803). During his time of studentship he was commissioned to write a cantata for the coronation of Napoleon as King of Italy, at Milan, in 1805. In Feb. 1807 a musical farce called 'Il poeta in Campagna' was performed at the

¹ Vol. XI, 2nd series, No. 137, May 1864.

² See Peacham's 'Compleat Gentleman' (1634), p. 99, for a tribute to his skill. ³ See DOWLAND, JOHN.

Teatro della Pergola at Florence and, later in that year, a 'Miserere' for sixteen voices having won golden opinions, the composer was invited to visit Verona, where he produced his opera buffa 'Il ritratto'. He achieved his first popular success with the melodrama, 'Il Corradino', at Parma in 1808. This was followed by 'Enone e Paride', 'Oreste', 'Rinaldo d'Asti', 'La principessa per ripiego' and 'Le avventure d'una giornata'. But all these were surpassed by 'Le Danaide', written for the Teatro Argentina, Rome, where it was produced on 11 Feb. 1810. This work, the libretto of which, by Stefano Scattizzi, was altered from Metastasio's 'Ipermestra', was immensely successful and once for all established its composer's fame.

Through the influence of Count Marcolini, minister to the court of Saxony, Morlacchi was now appointed musical director of the Italian Opera at Dresden, at first for a year, subsequently for life, with a large salary, besides a considerable honorarium for every new opera and leave of absence for some months of each year, with liberty to write what he pleased, where he pleased. The Italian style had long reigned supreme in the Dresden fashionable world, and Morlacchi at once became the rage. His music partook of the styles of Paer and Mayr: it was melodious and pleasing, but very slight in character. He now acquainted himself to some extent with the works of the German masters, a study which had a happy effect on him, as it led him insensibly to add a little more solidity to his somewhat threadbare harmonies. His earliest compositions at Dresden were a Mass for the royal chapel, the operas 'Raoul de Créqui' (prod. Apr. 1811) and 'La capricciosa penita' (1816), and an oratorio of the Passion (1812) (book by Metastasio), extravagantly admired by contemporary enthusiasts.

In 1813 Dresden became the military centre of operations of the allied armies, and the king, Frederick Augustus, Napoleon's ally, was a prisoner. During this time Morlacchi kept at a wise distance from public affairs and bewailed the fate of his patron in retirement. He was, however, roughly aroused by a sudden order from Baron Rozen, Russian Minister of Police, to write a cantata for the tsar's birthday. The task was uncongenial, and only two days were available for it, but his choice lay between obeying and being sent to Siberia. Thus pressed he finished the cantata in forty-eight hours. Not long after this, the Russian government having decreed the abolition of the Dresden chapel, Morlacchi obtained an audience of the tsar at Frankfort o/M., when, in consequence of his representations, the decree was reversed.

To celebrate the return of the Saxon king to his capital in 1814, Morlacchi wrote another

Mass and in 1816 a sparkling opera buffa, 'Il barbiere di Siviglia', based on Beaumarchais's comedy. His political principles must have been conveniently elastic, for the year 1814 also saw the production of a triumphal cantata for the taking of Paris by the allied armies, and a Mass for voices alone, according to the Greek ritual, for the private chapel of Prince Repuin, who had been the Russian governor of Dresden.

In June 1816 Morlacchi was elected member of the Academy of Fine Arts at Florence, and shortly after he paid a visit of some months to his native country, where he was received with every kind of honour. For the dedication of the Passion, Pope Pius VII rewarded him with the decoration of the Golden Spur and the title of Count Palatine. An oratorio, 'Il sacrificio d'Abramo, o L'Isaaco' (1817), although a feeble work, was remarkable for the employment of a novel kind of rhythmical declamation in place of the ordinary recitative.

In 1817 Weber was appointed Kapellmeister of the German Opera at Dresden. Morlacchi behaved to him with a studied show of politeness, while doing his utmost in an underhand way to cripple his activity and bar his progress. Yet he was too much of an artist not to recognize the genius of his young colleague, to whom, although already overworked, he would frequently delegate the whole of his own duties, while on the plea of ill-health he absented himself in Italy for months together.

Between 1817 and 1841 Morlacchi produced a number of operas and dramatic pieces, among which the principal were 'Boadicea' (Naples, 1818), 'Gianni di Parigi' (Milan, 30 May 1818)¹, 'La morte d'Abel' (Dresden, 1821), 'Donna Aurora' (Milan, 1821), 'Tebaldo ed Isolina' (Venice, 1822), 'La gioventù di Enrico V' (1823)², 'Ilda d'Avenello' (1824), 'I Saraceni in Sicilia' (1827), 'Colombo' (Genoa, 1828), 'Il disperato per eccesso di buon cuore' (1829) and 'Il rinnegato' (1832), this last opera being a second setting of the book of 'I Saraceni' "in a style calculated to suit German taste". He wrote ten masses for the Dresden chapel, besides a great number of other pieces for the church. The best of these was the Requiem, composed on the occasion of the King of Saxony's death in 1827. A scena or "episode" for baritone with pianoforte (the narration of Ugolino, from Canto xxxiii of Dante's 'Inferno'), written in his last years, deserves special mention here, as it became very famous.

In 1841 Morlacchi once more set off for Italy, but was forced by illness to stop at Innsbruck, where he died. He left an unfinished opera, 'Francesca da Rimini', after Dante, for the possession of which Florence, Dresden and Vienna had disputed with each other.

¹ The libretto is an Italian version by Felice Romani of Saint-Just's 'Jean de Paris', composed by Boieldieu in 1812.

² An Italian version of Bouilly's libretto of 'Le Jeune Henri' set by Méhul in 1797.

Weber's good-natured criticism (in one of his letters) of his 'Barbieri di Siviglia' aptly describes much of Morlacchi's dramatic work:

There is much that is pretty and praiseworthy in this music; the fellow has little musical knowledge, but he has talent, a flow of ideas, and especially a fund of good comic stuff in him.

The best monument he left to his memory was a benevolent institution at Dresden for the widows and orphans of the musicians of the royal chapel, which he was instrumental in founding.

F. A. M., rev.

Morlaix, Bernard de. See Parker (H., 'Hora novissima', oratorio).

MORLAYE, Guillaume (b. ?; d. ?).

French 16th-century lutenist and composer. He was a pupil of Aloc. da Ripa, whose compositions he brought out in a number of books in lute tablature, including also his own compositions and those of other masters (published 1550-58). Fétis mentions a book of gittern tablature by him (published 1550).

E. v. d. s.

MORLEY, Thomas (b. ? London, 1557¹; d. London, ? 1603).

English organist, theorist and composer. He was a pupil of William Byrd, by whose endeavours, says Anthony Wood, the said Morley became not only excellent in musick, as well in the theoretical as practical part, but also well seen in the Mathematicks, in which Byrd was excellent.

In July 1588 he took his degree of Mus.B. at Oxford, and there is reason to think that at the close of the same year he was organist of St. Giles's, Cripplegate, for in the registers of that London church is entered the burial of "Thomas ye sonne of Thomas Morley, Organist", 14 Feb. 1589.² His wife had probably been a member of the household of Lady Periam, wife of the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer (see the Dedication of the 'First Book of Canzonets to Two Voices', 1595).

It is most likely that, after leaving St. Giles's, Morley became organist at St. Paul's Cathedral, though from a passage in the 'Description of Q. Elizabeth's Entertainment at Elvetham in Sept. 1591' it might perhaps be inferred that his appointment took place earlier; it is said there that the performance of some musicians so pleased the queen that "she gave a newe name unto one of their Pavans, made long since by master Thomas Morley, then organist of Paules church".³ However this may be, he was still at St. Paul's in the same year, 1591, for there is an allusion to him as organist there in a letter dated 3 Oct. 1591.⁴ From this letter, written from the Low Countries by one Paget, a Catholic intriguer, it would appear that Morley had been employed there as some kind of political agent:

Ther is one Morley that playeth on the organies in poules that was with me in my house. He semed here to be a good Catholicke and was reconciled, but notwithstanding suspecting his behaviour I entercepted letters that Mr. Nowell [presumably the Dean of St. Paul's] wrote to him, whereby I discovered enoughe to have hanged him. Nevertheles he shewing with teares great repentaunce, and asking on his knees forgiveness, I was content to let him goe. I here since his coming thether he hath played the promotor and apprehendeth Catholickes.

This is corroborated in the reply.⁵

It is true that Morley the singing man employeth himselfe in that kind of service . . . and hath brought diverse into danger.

In 1592 Morley was made Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, being "sworne 24th of July in Mr. Greene's room" ⁶; and in Nov. of the same year he was appointed to the "Gospeller's place and waiges", after having served as Epistler.⁷ Between 1596 and 1601 he was living in the parish of St. Helen's, Bishopsgate, his house at the end of this period being in Little St. Helen's. The parish registers (Harleian Soc., 1904) record the baptism of "Frauncys daughter of Thomas Morley, Musition", 19 Aug. 1596, and the burial of "Frauncis d. of Thomas Morley, Gent.", 9 Feb. 1599. On 26 June 1599 "Cristofer, s. of Thomas Morley, gentleman, and Suzan his wyfe", and on 28 July 1600 "Anne, d. of Thomas Morley, gentleman, and Suzan his wyfe", were baptized. There seems to be no reason to doubt that these entries all refer to the musician. His residence in St. Helen's is further marked by the appearance of his name in two Rolls of Assessments for Subsidies dated 1598⁸ and 1600, in both of which his goods to be taxed were valued at £5, and the assessment was 13s. 4d. An interesting point in connection with the earlier of these documents is that the name of William Shakespeare occurs in it, his goods being valued at the same amount as were Morley's. It appears that he and Morley both appealed against the assessment⁹, and one may suppose that some amount of personal intercourse existed between the two, especially when it is remembered that of the very little original music for Shakespeare's plays which

¹ 'State Papers', Dom. Eliz. Vol. CCXL, No. 19.

² Ibid. No. 53.

³ Rimbault, 'Cheque-book', p. 5.

⁴ Ibid., p. 34.

⁵ The 1598 Roll is printed in Hunter's 'New Illustrations of Shakespeare', 1845, and is discussed fully in Elton's 'William Shakespeare, his Family and Friends', 1904.

⁶ This statement has been called in question by Ernest Brennecke of Columbia University (Mus.T., Feb. 1938, p. 138). But that their names appear in the Roll with others to whom the word "affid" (affidavit) is prefixed is admitted. The probability of an acquaintance between the poet and the composer does not rest on this obscure point.

⁷ According to the Sadler MS (Bodl. MS Mus. e. 1-5), in which is entered his 'Domine non est exaltatum' with the inscription "Thomas Morley ætatis suæ 19, anno domini 1576".

⁸ Mus.T., Sept. 1903.

⁹ Nichols's 'Progresses'.

has survived Morley composed one if not two songs. The unique copy of Morley's 'First Booke of Ayres, or Little Short Songs, to sing and play to the Lute', in the Henry Folger Library in New York, has proved to be defective. In 1932 Dr. E. H. Fellowes was able to publish it.¹ It contains 14 songs of which 'It was a lover and his lass' is No. VI. The complete volume contained 21 songs with, as in most of its contemporaries, a pavan and galliard added. In his address "To the Reader" Morley declares himself to be "no professor" of lute ayres, "but like a blind man groping for my way". But he says that he has "at length happened on a method", and the word "First" in the title suggests that he hoped to pursue the species further.

In 1598 Morley was granted a licence for twenty-one years to print song-books of all kinds and music paper, "with forfeiture of £10 to every person offending against this grant". The patent, dated 28 Sept. 1598, is printed in Steele's 'Earliest English Music Printing' (1903). It would seem that it was obtained through the interest of one of the Caesar family (probably Sir Julius), which was connected with the parish of St. Helen's. One book, Carlton's 'Madrigals' of 1601, is said on the title-page to have been "printed by Thomas Morley dwelling in Little Saint Helen's", but as a rule East, Barley and others published as Morley's "assignes" under the patent. Barley, indeed, in 1599 and 1600, seems to have done his printing in Little St. Helen's, and only to have sold his books at his shop in "Gratious" (Gracechurch) Street (cf. Farmer's 'Madrigals' and Morley's 'Consort Lessons', 1599, and Morley's 'First Booke of Ayres', 1600). In 1601 the whole question of granting monopolies of this kind was raised in the House of Commons, and Morley's patent was among those mentioned.² The last book which appears to have been printed "by the assignement of a Patent granted to T. Morley", was Dowland's 'Third Book of Songs' (1603). Barley obtained this patent on Morley's death, and his name appears as owner of it from 1606 onwards.

Morley alludes more than once to his ill-health in his 'Plaine and Easie Introduction' (1597):

'My health since you saw me, hath beene so bad, as if it had beene the pleasure of him who may all things, to have taken me out of the world, I should have beene very well contented; and have wished it more than once.

And he then goes on to speak of the "solitarie life which I lead (being compelled to keepe at home)", as a reason for his undertaking the work. It was perhaps the bad state of his health which caused the severance of his connection with the Chapel Royal, where he was succeeded by George Woodson on 7 Oct. 1602. His death possibly took place in 1603, for the "commission to administer the goods, etc., of Thomas Morley, late parishioner of St. Botolph's, near Billingsgate", was granted to his widow "Margaret Morley" on 25 Oct. 1603.³ If we may assume that this refers to the musician, we must suppose that he had married a second time, since in 1599 his wife's name is given as "Suzan". The title-page of the 1606 edition of the 'Canzonets' of 1593, which states that they are "Now Newly Imprinted with some Songs added by the Author", may be interpreted in two ways. Weelkes printed in his 'Ayres or Fantastic Spirites' (1608) a "Remembrance of my friend M. Thomas Morley", beginning "Death hath deprived me of my dearest friend".

The following is a list of Morley's publications, of some of which he was only the editor⁴:

1. Canzonets. Or Little Short Songs to Three Voyces. 1593 (2nd ed. with four additional Canzonets, 1606; 3rd ed. 1631; German translations, Cassel, 1612, Rostock, 1624).
2. Madrigalls to Foure Voyces, 1594 (2nd ed. with two additional Madrigalls, 1600).
3. The First Booke of Balletts to five voyces, 1595 (2nd ed. 1600; an Italian edition, London, 1595; German edition, Nuremberg, 1609).
4. The First Booke of Canzonets to two voyces, 1595 (2nd ed. 1619).
5. Canzonets, Or Little Short Songs to foure voyces. Selected out of the best and approued Italian Authors. 1597 (contains two by Morley himself).
6. Canzonets or Little Short Aers to five and sixe voyces, 1597.
7. A Plaine and Easie Introduction to Practicall Musicke, 1597 (2nd ed. 1608; 3rd ed. 1771; contains eight compositions, chiefly motets, by Morley).
8. Madrigalls to five voyces. Selected out of the best approued Italian Authors. 1598.
9. The First Booke of Consort Lessons, made by diuers exquisite Authors for six Instruments, 1599 (2nd ed. 1611).
10. The First Booke of Ayres or Little Short Songs; to sing and play to the Lute with the Base Viole, 1600 (contains 'It was a lover and his lass').
11. The Triumphes of Oriana to 5 and 6 voices, composed by diuers seuerall authors, 1601 (contains two madrigals by Morley). Reprinted in score by Hawes, 1814, and 'English Madrigal School', Vol. XXXII.

With these should be mentioned:

The whole Booke of Psalmes. With their woonted Tunes . . . Compiled by sundrie Authors . . . Printed at London in Little S. Helens by W. Barley, the assigne of T. Morley, and are to be sold at his shop in Gratious [Gracechurch] street.

This book, which has no date, contains four settings of tunes by Morley, two of which (with another hitherto unprinted setting) appeared later in Ravenscroft's Psalter of 1621.⁵ Of his sacred music Barnard (1641) printed a Morning and Evening Service of four and five parts, an Evening Service of five

¹ Stated on authority of William Barclay Squire.

² Nos. 1-6 republished in 'The English Madrigal School', Vols. I-IV, No. 10 in 'The English School of Lutenist Song Writers', all edited by E. H. Fellowes.

³ See PSALTER.

⁴ In 'The English School of Lutenist Song Writers'.

⁵ Ames, 'Typographical Antiquities', 1749, p. 569.

CANZONETS FOR THREE VOICES (1593)

1. See, mine own sweet jewel.
2. Joy doth so arise.
3. Cruel you pull away too soon.
4. Lady, those eyes.
5. Hold out, my heart.
6. Good morrow, fair ladies of the May.
7. Whither away so fast?
8. Blow, shepherds, blow.
9. Deep lamenting.
10. Farewell, disdainful.
11. O fly not.
12. Thyriss, let pity move thee.
13. Now must I die recureless.
14. Lady, if I through grief.
15. Cease, mine eyes.
16. Do you not know?
17. Where art thou, wanton?
18. What ails my darling?
19. See, dear, will you not have me?
20. Arise, get up, my dear.
21. Love learns by laughing.
22. This love is but a wanton fit.
23. Though Philomela lost her love.
24. Springtime mantleth every bough.
25. O sleep, fond fancy.

CANZONETS FOR FOUR VOICES (1594)

1. My heart, why hast thou taken.
2. Still it frieth.

CANZONETS FOR FIVE VOICES (1597)

1. Fly love, that art so sprightly.
2. False love did me inveigle.
3. Adieu, adieu, you kind and cruel.
4. Love's folk in green arraying.
5. Love took his bow and arrow.
6. Lo where with flowery head.
7. O grief! even on the bud.
8. Sovereign of my delight.
9. Our Bonny Boots could toot it.¹
10. Ay me! the fatal arrow.
11. My nymph, the dear
12. Cruel, wilt thou persevere.
13. Said I that Anaryllis?
14. Damon and Phyllis squared.
15. Lady, you think you spite me.
16. You black bright stars.
17. I follow, lo, the footing.

CANZONETS FOR SIX VOICES (1597)

1. Stay, heart, run not so fast.
2. Good love, then fly thou to her.
3. Ladies, you see time flieth.
4. Hark! Alleluia.

MADRIGALS FOR FOUR VOICES (1594)

1. April is in my mistress' face.
2. Clorinda false.
3. Why sit I here complaining?
4. Since my tears and lamenting.
5. Help! I fall.
6. Lady, why grieve you still me?
7. In dew of roses.
8. In every place.
9. Now in the gentle season (Pt. i).
10. The fields abroad (Pt. ii).
11. Come, lovers, follow me.
12. O no, thou dost but flout me.
13. I will no more come to thee.
14. Besides a fountain.
15. Sport we, my lovely treasure.
16. O sweet, alas, what say you?
17. Hark! jolly shepherds.
18. Ho! who comes here.
19. Die now, my heart.
20. Say, gentle nymphs.
21. Round around a wood.
22. On a fair morning.

MADRIGALS FROM 'THE TRIUMPHES OF ORIANA' FOR FOUR VOICES (1601-3)

Arise, awake.
Hard by a crystal fountain.

¹ See BONNY BOOTS.

BALLETTES FOR FIVE VOICES (1595)

1. Dainty fine sweet nymph.
2. Shoot, false love, I care not.
3. Now is the month of maying.
4. Sing we and chant it.
5. Singing alone.
6. No, no, Nigella.
7. My bonny lass she smileth.
8. I saw my lovely Phyllis.
9. What saith my dainty darling?
10. Thus saith my Galatea.
11. About the May-pole new.
12. My lovely wanton jewel.
13. You that wont to my pipes' sound.
14. Fire! fire!
15. Those dainty daffadillies.
16. Lady, those cherries plenty.
17. I love, alas, I love thee.
18. Lo, she flies.
19. Leave, alas, this tormenting.
20. Why weeps, alas?

DIALOGUE FOR SEVEN VOICES (1595)

Phyllis, I fain would die now.

AIRS TO THE LUTE (1600)

1. A Pointed Tale.
2. Thyriss and Milla.
3. She straight her light green silken coats.
4. With my love my life was nestled.
5. I saw my lady weeping.
6. It was a lover and his lass.
7. Who is it that this dark night?
8. Mistress mine well may you fare.
9. Can I forget what reason's force.
10. Love winged my hopes.
11. What if my mistress now.
12. Come, sorrow, come.
13. Fair in a morn.
14. Absence, hear thou my protestation.

See also Anthem. Barley (William). Friderici (German ed. of madrigals). Haussmann (Ger. ed. of ballets). Schjelderup (ballet quoted in 'Scarlet Pimpernel'). Turini (theme used by M.). Venturi del Nibbio (ref. to).

MORLEY, William (b. ?; d. ?, 29 Oct. 1731).

English composer. He graduated D.Mus. at Oxford on 17 July 1713. On 8 Aug. 1715 he was admitted a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal. He composed some songs published in a collection together with others by John Isham, and a Chant in D minor, printed by Boyce (II. 306), by some believed to be the oldest double chant in existence. W. H. H.

See also Flintoft.

MORNINGTON, Earl of (Garrett Colley Wellesley) (b. Dangan, Caille, Co. Meath, 19 July 1735; d. London, 22 May 1781).

Irish amateur composer.² With little or no assistance from masters he learned to play the violin and organ, and to compose, and when, with the view of improving himself in composition, he consulted Thomas Roseingrave and Geminiani, they informed him that he already knew all they could teach him. He graduated B.A. of Dublin in 1754 and proceeded M.A. in 1757. In that year he founded the Academy of Music, an amateur society in which for the first time ladies sang in the chorus. Two years later he married the Hon. Anne Hill Trevor. In 1764 the University of ² Several interesting anecdotes of his early career are related by Daines Barrington, 'Miscellanies', 1781.

Dublin conferred on him the degree of Mus.D. and elected him professor of that faculty, a post he held till 1774. In 1758 he succeeded his father, who in 1746 had been created Baron Mornington, and in 1760 he was created Viscount Wellesley and Earl of Mornington.

His compositions are chiefly vocal; some are for the church, copies of which exist in the choir-books of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin. His chant in E♭ major is universally known.¹ But it was as a glee composer that he excelled. He gained prizes from the Catch Club in 1776 and 1777 for two catches, and in 1779 for his popular glee 'Here in cool grot'. He published a collection of 'Six Gleees' and John Sale included three others in a collection with three of his own. Nine gleees, three madrigals, an ode and ten catches are contained in Warren's collections, and several gleees in Horsley's 'Vocal Library'. An edition of his gleees was prepared in 1834 by John and William Hutchins Callcott, but its publication was prevented by the Duke of Wellington, Mornington's son. A complete collection of his gleees and madrigals, edited by Bishop, was however published in 1846. Three of his sons attained remarkable distinction: Richard, Marquis Wellesley, Arthur, Duke of Wellington, and Henry, Lord Cowley.

W. H. H., addss. W. H. G. F.

See also Melcer (arr. of 2 songs).

MORO, Jacopo (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-17th-century composer. He was a Servite monk of Viadana, Mantua. Among his works are 2 books of 'Concerti ecclesiastici', for 1-8 voices (1604) and 1-4 v. (1613); a book of psalms, etc. (1595); a book 'Officium et missa defunctorum', 8 v. (1599); 'Sacrarum cantionum cantus vel tenor' (no title-page).

E. v. d. s.

MOROCCAN MUSIC. See MAGHIRIBI MUSIC.

MOROSS, Jerome (b. Brooklyn, N.Y., 1 Aug. 1913).

American composer. He graduated from New York University in 1932 with a B.S.Mus.Ed. degree. He also held a Juilliard Fellowship in 1931-32.

A great part of Moross's more important musical work has been written for the theatre, particularly in hybrid or experimental forms such as ballet-opera and the semi-popular musical stage. He has been particularly interested in discovering blends between the vernacular and art aesthetics, and between the opera, dance and spoken play forms. His Symphony No. 1 (1942) received an important first performance under Sir Thomas Beecham at Seattle in 1942. 'A Tall Story' was given in the same year by Howard Barlow and the C.B.S. Symphony Orchestra. This work was a C.B.S. commission (1938). His 'Parade' was written in 1935 and produced the same year by the Theatre Guild of New York. 'Frankie and Johnnie', a ballet written in 1938, was produced in that year by the Chicago Federal Theatre.

¹ It is given in its original form in Mus. T., 1900, p. 173.

'Ballet Ballads', a group of ballet-operas written in collaboration with the writer John Latouche, was produced in 1948 by the Experimental Theatre in New York.

Other works not mentioned above are the following:

BALLETS

- 'Paul Bunyan' (1934).
- 'American Pattern' (1937).
- 'Robin Hood' (1946).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 'Paens' (1931).
- 'Beguine' from 'Parade' (1934).
- Suite for chamber orch. (1935).
- Symphony No. 1 (1942).
- 'A Silly Symphony', in E♭ ma. (1946).
- Symphony No. 2 (1947).

P. G.-H.

MOROWSKI, Antoni (b. ?; d. ?).

Polish 18th-century composer. Two sacred works of his have been discovered at the Cistercian Monastery at Odra: 'Kyrie and Gloria', and a 'Missa ex G (Pastoralis)', both for mixed chorus, 2 violins, viola obbligato and organ.

C. R. H.

MORPHY, Guillermo (Count) de (b. Madrid, 29 Feb. 1836; d. Baden, Switzerland, 28 Aug. 1899).

Spanish musical scholar of Irish descent. He was the grandson of an exiled Irishman and became tutor and private secretary to Alfonso XII from 1869 to 1878. His acquaintance with Gevaert influenced him to take up the study of old Spanish lute tablatures, to which he devoted twenty-five years. His magnum opus was published posthumously, in 1902, namely 'Les Luthistes espagnols du XVI^e siècle', of which there was a German version, edited by Riemann. Morphy was a pioneer in the study of Spanish lute music.

W. H. G. F.

MORPURGO, Adolfo (b. Trieste, 9 Dec. 1889).

Argentine (naturalized) violinist and conductor of Italian parentage. He studied the cello in Budapest with David Popper and subsequently toured in Italy, Austria and France. He settled in Argentina in 1913 and has played in many orchestras and chamber-music groups besides conducting opera, ballet, etc. He is a professor at both the Conservatorio Nacional and the Conservatorio Municipal in Buenos Aires, besides being professor of music at La Plata University.

In 1937 Mompurgo founded the Agrupación Argentina de Instrumentos Antiguos, which he conducts and joins as viola da gamba and perdon player. He also organizes performances of old operas, cantatas, etc., and possesses an exceptionally fine collection of old instruments, which he has collected during tours of Europe.

N. F.

MORRIS DANCE. See FOLK MUSIC: ENGLISH. MORESCA.

MORRIS, Harold (b. San Antonio, Texas, 17 Mar. 1890).

American pianist and composer. He studied music while attending the University of Texas and after his graduation was granted a scholarship at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. He married the pianist Cosby Dansby in 1914 and settled in New York as pianoforte teacher. Eugène Ysaÿe, on a visit to the U.S.A., became interested in Morris as a composer and in 1918 conducted at Cincinnati his orchestral 'Poem' inspired by Tagore's 'Gitanjali'. In 1922 he produced his first pianoforte Trio in New York and in 1931 played his pianoforte Concerto on two Negro themes with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In 1932 he gave a series of lectures on modern American music at the Rice Institute, Houston, Texas, and they were afterwards published by that Institute. From 1922 to 1939 he taught at the Juilliard School in New York and afterwards joined the staff of the Teachers' College at Columbia University there.

The following are Morris's chief compositions:

- 'Poem' for orch. (1915).
- Symphony No. 1 (1925).
- Symphony No. 2, "Victory" (1936).
- Suite for small orch. (1937).
- Overture 'Joy of Youth' (1938).
- 'American Epic' for orch. (1943).
- Symphony No. 3, "Amaranth" (1945).
- Pf. Concerto (1927).
- Vn. Concerto (1938).
- Suite for pf. & stgs. (1943).
- Trio No. 1 for vn., cello & pf. (1917).
- String Quartet No. 1 (1928).
- Quintet No. 1 for 2 vns., viola, cello & pf. (1929).
- Suite for flute, vn., cello & pf. (1935).
- String Quartet No. 2 (1937).
- Trio No. 2 for vn., cello & pf. (1937).
- Quintet No. 2 for 2 vns., viola, cello & pf. (1937).
- 4 Sonatas for pf.
- 'Ballade in Form of a Passacaglia' for pf.
- 'Set of Six' for pf.

N. B., adds.

Morris, Margaret. See Boughton ('Snow White', choreog.).

MORRIS, Mary. See ENGLISH SINGERS.

MORRIS, R. O. (Reginald Owen) (b. York, 3 Mar. 1886; d. London, 14 Dec. 1948).

English musical scholar, teacher and composer. He was educated at Harrow and at New College, Oxford, and studied music at the R.C.M. in London, where he became a member of the teaching staff. In Sept. 1926 he went to the U.S.A. to take up an appointment at the Curtis Institute at Philadelphia. But he returned to England in June 1928 and retained his professorship at the R.C.M. until his death. The composers who came from that institution all profited greatly from his teaching of counterpoint, or rather from his study of polyphony, for he did not believe greatly in academic species counterpoint and much preferred giving his students the experience of the actual practice of the great polyphonic masters and demonstrating the differences in their methods and their aesthetic outlook at various periods. He was always anxious to show the futility of text-book teaching, which pretends that the polyphony of the Flemish masters, of Palestrina, of Byrd, of the Italian and English madrigalists, of Purcell and of Bach, not to mention that of the modern revivalists of polyphonic writing, many of whom profited much by his teaching, can be reduced to the same uniform rules.¹

The books in which Morris laid down his principles will continue to exercise the salutary influence he had as a great teacher, especially as they are, though highly technical, very enticingly readable. The first was 'Contrapuntal Technique in the 16th Century' (Oxford, 1922), where he outlines the theory of composition as practised by Palestrina and his contemporaries and contrasts their practice with the theories of scholastic contrapuntists. This was followed by 'Foundations of Practical Harmony and Counterpoint' (Oxford, 1925), a textbook for teaching purposes that was supplemented by 'Introduction to Counterpoint' (Oxford, 1944). In between came 'The Structure of Music' (Oxford, 1935), which clearly shows Morris's standpoint on the problems of musical form, and his last book was the first volume of 'The Oxford Harmony' (Oxford, 1946), which is continued by H. K. Andrews.

As a composer Morris was less widely known than as a teacher and unfortunately less successful so far as public response was concerned, though he had something of his own to say that was worth far greater attention than it received. His close study of polyphonic methods appeared in his own works. A Fantasy for string quartet, published by the Carnegie Trust, is remarkable for its strangeness of sound produced by severely diatonic handling of the parts. Some motets for string quartet, songs and particularly arrangements of Elizabethan songs with quartet accompaniment made a very favourable impression on the discerning few. Soon after his return from the U.S.A. several of his instrumental compositions were given their first performance in London, at the Wigmore Hall. Among them was a Concerto in G minor for violin and orchestra and a 'Concerto piccolo' for two violins and strings, which were performed by the sisters Adila Fachiri and Jelly d'Aranyi. Both works are remarkable for strength and clearness of writing and for a refusal of any adventitious use of dissonance; but while

¹ See COUNTERPOINT, Section Academic Counterpoint.

Morris took his stand on a strictly orthodox technique, they show an independence of thought which classes them among the important works of his generation.

The Symphony in D major was played at the first (1 Jan. 1934) of six concerts of British music given in London by the B.B.C., at Queen's Hall. The first draft had been written in 1925, before he went to America. Sombre and subdued in tone, the Symphony shows that concentration on the development of ideas which distinguishes it from the more exuberant symphonic developments of the earlier generation of British composers. It is dedicated to R. Vaughan Williams.

H. C. C., adds.

The following manuscripts of works by Morris have been deposited in the Library of New College, Oxford:

1. 'Quartet in Miniature' (4 movements), unpublished. Set of copyist's parts (2 violins, viola & cello); no score.
2. 'Four Elizabethan Songs' for voice and pianoforte, unpublished:
 1. Follow your Saint.
 2. There is a lady.
 3. Maids are simple.
 4. It fell on a summer's day.
 Autograph score.
3. 'Sinfonia in C major' (4 movements), autograph full score.
4. Suite for cello and orchestra, autograph full score.
5. 'Concerto piccolo' for 2 violins and string orchestra (4 movements), autograph full score.
6. 'Concertino da camera' in A minor (3 movements), unpublished; (a) autograph full score, (b) copyist's set of parts.
(This work consists of three movements of the 'Concerto piccolo' rescored for string quintet. The third movement of the Concerto is omitted.)
7. 'Concertino' in F major for small orchestra (3 movements), (a) autograph full score, (b) autograph pianoforte duet arrangement.
8. Suite for small orchestra in B \flat major (6 movements), autograph full score.
9. 'Corinna's Maying' (Herrick) for chorus and orchestra; autograph sketch for voices and pianoforte.

BIBL.—RUBBRA, EDMUND, 'R. O. MORRIS: an Appreciation' (M. & L., XXX, 1949, p. 107).

MORRIS, Thomas (? Richard). See ENGLISH MUSICIANS ABROAD.

Morris, William. See Bax (song). Elgar ('Fight for the right', song). Hart (F., 3 songs). Holst (4 partsongs). Walker (E., 'From the Upland', voice & chamber m.).

MORRISON, Angus (b. Bray, Berkshire, 28 May 1902).

English pianist. He was educated at the R.C.M. in London, where he won an open scholarship for pianoforte and studied under Harold Samuel. From 1926 onwards he has been on the teaching-staff there. Since his first recital at the Wigmore Hall in 1923 Morrison has been much before the public both in London and the provinces. His rise to popularity has been slower than is the case with some others of his generation less gifted as interpretative artists. His comparative slowness in attracting the notice of the larger concert-going public, as opposed to the inner ring of connoisseurs, was caused by a characteristically unbending attitude towards life, and so towards art. In this connection his Scottish ancestry may be noted. Self-criticism of this kind, joined to a naturally retiring disposition, tended to hinder the evolution of a brilliant concert pianist, though it could and did provide the right psychological atmosphere in which an individualistic interpretative gift would develop.

S. G.

Morrow, M. G. See Delage ('Conté par la mer', symph. poem).

MORROW, Walter (b. Liverpool, 15 June 1850; d. London [Wimbledon], 21 Dec. 1937).

English trumpeter. Reared at Liverpool as an orphan, he went to London as a pupil of Thomas Harper at the R.A.M. and began to appear at London concerts about 1873, playing both cornet and slide trumpet after the English custom at that time. Upon Harper's retirement in 1885 Morrow was generally regarded as his successor as the foremost English trumpeter of the day, playing principal trumpet at the Philharmonic concerts, the Handel Festivals, etc. Towards 1910 he began to give up concert work and, as he used to put it, to retire to his "little corner" at Daly's Theatre, where, in an orchestra which boasted many of London's most eminent players, he was first cornet. He was professor at the R.C.M. from 1894 to 1920, and also at the G.S.M. A greatly respected figure in the profession, he held for many years the responsible post of Collector of the Royal Society of Musicians. An all-round musician, as a pianist he was particularly devoted to Bach's fugues.

Though his celebrated beauty of tone on the trumpet is now a memory only of those who heard it, Morrow will be remembered in the future as a scholar and a reformer. Well versed in the history of the trumpet, he also shared with Harper a distaste for the then prevailing habit of playing orchestral trumpet parts on the cornet, and this he expressed in various articles and lectures.² Unlike Harper, however, Morrow was not content to use the slide trumpet where feasible and otherwise the cornet.³ He insistently advocated use of the valved trumpet, then hardly known in England. His preference was for Mahillon's F valved trumpet on the grounds that an F trumpet had the proper length of tubing to reproduce the classical effect. He demonstrated this instrument at a Gresham lecture, even performing upon it a florid cornet solo, and by his example set a fashion for it among London players which lasted roughly from 1898 to 1905, by which time the modern B \flat trumpet had arrived in England. To this last instrument, which has merely the tube length of a cornet, Morrow was opposed from the beginning, and though his colleague John Sgblomon eventually persuaded him to use it and thereby avoid most of the missed notes which not infrequently marred Morrow's performances on the F, he never really took to it, and with the support of Stanford, who shared the same feeling in the matter, he revived the F trumpet at the R.C.M. from about 1910 to 1914, his greatest and favourite pupil during that interval having been Ernest Hall, the leading British player of recent years. Morrow's part in the evolution of special trumpets for the performance of Bach's works is described elsewhere.¹ His F trumpet and his slide trumpet are now in the Horniman Museum, London.

¹ See 'Victorian Magazine', 1892; also Proc. Mus. Ass., 1895.

² See TRUMPET, II, iii.

A. B.

Morselli, Adriano. See Scarlatti (1, 3 libs.). Vivaldi ('Incoronazione di Dario', lib.).

MORSZTYN, Helena (b. Warsaw, 23 Apr. 1895).

Polish pianist. She studied the pianoforte with her grandmother² and then with Strobl in Warsaw. Later she moved to Vienna and became a pupil of Emil von Sauer. At the age of sixteen she left the Viennese "Meisterschule", being awarded the Austrian State Prize offered by the City of Vienna. She made her début in Berlin and went for her first concert tour to Spain, a tour originally organized for Sauer. Owing to illness the great pianist was unable to go himself, and on his personal recommendation she was sent instead. She then toured widely in Europe, in the Middle East and Far East, as well as in the U.S.A. It was in America that she began her pedagogic career, without discontinuing her concert appearances. She is domiciled in America and devotes a great deal of her energy to the training of young pianists.

C. R. H.

MORTARI, Virgilio (b. Passirana di Linate, Milan, 6 Dec. 1902).

Italian pianist and composer. He studied the pianoforte and composition at Milan under C. A. Bossi and Pizzetti. He began his musical career as a pianist, but he has for many years now been exclusively devoted to composition and teaching. He taught harmony, counterpoint and fugue, and later on composition, at the Conservatorio B. Marcello of Venice, and in 1940 he was appointed professor of composition at the Conservatorio di Santa Cecilia in Rome. In his first works he betrayed the influence of Pizzetti: they are distinguished by clarity of writing, a tendency towards folk melody and at times a spirit of humour. As an expert in 18th-century Italian opera he undertook modern editions and performances (at Siena, where he remains one of the foremost promoters of the Settimane Musicali) of operas by Galuppi ('Il filosofo di campagna', 'L' amante di tutti'), Vivaldi ('Olimpiade'), A. Scarlatti ('Il trionfo dell' onore'), Pergolesi ('Flaminio'), Cimarosa ('I tre amanti'), Tritto and others. He is also responsible for the modern edition of Purcell's 'Dido and Aeneas' given at the Florentine Maggio Musicale of 1939, and for editions of instrumental and vocal works by such Italian composers as are mentioned above.

Among Mortari's original compositions the following deserve special mention: the one-act comic opera 'L' allegra piazzetta', produced in Rome in 1945; the 'Trittico' for soprano, mezzo-soprano, women's chorus and orchestra on old religious texts (1939); the 'Stabat Mater' for 2 solo voices and orchestra (1947); 'Minuetto, notturno e marcia' for orchestra (1949), the pianoforte Concerto (1952); 'Due laude' for voice and 3 instruments (1946); numerous songs. He collaborated with Alfredo Casella in a treatise, 'Tecnica dell' orchestra contemporanea' (Milan, 1949).

G. M. G.

MORTARO, Antonio (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-17th-century monk and composer. He entered the Minorite monastery at Brescia in 1595. In 1598 he was in the Franciscan monastery at Milan and in 1602 organist at the cathedral of Novara; but he was back at Brescia in 1606-8.

Mortaro was a prolific composer of masses, motets, sacred songs, etc., also of four books of 'Fiamelle amorose' for 3 voices, an organ 'Canzon' and pieces in collective volumes.

E. v. d. s.

MORTE D' ABEL, LA (Oratorio). See METASTASIO.

MORTE DI CATONE, LA (Cantata). See METASTASIO.

MORTELLARI. Italian family of musicians. They were well known in England at the end of the 18th and beginning of the 19th century. There is sometimes difficulty in identifying the members of this family, particularly of the younger generation, as Christian names or initials are not always given.

(1) Michele Mortellari ("the elder Mortellari") (b. Palermo, c. 1750; d. London, 27 Mar. 1807). He was a pupil of Piccinni and had at least a dozen operas produced in Rome, Turin, Venice, Padua, Modena, Milan and Verona between 1771 and 1784. He settled in London about 1785 as a composer and teacher of singing. Mrs. Billington is said to have studied with him during her first Covent Garden season (1786).

¹ See TRUMPET, I, ii.

² Zofia Klemensowska, born Malhomme, who was a pupil of Chopin and Thalberg and became one of the foremost woman pianists of her time. Suffering a personal tragedy, she vowed at the height of her pianistic career never to touch the pianoforte again; but seeing her granddaughter struggling with a "Chopin legato", she broke her vow and took her under her personal care.

His chief dramatic compositions for London were 'Armida' (1786), 'Didone', pasticcio (1786) and 'Venus and Adonis', first given at the Hanover Square Rooms on 8 May 1787. "particularly adapted to the voices of Signor Rubinelli, Mrs. Ambrose and Mrs. Billington", but revived later, e.g. at the Pantheon on 30 Apr. 1790, with the composer at the keyboard. A Mr. Mortellari played the trumpet at the Pantheon during the 1790-91 season; if this was the composer-teacher, Michele Mortellari the elder, he must indeed have been versatile. At his death the 'Gentleman's Magazine' described him as "a gentleman of much celebrity in the musical world". The ballet 'La Fille sauvage' (1805) may have been by him also, or by one of the younger generation.

(2) M. C. or C. M. Mortellari ("the younger Mortellari") (b. : d. ?). He is generally supposed to have been the son of the preceding. Various songs and pianoforte arrangements were issued by him in the first years of the 19th century. Apparently he sold his own music and that of his relative (3) at 51 Oxford Street. "Mr. Mortellari junior" was harpsichordist at the King's Theatre in 1805-6.

(3) Antonio Mortellari (b. ?; d. ?). Eitner says that he was possibly a son of Michele (1), but in one family document he is described as "of Venice". It is possible he was a nephew or cousin who went to England to seek advancement under the protection of the successful Michele (1). He wrote Italian songs and duets, some of them obtainable from M. C. Mortellari at 51 Oxford Street and dating mainly from the early years of the 19th century.

(3a) A. B. Mortellari (b. ?; d. ?). Probably the same as Antonio. His compositions were of the same type as those of (2) and (3), i.e. vocal pieces and pianoforte arrangements.

(4) "The Misses Mortellari" (or "Mesdemoiselles Mortellari") (b. ?; d. ?). They were well-known singers early in the 19th century, presumably sisters. Marietta Augusta Mortellari is known to have been the daughter of Antonio Mortellari (3). After her marriage to J. A. Woolrych she sang at the King's Theatre as Signora Woolrych. Her grandson was Frederick Clav, the composer.

M. S. (ii).

BIBL. — WIEL, TADDEO, 'Il teatro musicale veneziano del settecento' (Venice, 1897).

MORTELMANS, Ivo (Oscar) (b. Antwerp, 19 May 1901).

Flemish composer, conductor and critic. He studied music against the wishes of his father, Lodewijk Mortelmans, first at the Antwerp Conservatory and afterwards at that of Brussels, and he also had private lessons from Paul Gilson. In 1931 he became professor of theory at the Royal Flemish Conservatory, but although this necessitated his residence at Antwerp, he also conducted opera at Eindhoven in Holland from 1931 to 1936. He is moreover an authoritative music critic.

His compositions are characterized by poetry, love of natural beauty, religious mysticism and a certain amount of national feeling. He wrote two dramatic works: a short fable-opera 'De krekkel en de mier' ('The Cricket and the Ant', after Lafontaine) and stage music for the open-air play 'Antwerpen's Glorie' by Anton van de Velde. Of exceptional interest also are his female choruses with instrumental accompaniments set to poems by the Flemish 13th-century mystic Sister Hadewych. Other works are the oratorio 'Lutgart', several masses (including 'Missa gregoriana' and 'Missa Jesu bone pastor'), choral works, symphonic sketches for orch., works for solo instruments, chamber music, songs and arrangements of Flemish folksongs.

A. L. G.

MORTELMANS, Lodewijk (b. Antwerp, 5 Feb. 1868; d. Antwerp, 26 June 1952).

Belgian conductor and composer, father of the preceding. He studied at the Antwerp School of Music, where Jan Blockx and Peter Benoit were among his masters. In 1891 he was a laureate of the Académie Royale de Belgique and in 1893 he took the first Belgian Prix de Rome. He was professor of counterpoint and fugue at the Royal Flemish Conservatory of Antwerp in 1902-24 and director of that institution in 1924-33. On the foundation of the Nouveaux Concerts d'Anvers in 1914 he became their director and conductor.

His teaching attracted many talented pupils, among them being Marinus de Jong and Flor Peeters. An enthusiast for the Flemish movement, he was for some time president of the Society of Flemish Composers. He specialized in the setting of words by Guido Gezelle, the leading Flemish poet of the 19th century.

The following are the most important works by Mortelmans: opera 'De Kinderen der Zee'; children's cantata 'Jong Vlaanderen' with orch. & other choral works; 'Homerische Symphonie', 'Drie Elegieën' and symph. poems 'Mei', 'Helios', 'Lentemythos' & 'Lente-Idylle' for orch.; instrumental pieces, songs, &c.

H. A.

BIBL. — BROECKX, JAN L., 'Lodewijk Mortelmans' (Antwerp, 1945).

RIEL, LEO VAN, 'Lodewijk Mortelmans' (M. & L., II, 1921, p. 107).

MORTIER DE FONTAINE, Henry Louis Stanislas (b. Wisnowice, 13 May 1816; d. London, 10 May 1883).

Franco-Polish pianist. He was possessed of unusual technical ability and is said to have been the first person to play Beethoven's great Sonata, Op. 106, in public. From 1853 to 1860 he lived in St. Petersburg and subsequently at Munich, Paris and London.

J. A. F.-M.

Morton, John Madison. See Cox and Box (Sullivan). German Reed (1, 'Who the Composer?', lib.). Sullivan ('Cox and Box', operetta).

MORTON, Robert (b. ?; d. ?, 1475).

English composer. He is first heard of in 1457, when he was paid 72 livres on entering the chapel of Philip the Good, of Burgundy, as a singer. For some time he seems to have been attached to the service of Philip's son, the Count of Charolais. In 1470 he was promoted to the position of chaplain to Charles the Bold. Both John Hothby and Tinctoris speak with admiration of his music, and his contemporaries Molinet and de La Chesnaye mention him in their poetic lists of eminent composers. His chansons appear frequently in late 15th-century chansonnières. All have been printed in the works mentioned below; a complete list of sources is given in Marix's second book.

R. T. D.

BIBL. — JEFFENSEN, K., 'Der Kopenhager Chansonnier' (Copenhagen, 1927).

MARIX, J., 'Les Musiciens de la cour de Bourgogne' (Paris, 1937).

'Histoire de la musique . . . sous le règne de Philippe le Bon (1420-67)' (Strasbourg, 1939).

MOSCAGLIA, Giovanni Battista (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-century composer. He worked in Rome and published 4 books of madrigals for 5 voices, 2 books of madrigals, 4 v., 1 book of 'Napoletane', 3 v. (published c. 1570-87). There are also single numbers and lute arrangements in collective volumes.

E. v. d. s.

MOSCHELES, Ignaz (b. Prague, 30 May 1794; d. Leipzig, 10 Mar. 1870).

German-Bohemian pianist, conductor and composer. His precocious aptitude for music aroused the interest of Dionys Weber, the director of the Prague Conservatory, who brought him up on Mozart and Clementi. At the age of fourteen he played a concerto of his own in public, and soon after, on the death of his father, he was sent to Vienna to shift for himself as a pianoforte teacher and player, and to pursue his studies in counterpoint under Albrechtsberger, and in composition under Salieri. He quickly became a favourite in the best musical circles. In 1814 Artaria & Co., the publishers, honoured him with a commission to make the pianoforte arrangement of Beethoven's 'Fidelio' under the master's supervision.

Moscheles's career as a virtuoso can be dated from the production of his 'Variationen über den Alexandermarsch', Op. 32 (1815). These brilliant variations met with an unprecedented success and soon became a popular display piece for professional pianists; later in life he frequently found himself compelled to play them, though he had outgrown them both as a musician and as a player.

During the ten years following, Moscheles grew into the foremost pianist after Hummel and before Chopin, and he led the life of a travelling virtuoso. In the winter of 1821 he was heard and admired in Holland and wrote his Concerto in G minor; in the same year he played in Paris and in London, where he first appeared at the Philharmonic concert of 11 June 1821. John Cramer and the veteran Clementi hailed him as an equal and friend; his duo for two pianofortes, 'Hommage à Händel', was written for Cramer's concert and played by him and the composer at the Opera concert-room on 9 May 1822. In the season of 1823 Moscheles reappeared in London, and in 1824 he gave pianoforte lessons to Mendelssohn, then a youth of fifteen, in Berlin.

In 1826, soon after his marriage, at Hamburg, to Charlotte Embden, Moscheles chose London for a permanent residence, and for a further ten years¹ he led the busy life of a prominent metropolitan musician. He appeared at the concerts of friends and rivals, gave his own concert annually, paid flying visits to Bath, Brighton, Edinburgh, etc., played much in society, did all manner of work to the order of publishers, gave innumerable lessons and withal composed assiduously. In 1832 he conducted the first performance in England of Beethoven's 'Missa solemnis' (24 Dec.) with the Queen's Square Select Society at Thomas Alsager's house. The same year he was elected one of the directors of the Philharmonic Society, and in 1837 and 1838 he conducted Beethoven's ninth Symphony with signal success at the Society's concerts. In 1845, after Bishop's resignation, he acted as regular conductor.

When Mendelssohn, who during his repeated visits to England had become Moscheles's intimate friend, started the Leipzig Conservatory, Moscheles was invited to take the post of first professor of the pianoforte. He began his duties in 1846, and the continued success of the institution, both during the few remaining months of Mendelssohn's life and for full twenty years after was largely due to Moscheles's wide and solid reputation, and to his indefatigable zeal and exemplary conscientiousness as a teacher. He took quite a paternal interest in his pupils; if the school hours proved insufficient, which was frequently the case, he would invite them to his house, and there continue his instructions; and when they left school he endeavoured to find suitable professional openings for them and remained their friend, ever ready with kindly advice and assistance.

¹ In 1827 he noted and arranged the traditional airs sung by a company of Tyrolean singers who visited London. Two folio volumes of these songs were published by Willis with translation by W. Ball. In this collection first appeared the once favourite song 'The Merry Swiss [!] Boy'.

As a pianist Moscheles was distinguished by a crisp and incisive touch, clear and precise phrasing and a pronounced preference for minute accentuation. He played octaves with stiff wrists and was chary in the use of the pedals.

Mendelssohn and, with some reservations, Schumann were the only younger masters whose pianoforte works were congenial to him. Those of Chopin and Liszt he regarded with mingled feelings of aversion and admiration. Indeed, his method of touch and fingering did not permit him to play either Chopin's or Liszt's pieces with ease. He wrote in 1833, apropos of Chopin's studies, tc :

My thoughts, and consequently my fingers, ever stumble and sprawl at certain crude modulations, and I find Chopin's productions on the whole too sugared, too little worthy of a man and an educated musician, though there is much charm and originality in the national colour of his motives.

It is true he somewhat modified this opinion when he heard Chopin play. Still it remains a fact that, to the end of his days, both the matter and the manner of Chopin and other modern pianists appeared to him questionable.

Moscheles was renowned for the variety and brilliancy of his extempore performances, the character of which can be guessed at by his Preludes, Op. 73. His last improvisation in public on themes furnished by the audience formed part of the programme of a concert at St. James's Hall in 1865, given by Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt "in aid of the sufferers by the war between Austria and Prussia", where he improvised for some twenty minutes on "See the conquering hero comes" and on a theme from the Andante of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, in a highly interesting and astonishing manner.

The list of his numbered compositions given in a Thematic Catalogue (Leipzig, Kistner) and of Vol. II of his wife's book (see Bibl.) extends to Op. 142, and there is besides a long list of ephemera, written for the market, to please publishers and fashionable pupils. The latter, and many of the former, have had their day; but his best works, such as the Concerto in G minor, Op. 60 (1820-21), the 'Concerto pathétique', Op. 93, the 'Sonate mélancolique', Op. 49, the 'Hommage à Händel' for two pianofortes, Op. 92, the three 'Allegri di bravura', Op. 51, and above all the twenty-four 'Études', Op. 70 (1825 and 1826) and 'Characteristische Studien', Op. 95, occupy a place in the classical literature of the instrument from which no subsequent development can oust them.

E. D.

BIBL. — MENDELSSOHN, FELIX, 'Briefe von F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy an Ignaz und Charlotte Moscheles' (Leipzig, 1888).

MOSCHELES, CHARLOTTE, 'Aus Moscheles Leben', ed. from his diary (Leipzig, 1872); Eng. trans., 'The Life of Moscheles', by A. D. Coleridge (London, 1873).

MOSCHELES, IGNAZ, 'Fragments of an Autobiography' (London, 1899).

See also Chopin (3 Studies for M.'s Method). May-seder (concerts with). Mendelssohn (ded. of 'Rondo brillant' for pf. & orch. & pf. Fantasy). Rovescio (ex. of). Schumann (ded. of pf. Sonata No. 3).

MOSCHUS. See Bantock (song). Roussel (song).

MOSE IN EGITTO ('Moses in Egypt')

Opera (azione tragico-sacra) in 3 acts by Rossini. Libretto by Andrea Leone Tottola. Produced Naples, Teatro San Carlo, 5 Mar. 1818, with the preghiera "Dall' tuo stellato soglio" added, same theatre, 7 Mar. 1819. 1st perf. abroad, Budapest (German trans. by A. Feszetics as 'Elzia und Osiride'), 18 Dec. 1820. 1st in England, London. Haymarket Theatre (in Italian, as 'Pietro l' eremita'), 23 Apr. 1822. 1st in U.S.A., New York (in Italian), 2 Mar. 1835. See also MOÏSE for the second, French version, which later appeared in Italy as 'Mosè nuovo'.

MOSEL, Giovanni Felice (b. Florence, 1754; d. ?).

Italian violinist and composer. His father, who had been a pupil of Tartini, gave him his first instruction in violin playing, and he also received lessons from Pietro Nardini. In 1793 he succeeded the latter as director of the music at the court of the Grand Duke Leopold at Florence, and in 1812 he became first violin in the Teatro della Pergola there. His name is known chiefly in connection with the history of the "Tuscan Strad", a violin which was one of a quartet made by Stradivari for the Grand Duke of Tuscany in 1690. Before 1792 this chef-d'œuvre had disappeared from the ducal collection, and it was lost until 1795, when Mosel (whose possession of the instrument is unaccounted for) sold it to David Ker of Portavoe, Ireland, for £24.

The following are Mosel's published compositions :

6 Duets for 2 vns. & pf. (Paris, Pleyel, 1783).

6 String Quartets (ibid., 1785).

6 Duets for 2 vns., Op. 3 (Venice, 1791).

Serenade for flute, 2 vns. & cello (Venice, 1791).

There are also, in manuscript, sonatas for violin alone, trios for 2 violins and cello, and some symphonies.

E. H.-A.

BIBL. — HILL & SONS, 'The Tuscan Strad' (London, 1889, 1891).

RACSTER, OLGA, 'Chats on Violins' (London, 1905).

MOSEL, Ignaz Franz von (b. Vienna, 2 Apr. 1772; d. Vienna, 8 Apr. 1844).

Austrian conductor, composer and writer on music. He conducted the first musical festivals of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde in the imperial riding-school in Vienna (1812-16). He was ennobled and made a Hofrat. From 1820 to 1829 he was vice-director of the two court theatres, and from 1829 till his death principal custos of the Imperial Library. He was one of the three chief mourners at Beethoven's funeral. In his earlier years he arranged Haydn's 'Creation' (Mollo), Cherubini's 'Médée' and 'Deux Journées' (Cappi), and Mozart's 'Così fan tutte' (Steiner) for string quartet; also Haydn's 'Creation' and 'Così fan tutte' for two pianofortes for the blind pianist Marie Therese von Paradies. For the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde he put additional instruments to several of Handel's oratorios¹ and translated the text. He composed three operas (court theatre): 'Die Feuerprobe' (28 Apr. 1811), 'Salem' (5 Mar. 1813) and 'Cyrus und Astyages' (13 June 1818), also one Singspiel, several overtures and entr'actes for plays, choruses for Collin's tragedy 'Brutus', two cantatas, 'Hermes' (1812) and 'Hygea' (1814) for Vienna University, a 'Missa solennis', etc.

Mosel published three collections of songs, dedicating one to Vogl, the celebrated singer of Schubert's songs, and another to Rochlitz (Steiner). Among his writings the following are of value: 'Versuch einer Ästhetik des dramatischen Tonsatzes' (Vienna, 1813), 'Über das Leben und die Werke des Antonio Salieri' (Vienna, 1827), 'Über die Original-partitur des Requiems von W. A. Mozart' (1829), 'Geschichte der Hofbibliothek' (Vienna, 1835) and articles in various periodicals on the history of music, including 'Die Tonkunst in Wien während der letzten 5 Dezennien' (Berlin, 1818, revised and republished 1840).

C. F. P.

Mosen, J. See Schumann (2 partsongs, 1 song).

Mosenthal, Salomon Hermann. See Brüll (lib.). Flotow ('Albin', lib.). Leschetizky ('Erste Falte', lib.). Lustigen Weiber von Windsor (Nicolai, lib.). Kretschmar ('Folkunger', lib.). Macfarren (1, Helvellyn, opera). Nicolai ('Lustigen Weiber', lib.).

MOSER, Andreas (b. Semlin o/Danube, 29 Nov. 1859; d. Berlin, 7 Oct. 1925).

German violinist, author and editor. He was a pupil and afterwards colleague and biographer of Joachim. He became teacher at the Berlin High School for Music in 1888 and professor there in 1900. His biography of Joachim was first written for the latter's artistic jubilee (1899) and enlarged after Joachim's death to two volumes. Moser also edited the correspondence of Joachim and Brahms and the 'Briefe von und an J. Joachim' (3 vols., 1911-12). He collaborated with Joachim in producing the 'Methodik des Violinspiels' (Eng. trans. Moffat) and did much important editing of the classics.

H. C. C.

MOSER, Franz Joseph (b. Vienna, 20 Mar. 1880; d. Vienna, June 1939).

Austrian conductor and composer. He first studied music under his father and later at the Vienna Conservatory under Schalk, Löwe, Mandyczewski, Grädener and Fuchs. He was Kapellmeister in several provincial towns, and in 1906 was appointed coach and assistant to Felix Mottl at Munich. He returned to Vienna in 1919, where he became professor of pianoforte and theory of music at the State Academy, chorus master at the State Opera and lecturer at the University.

¹ Haslinger published the scores of 'Belshazzar' and 'Jephtha'.

The following is a list of Moser's chief works:

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

Op.

42. 'Das Marchen', play by H. H. Ortner.

CHORAL WORKS

1. Mass.
11. 4 Songs for women's voices.
28. 3 Men's Choruses.
54. Grand Mass, E mi.
55. Grand Mass, B mi.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

20. Symphony No. 1, C# mi.
34. Symphony No. 2, G mi.
41. Symphonic Prelude.
43. Scherzo, A ma.
44. Serenade for small orch.
48. Symphony No. 3, F# mi.
50. Symphony No. 4, A ma.

MUSIC FOR WIND BAND

16. 6 Military Marches.
35. Serenade for 15 wind insts.
37. Suite for 17 wind insts.
46. Scherzo for 12 trumpets & bass trumpet.

CHAMBER MUSIC

18. Quintet for 2 vns., viola, cello & pf., G mi.
19. String Quartet No. 1, G ma.
23. String Sextet, F ma.
32. String Quartet No. 2, F ma.
38. Trio for 2 oboes & Eng. horn.
39. String Quartet No. 3, A mi.
40. Chamber Symphony, F mi., for 9 insts.
45. String Quartet No. 4, C ma.
52. Quartet for vn., viola, cello & pf., E# ma.

VIOLIN (OR FLUTE) AND PIANOFORTE

36. 'Vier phantastische Stücke.'

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

12. 'Aus meinem Leben', 12 pieces.
Also songs, &c.

K. D. H.

MOSER, Hans Joachim (b. Berlin, 25 May 1889).

German musicologist, baritone singer, composer and novelist, son of Andreas Moser. He studied the violin with his father, singing with Oscar Noë and F. Schmidt, composition with H. van Eyken and R. Kahn, and musical science at the Universities of Berlin (Kretschmar, Wolf), Marburg (Schiedermair), Leipzig (Riemann, Schering) and Rostock (1907-10). He took his Ph.D. in 1910 with the thesis 'Die Musikgenossenschaften im deutschen Mittelalter'. In 1919 he was appointed lecturer in musical science at the University of Halle, where he became professor three years later. He gave up this post in 1925 for a similar professorship at Heidelberg. Two years later he was appointed honorary professor at the University of Berlin and director of the Academy for church and school music. He retained this directorship until 1933, when the Academy was united with the Berlin Hochschule für Musik and in 1934 he was forced to retire by the Nazi regime.

Moser made a fresh adaptation for the stage of Weber's 'Euryanthe' (1915) and Handel's 'Orlando' (1922). Since 1926, on the commission of the German Academy in Munich, he has been editing the collective edition of Weber's works. Among his compositions are a school opera 'Der Reisekamerad' (1931), 2 songs with orch. (1929) and songs for contralto and pf. trio (1944). He also produced novels with musical backgrounds, 'Die verborgene Sinfonie', 'Ersungenes Traumland', 'Der klingende Grundstein' (12 short stories), etc., and a comedy 'Bittersüßer Ehespiegel'.

Moser has been enormously prolific in musicological literature, so much so that only a fraction of his works can be named. The most important are:

BOOKS

- 'Geschichte der deutschen Musik', 3 vols (Stuttgart, 1920-24).
- 'Paul Hofhauser: ein Lied- und Orgelmeister des Humanismus' (Stuttgart, 1929).
- 'Die Ballade' (Berlin, 1930).
- 'Die Epochen der Musikgeschichte' (Stuttgart, 1930).
- 'Die unbestimmte Vertonung des Evangeliums' (Leipzig, 1931).
- 'Musiklexikon' (Leipzig, 1932-35).
- 'Die Melodien der Lutherlieder' (Leipzig, 1935).
- 'J. S. Bach' (Leipzig, 1935).
- 'Heinrich Schütz: der Mann und das Werk' (Cassel, 1936).
- 'Das deutsche Lied seit Mozart', 2 vols (Zürich, 1937).
- 'Kleines Heinrich Schütz-Buch' (Cassel, 1940).
- 'Chr. W. Gluck' (Stuttgart, 1941).
- 'C. M. v. Weber' (Leipzig, 1941).
- Also c. 100 lectures, essays and articles.¹

EDITIONS

- Egenolf's 'Gassenhawerlin' (facsimile) (1927).
- Arnt von Aich, 'Liederbuch' (1930).
- Thomas Sporer, Works (1929).
- 16th-century Carmina (1929).
- 'Frühmeister der deutschen Orgelkunst' (1930).
- Philipp Krieger, 30 Ariettas (1931).
- 'Alte Meister des Liedes' (1931).
- 'Minnesang und Volkshied' (1933).
- 12 Folksongs of Lorraine (1933).
- Schütz, 5 newly discovered Motets (1937).
- Valentin Rathgeber, 'Augsburger Tafelkonfekt' (1943). K. G., adds.

MÖSER, Karl (b. Berlin, 24 Jan. 1774; d. Berlin, 27 Jan. 1851).

German violinist and conductor. He was a pupil of Böttcher and Karl Haak. After a short activity as member of the royal chapel in Berlin he went to Hamburg, where his personal intercourse with Rode and Viotti encouraged him to renewed studies. After extended journeys he returned to his former Berlin post in 1811, and there formed a quartet party with Kelz as cellist. Soon after, he widened the scope of his public concerts by the introduction of symphonies and overtures, which gradually developed into the symphony concerts of the royal chapel for the benefit of the orphan fund. On 27 Nov. 1826 he conducted the first performance of Beethoven's ninth Symphony. In 1842 he celebrated his jubilee, received the title of Royal Kapellmeister and was pensioned, but he continued to preside over the instrumental class. Among the foremost of his pupils are Karl Müller and his son August. His compositions are unimportant.

J. A. F.-M.

MOSER, Rudolf (b. Niederuzwil, Canton St. Gall, 7 Jan. 1892).

Swiss conductor and composer. He received his university education and his early musical training at Basel. From 1912 to 1914 he worked under Max Reger, Hans Sitt and Julius Klengel at the Leipzig Conservatory, then returned to Basel, where he worked under Hans Huber, Hermann Suter, Joseph Lauber and Karl Nef. He conducts the choir of the Cathedral and teaches at the Conservatory. He makes a special feature of performances of old music (Josquin des Prés, Schütz, Purcell, etc.).

Moser holds a special place among Swiss composers by reason of his endeavours to combine old forms — frequently coupled with the use of the ecclesiastical modes — with a modern style of expression. The following are his chief compositions:

STAGE WORKS

- 'Die Fischerin' (Goethe), play with music, Op. 63 (1935).
- 'Der Rattenfänger', dance-play (1950).
- 'Berner Brunnenspiel'.
- Incidental music for 'Der Gaukler unserer lieben Frau', mystery by Senta Maria (1939).

RADIO MUSIC

- 'Periander und Lykophron' (G. Arnold Schmidt).

CHORAL WORKS

- 'Ostergesang' (from Goethe's 'Faust'), Op. 7 (1918).
- 6 Motets, Op. 11.
- Odes of Horace for baritone, chorus & orch., Op. 50 (1931).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 4 Suites, Opp. 29, 47, 55, 56.
- 'Concerto grosso', Op. 32 (1927).

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

- 3 Vn. Concertos, Opp. 24, 31, 39.
- Organ Concerto, Op. 37.
- Concerto for vn., viola & cello, Op. 36 (1930).
- Pf. Concerto, Op. 61.
- Viola Concerto, Op. 62 (1934-35).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- 4 String Quartets, Opp. 8 (1916-19), 15, 25, 49 (1931).
- Trio for vn., cello & pf., Op. 36.
- String Sextet, Op. 53 (1932).
- Also sonatas, inst. suites & divertimenti, organ & pf. works, songs, &c.

H. E., adds.

MOSES (Rossini). See MOSE IN EGITTO and MOISE.

MOSEWIUS, Johann Theodor (b. Königsberg, 25 Sept. 1788; d. Schaffhausen, Switzerland, 15 Sept. 1858).

German conductor. He forsook the law for music and the theatre. After a regular musical education he became in 1814 director of the Opera in his native town. He married, and in 1816 went to Breslau, and for eight years he and his wife were the pillars of the Opera. His wife dying in 1825 he left the theatre and founded the Breslau Singakademie. He had before this started the Lieder-tafel of the town. In 1827 he followed Berner as professor at the University, and in 1832 became director of the music there. In 1831 he succeeded Schnabel as head of the Royal Institution for Church Music, which he appears to have conducted most efficiently, bringing forward a large number of pieces by the greatest of the old Italian masters, as well as the vocal works of Mendelssohn, Loewe, Spohr, Marx, etc. His activity was further shown in the foundation of an elementary class as a preparative for the Singakademie, and a society called the Musikalischer Cirkel (1834) for the practice of secular music. He also initiated the musical section of the Vaterländische Gesellschaft of Silesia, and became its secretary.

¹ Many of these are shown in the Bibliographies following the articles in this Dictionary to whose subjects they refer.

In England Mosewius was known principally through two pamphlets — reprints from the A.M.Z. — 'J. S. Bach in seinen Kirchen-cantaten und Choralgesängen' (Berlin, 1845) and 'J. S. Bach's Matthäus Passion' (Berlin, 1852). In the copious examples which they contain some Englishmen made their first acquaintance with Bach's finest compositions.

G.

MOSKOWA, Prince. See NEY, JOSEPH NAPOLÉON.

MOSONYI, Mihály¹ (b. Boldogasszonyfalva, Hungary [now Frauenkirchen, Austria], [bapt. 4 Sept.] 1815; d. Pest, 31 Oct. 1870).

Hungarian double-bass player, writer on music and composer. His family was of German origin, having settled in Hungary about the 18th century: the name of Brand first appears in the registers of 1775. The third of eight children of a poor family, he was intended for the career of schoolmaster. His fondness for music was so great that he began picking out tunes on the violin, double bass and organ; at the age of fourteen he deputized at the organ of the parish church. At nineteen he went to Pozsony (Pressburg) to complete his education; but his limited means obliged him to work for a printer, and he spent all his spare money on musical textbooks. He became acquainted with Karl Turányi, a well-known pianist, who gave him some instruction in elementary harmony and modulation; apart from this he was entirely self-taught. He acquired his knowledge by working through Reicha's treatise, a fact worth noting since his technical competence was widely acknowledged later and earned him the respect of Liszt, whose lasting friendship and esteem is evident from their correspondence. Turányi introduced him to a number of aristocratic patrons who engaged him as music master. He spent a short period in the service of Count Keglevich and then became music master and preceptor to the family of Count Pejachevich at Rétfalu in Slovenia. During the seven years (1835-42) of his employment there he instructed the children during the day and studied at night. He accompanied his employers at their yearly visit to Pozsony and Vienna, which provided him with opportunities to enlarge his musical experience. His earliest extant composition, a 'Grand Duo' for pianoforte duet, dedicated to 'his friend' Turányi, dates from this period (1837).

When Mosonyi took up residence in Pest in 1842 he had already finished three major works — a Mass, an Overture and a Symphony. The first of these was performed in 1847, the second in 1843 and the third in 1844. The favourable reception of the Symphony secured him the regards of the musical notabilities of the capital, and the merits of his Mass induced Liszt to request him to compose a gradual and offertory to his 'Messe solennelle' written for the dedication of Esztergom Cathedral. Mosonyi's contribution was not, however, performed at the solemnization in 1856. This was the first of a series of rebuffs he was to receive from musical officialdom, which contributed a great deal to his pessimistic disposition in his last years. He supported himself by teaching (the two sons of Erkel, Gyula and Sándor, further Kornél Ábrányi and Mihalovich were among his pupils) and by playing the double bass, which enabled him to participate in all the important musical events. Liszt remembered his virtuosity by allotting the principal theme in the "Agnus Dei" of his 'Messe solennelle' to the double bass.

Possibly because he was taken to task for his "cosmopolitanism" he ceased composing for about three years (1845-48) and his melancholy disposition was further aggravated by the death of his wife in 1851. He fell seriously ill, and, after a long period of convalescence, did not completely recover until 1854. Liszt showed his interest and friendship by promising to produce at Weimar Mosonyi's opera 'Kaiser Max . . .', finished in 1856; but certain alterations made in deference to Liszt's wishes were too long delayed, and the work was never performed. This may have been due, however, to Mosonyi's subsequent conversion to national music and his consequent loss of interest in his "cosmopolitan" works. This sudden and drastic change of style and intellectual attitude is unique in the history of music and cannot be accounted for by the awakening national consciousness in Hungary alone. The visit of the Empress Elizabeth in 1857 and the invitation to contribute to a memorial volume to be published on this occasion may have been the external cause; but it is more likely that the growing public indifference towards his German-inspired music persuaded him to abandon his earlier style. His change of name occurred in 1859. His first composition entirely in the national idiom was the pianoforte piece for the Erzsébet memorial album, entitled 'Pusztai képek'.

¹ Originally Michael Brand. Mosonyi means "of Moson", the "comitat" in which his birthplace is situated.

With the appearance of 'Zenészeti Lapok', the first Hungarian musical periodical, a favourite project of his was realized. For the next six years he contributed to almost every number of the journal, and his writings had an immense influence on musical opinion in Hungary. Apart from his essays and polemics in favour of new music in the national style he proved an ardent champion of Liszt and Wagner, the cause, possibly, of the growing coolness of Erkel and his followers and the subsequent official neglect of his music. The first five years of the 1860s were his most active and fertile period. His Kazinczy cantata, written for the centenary of the poet, was finished in 1860 but remained unperformed; the following year his 'Festival Music' was performed by the Philharmonic Society and his opera 'Szép Ilon' produced at the National Theatre. He took part in the twenty-fifth anniversary celebrations of the National Conservatory (1865) with a chorus for men's voices.

During subsequent years Mosonyi became more and more disillusioned. He withdrew from public musical life and ceased to contribute to 'Zenészeti Lapok'. Yet the choral pieces written at this time began to enjoy wide popularity. Shortly after his death the project of a Mosonyi Society was launched by the intendant of the National Theatre, Baron Felix Orczy, but after two years of considerable but fruitless publicity the plan was abandoned.

As a composer, an informative writer on the problems of national music and a critic of perception Mosonyi was one of the most important figures of the late 19th-century revival in Hungarian music. A clearly marked division in his style corresponds to his change of name. The music of his earlier "Brand" period is completely under the sway of German masters; the decisive change of style first appears in the last movement of his second Symphony, performed in 1856. He shared with his contemporaries a tendency to make verbunkos music the basis of a national idiom, but surpassed them in technical competence. His first opera of this period was the predominantly lyrical 'Szép Ilon', written "entirely in the Hungarian idiom to the exclusion of all foreign elements", as he himself stated. 'Álmos' is a heroic opera in the grand romantic manner, with ariosi, declamation, Leitmotive and a more pronounced musical continuity which show Mosonyi's endeavour to assimilate the national idiom to Wagnerian principles. Its main strength lies in the choral scenes. His most remarkable composition, regarded as a landmark in 19th-century Hungarian music, is the 'Funeral Music for Széchenyi'. Here he reconciled Hungary and Europe in an ingenious structural conception; a ground bass in the "Hungarian" mode — which Liszt borrowed for one of his Hungarian historical portraits — sustains the characteristic rhythms and decorated contours of a verbunkos melody. Among his compositions for pianoforte the 'Studies . . .' deserve mention; Wagner had a highly favourable opinion of them.

In the literary field Mosonyi's ideas, set forth in numerous essays and criticisms contributed to 'Zenészeti Lapok', were of paramount importance in connection with the development of the 19th-century national school. He is credited with the formulation of the "romantic" programme, an interesting product of the political compromise — a national style of music commensurate with European standards of expression. He voiced the necessity of centralizing the nation's musical life, an object he hoped to achieve by the establishment of a musical academy sponsored by the state; but he did not live to see this plan realized. Recent research has confirmed that he drafted most of his articles in German, as indeed had long been suspected, since his Hungarian was said to have been imperfect.

To list Mosonyi's writings would mean to index six volumes of 'Zenészeti Lapok'. Most of his musical manuscripts are preserved in the Music Department of the Hungarian National Museum; his 'Funeral Music . . .' is reprinted in Szabolcsi's 'A magyar zenetörténet kézikönyve' ('Handbook of Hungarian History of Music') and the orchestral introduction to the Kazinczy cantata in the supplement of the same author's 'A XIX. század magyar romantikus zenéje' ('The Hungarian Romantic Music of the Nineteenth Century').

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

OPERAS

- 'Kaiser Max auf der Martinswand', romantic opera in 3 acts (libretto by Ernst Pasque) (1856-57).
- 'Szép Ilon' ('Pretty Helen'), 5 acts (lib. by Mihály Fekete, after Vörösmarty) (1861), prod. Pest, National Theatre, 19 Dec. 1861.
- 'Álmos', 3 acts (lib. by Ede Szigligeti) (1862), prod. Budapest, Royal Hungarian Opera, 6 Dec. 1934.¹

CHURCH MUSIC

- Mass No. 1, C ma. (1840-42).
- Mass No. 3, F ma. (1849).

¹ MS in the Opera-House library.

- Mass No. 4 (1854), lost.
 Mass No. 5 (1866).
 'Jubilat Deo' (1843).
 Gradual and Offertory (1855).
 'Lauda Sion' (1855), lost.
 'Pater Noster' and 'Libera' (1870).

CANTATAS

- 'A tisztulás ünnepélye az Ung vizénél' ('Festival of Purification at the River Ung') for solo voices, chorus & orch. on Ferenc Kazinczy's poem (? 1859-1860).
 'Dalra magyar!' ('Sing, Hungarian!') (Emil Ábrányi), (1870).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Overture, B mi., Op. 15 (1841-42).
 Symphony No. 1, D ma. (? 1842-44).
 Symphony No. 2, A mi. (1856).
 'Gyász-zene' (also 'Gyász-hangok Széchenyi István halálára' - 'Funeral Music for the Death of István Széchenyi') (1860).
 'Ünnepi zene' ('Festival Music') (1860).
 'Magyar honvéd győzelme és keserve' ('Victory and Lament of the Hungarian "Honvéd"') (1860), lost.

CHAMBER MUSIC

- String Quartet No. 1, D ma.
 String Quartet No. 2, G mi. (1839-45).
 Sextet strgs. (1844).
 'Grand Nocturne pour le piano, violon et violoncelle', D ma. (? 1845).
 'Premier Trio pour le piano, violon et violoncelle', B♭ ma. (1845-51).
 String Quartet No. 3, A mi.
 String Quartet No. 4, F mi.
 String Quartet No. 5, C mi.
 String Quartet No. 6, B mi.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- 'Grand Duo à quatre mains' (1837).
 'Drei Klavierstücke' (1855).
 'Pusztai élet' ('Pusztai-Life'), D mi. (1856).
 'Magyar gyermekvilág . . .' ('Hungarian Children's World . . .'), 12 pieces (? 1859-60).
 'Hódolat Kazinczy emlékének' ('Homage to the Memory of Kazinczy') (? 1859-60).
 'Magyar zenekoltemény' ('Hungarian Musical Composition') (1860).
 'Tanulmányok zongorára, a magyar zene előadásának képzésére' ('Studies for Developing the Performance of Hungarian Music') (1861).
 Ten Hungarian Popular Songs arr. (Suppl. to 'Zenészeti Lapok') (1860-62).
 'Az égő szerelem három színe' ('The Three Colours of Burning Love') for pf. duet (1864).
 'Bandérium induló' ('Banderian March'), A ma. (1866).
 Also various arrangements, incl. Beethoven's ninth Symphony and Liszt's 'Messe solennelle' (1860) for pf. duet.

SONGS

- 'Du schönes Fischermädchen' (Lenau) (1853).
 'Sechs Lieder', Op. 5 (Lenau, Burns, Geibel) (? 1854).
 'Schilfflieder', Op. 6 (Lenau) (? 1854).
 'Zwei Perlen', Op. 3 (? 1856).
 'A szerelem, a szerelem . . .' ('Love, love . . .') (Sándor Petőfi) (1860).
 'Leteszem a lantot' ('I abandon the lute') (János Arany) (1863).
 'Hat magyar népdal' ('Six Hungarian Folksongs') (Kálmán Tóth) (1863).
 'Gara Mária', ballad (Tóth) (1864).
 'Mátyás anyja' ('Mátyás's Mother') ballad (Arany) (1864).
 'Kemény induló' ('Strong March') (Tóth) (1865).
 'Boldogság emléke' ('Souvenir of Happiness') (József Komócsy) (? 1870).

Also various choruses for men's voices.

J. S. W.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ÁBRÁNYI, KORNÉL, 'Mosonyi Mihály élet és jellemrajza' ('Life and Character of Mihály Mosonyi') (Pest, 1872).
 'Jellemképek a magyar zenevilágból' ('Character Portraits from Hungarian Musical Life') (Budapest, n.d.).

- BARTÓK, BÉLA, 'Three Unpublished Liszt Letters to Mosonyi' (M.Q., Vol. VII, Oct. 1921).
 FABÓ, BERTALAN, 'Mosonyi Mihályról' ('Of Mihály Mosonyi') ('Zenekozlony', Vol. XIII, 1).
 KÁLDOR, JÁNOS, 'Michael Mosonyi' (Dresden, 1936).
 SZABOLCSI, BENCE, 'A XIX. század magyar romantikus zenéje' ('Hungarian Romantic Music of the XIX. Century') (Budapest, 1951).

MOSS, John (b. ?; d. ?).

English 17th-century violist. He succeeded John Jenkins in the king's private music in 1678 and left in 1684. Seventeen dances are in 'Musicke's Recreation on the Viol' (1669) and in 1671 his 'Lessons for the Base-Viol' were published (copies at Florence and Rowe Library, Cambridge). Some keyboard pieces are in 'Musicke's Hand-Maide' (1663) and 'Melothesia' (1673).

R. T. D.

MOSSEL, Isaac (b. Rotterdam, 22 Apr. 1870; d. Amsterdam, 29 Dec. 1923).

Dutch violoncellist and teacher. After youthful appearances as soloist he was, when only 16 years old, solo cellist with the Berlin Philharmonic, and from 1888 to 1904 held a similar position in the Concertgebouw Orchestra at Amsterdam. After this he undertook a large number of tours all over the Continent. It is chiefly as a teacher that he is remembered, however, among his pupils being Hans Kindler, Max Orobio de Castro and other leading Dutch players.

H. A.

MOSSEL, Max (b. Rotterdam, 25 July 1871; d. The Hague, 5 May 1929).

Dutch violinist, brother of the preceding. He was originally a pupil at the Rotterdam School of Music and later of Willy Hess. At the age of 7 he made his first public appearance at Zalt-Bommel with his elder brother. For a short time he was leader of the Arnhem orchestra and of the Concertgebouw Orchestra, and later of the orchestra at Biarritz. He then transferred his activities to England. From 1894 until his death he taught at the Midland Institute School of Music, Birmingham, and in London at the Guildhall School of Music. He gave recitals all over Britain as well as in America, France, Germany, Holland, India, etc. He was also leader of a string quartet bearing his name. The Max Mossel Concerts, of which he was the promoter and organizer, in Birmingham, Glasgow and other places, won a great reputation on account of the high character of their programmes and the fame of the artists engaged.

Mossel was the bearer of the Order of Christopher Columbus and was Officier d'Académie.

H. A.

See also Birmingham.

MOSSOLOV, Alexander Vassilievich (b. Kiev, 10 Aug. 1900).

Russian pianist and composer. His father was a painter and singer. In 1904 his family moved to Moscow; in 1921, on completing his secondary education, he took a course in composition under Glière at the Moscow

Conservatory, graduating in 1925, having at the same time studied pianoforte playing under Sergey Prokofiev. While still at the Conservatory he wrote a symphonic poem, 'Twilight', five sonatas for pianoforte and a cycle of settings of poems by Nikolay Guimilev and Alexander Blok. His diploma work was a cantata, 'Sphinx', the text being a translation of Oscar Wilde's poem.

All these early compositions bear evidence of his modern tendencies, of his creative affinity to Prokofiev, Steinberg and Hindemith; their influence is also apparent in many of his later works — in three symphonies, two concertos for pianoforte, a string Quartet, and in particular in the symphonic episode 'The Iron Foundry' composed after leaving the Conservatory.

To Mossolov's creative work should be added his work as a virtuoso, since he frequently fulfilled concert engagements as a pianist. In 1927-28 he became the Acting (Responsible) Secretary of the Russian Section of the International Association of Contemporary Music, which was then joined by many representative Soviet composers. In subsequent years he travelled in Central Asia, devoting his time to the study of the folklore of Kirghizia, Turkmenia and Tadzhikistan. As a result of this research he produced several new compositions, among them 'Kirghiz Rhapsody', 'Turkmenian Overture' and a cycle, 'Turkmenian Nights', for pianoforte. These compositions mark a turning-point in Mossolov's style, which was further consolidated in the works of the following period: the harp Concerto and the fourth Symphony, which is dedicated to the memory of Lermontov on the 100th anniversary of his death. Since the outbreak of the second world war he has written a one-act opera 'The Signal', and a series of patriotic songs and choruses.

Other works by Mossolov not mentioned above are the following:

OPERAS

- 'The Dam' (1930).
- 'The Hero' (1938).
- 'The Signal' (1941-42).

CHORAL WORKS

- 'Kirghiz Rhapsody' for mezzo-soprano, chorus & orch. (1933).
- Mass songs and battle songs.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Symph. poem 'The Iron Foundry' (1928).
- Symphony No. 1, C ma. (1928).
- 'Turkmenian Suite' (1933).
- Symphony No. 2, B mi. (1934).
- 'Uzbek Dance' (1935).
- Symphony No. 3, C mi. (1937).
- Symphony No. 4 ('To Lermontov') (1940-41).

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

- Pf. Concerto No. 1, A mi. (1927).
- Pf. Concerto No. 2, C ma. (1932).
- Cello Concerto (1935).
- Harp Concerto (1936).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- String Quartet, A mi. (1926).
- Dance Suite for vn., cello & pf. (1928).

VIOLA AND PIANOFORTE

- Sonata (1928).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- 5 Sonatas.

SONGS

Songs to words by Pushkin, Lermontov and Blok.

S. C. R.

MOSTO, Giovanni Battista (b. Udine, ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-century composer. He was a pupil of Claudio Merulo at Venice and became maestro di cappella at Padua Cathedral in 1580, a post he retained until 1589. Afterwards he was in the service of the Prince-Cardinal Bathori in Transylvania, where he still was in 1595. He composed three books of madrigals for 5 voices and one for 6 voices. He also published two collective volumes of madrigals (1577 and 1579).

F. v. d. s.

MOSZKOWSKI, Moritz (b. Breslau, 23 Aug. 1854; d. Paris, 4 Mar. 1925).

German pianist and composer of Polish descent. He studied first at Dresden and afterwards in Berlin at the academies of Stern and Kullak successively. He settled in Berlin and was a pianoforte teacher at the latter institution for a good many years. But he also toured extensively as pianist. He appeared in London, at the Philharmonic concerts, in 1886, and was frequently heard in England later, both as pianist and conductor. As a composer he had much success with several works of a lighter kind, and having made a sufficient competence he went to live in retirement in Paris in 1897. The Berlin Academy elected him a member in 1899. He outlasted his fame and died in poor circumstances.

Moszkowski's favourite work, which made its way into innumerable drawing-rooms, were the Spanish Dances (two books) for pianoforte duet (also arranged for solo as their demand grew), which attracted by a superficial picturesqueness that was deemed, if not genuinely Spanish, at least sufficiently exotic. He afterwards tried to reproduce the music of other countries in another set of duets, 'Aus aller Herren Landen' (Op. 23), but he was still regarded chiefly as the interpreter of Spain. It was perhaps for this reason that he tried his hand at an opera on a Hispanic-Moorish subject, 'Boabdil, der letzte Maurenkönig', which was produced at the Berlin Court Opera on 21 Apr. 1892. But though given in Prague and New York (in English) the following year, it was not widely successful and soon disappeared from the stage. Its ballet music, however, which did on a larger scale much what the Spanish Dances had done earlier, long remained an acceptable entertainment at miscellaneous orchestral concerts. A three-act ballet, 'Laurin', followed in 1896.

Well written in its way and highly effective, Moszkowski's lighter music had a legitimate place in its time, though it is now almost wholly forgotten. The more serious works on a larger scale he attempted, although competently turned out, had little originality and vitality. The following compositions may be singled out, in addition to those already named, as having received some attention, though it was not lasting:

- Incidental music for Grabbe's 'Don Juan und Faust'.
Symphony 'Jeanne d'Arc', Op. 19.
Suites, Opp. 39 & 47, for orch.
'Phantastischer Zug' for orch.
Vn. Concerto, Op. 30.
Pf. Concerto, E ma.
2 'Concertstücke' for vn. & pf.
Scherzo for vn. & pf.
3 Pieces for cello & pf., Op. 29.
3 Concert Studies for pf., Op. 24.
'Barcarolle' for pf., Op. 27.

J. A. F.-M., adds.

MOTA, Viana da. See VIANA DA MOTA.

MOTET. I. FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE 15TH CENTURY.—Giving greater scope for artistic skill and technical ingenuity than did the somewhat more restricted style of the Conductus, the motet was the form of composition most frequently employed by polyphonic composers from the middle of the 13th century onwards. In all the collections of the more developed (as distinct from the semi-experimental) music of the 13th and 14th centuries the motet form predominates, and by the 15th century it had completely ousted the conductus. It was applied to every choral part of worship, and is of special interest because, with the exception of Faburden, it was the only one of the early forms taken over by the group of composers in the 15th century associated with the names of Dunstable and Dufay.

The earliest formal school would seem to be that usually associated with the names of Léonin and Pérotin, at Notre-Dame in Paris, from c. 1195 onwards. The exact relation of this centre to the many other places where motets were written in England, Scotland and elsewhere has not yet been fully investigated. Other important early collections are those of Montpellier¹, Bamberg² and Worcester.³ The Spanish manuscripts have been described by Pierre Aubry⁴ and Higiní Anglés.⁵

The structure of the motet can best be understood if we approach it in the way in which the medieval mind would approach it, from the point of view of the text. Polytextual as well as polyphonic, it was essentially the embroidering of a borrowed (not composed) theme of words-and-music with one, two or three other sets of words-and-music. That being the case, we are not surprised to learn that it is closely connected with that expansion of a liturgical text known as a Trope; and this is especially true of the English motets.

The foundation is the tenor. Reference to the articles on Organum and Clausula will show how themes from the Gregorian chant were used in early polyphony. At some point, probably in the second quarter of the 13th century—that climax of prolific and splendid achievement in art of all kinds—words came to be added to the upper part (duplum) of the clausula, and to the triplum as well, if one of the rare three-part clausulae was being thus treated. Here is the opening of one of these clausulae, with the text added:

MOTET

CLAUSULA

Non or-phanum to de-se-ram, sed ef-fe-ram

[Et gau - - - - -]

(From Anglés, 'El Còdex de Las Huelgas', III, 151.)

The second voice which sang these words now changes its name from duplum to motetus (lit. "the worded part"), from which the whole composition took its name of motet. Triplum becomes triplex (our treble); quadruplum, in the rare continental four-part motets, quadruplex, and in the more frequent English examples, quartus cantus. In pitch, triplex would usually correspond to the modern (male) alto, motetus to a tenor, tenor to a baritone. The range of the quadruplex would normally be the same as that of the triplex.

By the end of the 13th century the motet had come to be used for purposes outside the church. Not content with contrasting texts as well as melodies, the polyphonists now went through a short phase of varying languages as well, so that we find, e.g., motetus and tenor in Latin, triplex in Anglo-Norman or Norman-French. Furthermore, the subject of the text might undergo variation, so that instead of two closely related versifications of the same religious theme we find on occasion a sacred text accompanied in the upper voice by a love song. This strange procedure—which some writers have seized upon and supposed to be normal—was ephemeral, and its well-merited extinction was probably hastened by fulminations from offended church dignitaries.

But the musicians had a ready answer. Both in England and in France they not only transferred their appreciation of vernacular

¹ 'Polyphonies du XIII^e siècle', ed. Yvonne Rokseth, 4 vols. (Paris, 1935 onwards).

² 'Cent Motets du XIII^e siècle', ed. Pierre Aubry, 3 vols. (Paris, 1908).

³ 'Worcester Mediaeval Harmony', ed. Dom Anselm Hughes, 1 vol. (London, 1928).

⁴ 'Iter Hispanicum' (Paris, 1908).

⁵ 'El Còdex de Las Huelgas', 3 vols. (Barcelona, 1931).

idiom from motetus to tenor (the tenor being now normally an instrumental performance of the Gregorian theme, the language difficulty did not arise), but also used secular tenors. They began to draw indifferently either upon the well-worn motifs from Gregorian chant (Domino, manere, -latus and a number of others had come to be rather stereotyped favourites), or upon refrains from presumably well-known songs, or upon snatches of what may be dance music. Occasionally the secular words remained with the Latin upper part or parts, as for instance in the tune 'Trop est ky fol me bayle', which provides a good specimen of an Anglo-Norman song thus borrowed.

The motet, unlike the conductus, was not written in score, but in separate vocal parts. The normal English method was to place the triplex on the left-hand page of the opening, the motetus on the right and the tenor or pes at the foot of one or both pages. Continental practice varied. Occasionally, as in a Florence manuscript (probably from Notre-Dame of Paris) and at Worcester, triplex and motetus are found together in quasi-score, with the tenor following them below.

The subjoined example shows the measure of skill with which a Worcester composer of about 1325 explored the resources of his limited equipment of one common chord. The pes or tenor phrase, repeated twice in this extract, forms a basso ostinato throughout the piece:

Middle section from the motet 'Te Domine laudat — Te Dominum clamat'

Worcester Chapter Library, Add. 68

¹ Quoted in the article HOCKET.

During the 14th century, the period of the "Ars nova", motet composition fell more and more under the domination of isorhythm. The culmination of this technique is seen in the great motets by Guillaume de Machaut.

II. THE FIFTEENTH CENTURY.—This century ushers in a great change in the motet, best summed up in the word "freedom". The great gift of Dunstable, Dufay, Power and their followers was a certain elasticity of thought and the attainment of a musical effect beautiful in itself and unfettered by any excessive adherence to the course of a predetermined melody. In the tenor part the old idea of a borrowed canto fermo begins to give place to free composition; in the upper voices the need for a variant text to accompany the variant melody is no longer felt to be necessary. These old limitations, together with isorhythm, do not disappear all at once; they survive up to the middle of the century, but fade away steadily under the influx of new ideas. The form of the motet is still built up as a rule upon a slow-moving tenor, but the words are now frequently identical in all the voices, and the tenor moves faster in proportion to the upper parts than was formerly the case. Sometimes even the upper parts will also move slowly, in longs and breves, slightly reminiscent of the old conductus, as here:

Opening of 'Ave regina cœlorum'

LIONEL POWER. c. 1460

Ending of the same Motet

Or the tenor will abandon for a time, or completely, its steady course, and join in the contrapuntal flow on even terms, as here:

Opening of 'Sola Virgo'

Trent MS 90 c. 1465

while in the following example the distinctive character of the tenor voice is completely lost:

'Benedicta tu'

MS. Papyrusian 1226, Magd. Coll. Camb. c. 1460

Dunstable has at least one motet ('Salve regina') which is entirely free of any borrowed melody, and the same is true of Forest's 'Qualis est dilectus' in the Old Hall MS (II, 77). From about 1470 onwards the tenor may still be a canto fermo in long notes; but this, which perseveres for another hundred years, is the only "medievalism" left.

With Okeghem and Obrecht we reach a period when the normal 3-voice arrangement is expanded to a larger number of voices, though Dufay is sometimes credited with being the first to regard 4 as the ideal number. English composers in particular obviously looked upon 5 as the ideal right up to Elizabethan days. Obrecht left one motet for 6 voices, six for 5 voices, seven for 4 and seven for 3, while the large majority of his other extant works, including eighteen of his twenty complete masses, are written in 4 parts. Okeghem is the earliest producer of a multiple experiment, in 36 parts.¹

By the end of the 15th century the motet reached its final form of a short composition for voices intended primarily for unaccompanied singing, written in contrapuntal style upon a Latin text which is usually liturgical or quasi-liturgical in character.

A. H.

III. LATER PHASES.—The above definition marks the point at which the individual history of the motet as an art-form ceases, and to trace it further would be to epitomize the development of style in composition as applied to works included under that name. It must be remarked, however, that it was during the century 1500–1600 that the motet was of paramount importance in practical composition. It blossomed in the works of all the great polyphonic composers of the period, and the volumes of Palestrina's works containing not far from 200 motets are regarded as the purest examples of a great epoch. Among polyphonic composers of all schools and nations the term 'Cantiones sacrae' became the prevalent description for collections of motets intended for singing in the prescribed place at Mass or elsewhere in the offices of the church. What has been said under Mass about the reaction of secular music on church music applies with equal force to the motet, and to recapitulate names and schools here would be superfluous. But the Mass remained at any rate the musical setting of a given text with an unbroken ritual significance. The motet with its freedom of text, and the latitude allowed to its use in the ecclesiastical offices, so far lost its identity that by the beginning of the 17th century even the broad definition given above ceases to be applicable to all the works called by its name.

¹ Ambros, 'Geschichte der Musik', III, 174.

For the purposes of classification of English church music we normally take the distinction of language as the dividing line, using "motet" for the 'Cantiones sacrae' or Tallis, Byrd and Deering, and indeed of all kindred works set to a Latin text, and "anthem" for all those written for the English liturgy. Nevertheless Orlando Gibbons's 'First set of Madrigals and Motets of Five Parts' (published 1612) are all in English, and none is definitely ecclesiastical in text or character. From this time dates the common English habit, which has survived to the 20th century, of using motet to imply merely a choral work of more serious import both in its words and its musical structure than the madrigal or partsong.¹ On the other hand, that part of the definition which confines the term to voices unaccompanied vanished when all church music became normally accompanied either by organ or orchestra, and the accompanied motet ranges through three centuries of composition.² Lutheran Germany was long thought to have maintained the distinction, but even Bach's motets are now thought to have been accompanied by some sort of continuo. 'Jesu meine Freude' is in the strictest form of the choral cantata, and an examination of the six famous examples shows that except for their purely vocal character, they exhibit no common principle of structure.

H. C. G.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BESSLER, HEINRICH, 'Die Motette von Franko von Köln bis Philipp von Vitry' (A.M.W., 1927, p. 137).
 'Studien zur Musik des Mittelalters', I & II (A.M.W., VII & VIII).
 BUKOFZER, MANFRED, 'The First Motet with English Words' (M. & L., XVII, 1936, p. 225).
 HUGHES, DOM ANSELM, 'Worcester Mediaeval Harmony of the 13th and 14th Centuries' (London, 1928).
 KUHLMANN, GEORG, 'Die zweistimmigen französischen Motetten des Kodex Montpellier' (Faculté de Médecine H. 196) (Würzburg, 1938).
 LEICHTENTRITT, HUGO, 'Geschichte der Motette' (Leipzig, 1908).

¹ Witness Parry's 'Six Motets; Songs of Farewell'.

² The term has even been used in modern times for purely instrumental music, e.g. 'Motet for String Quartet' by R. O. Morris.

LOWINSKY, EDWARD E., 'Secret Chromatic Art in the Netherlands Motet'. Trans. by Carl Buchmann ('Columbia University Studies in Musicology') (New York & Oxford, 1946).

LUDWIG, FRIEDRICH, 'Die Quellen der Motetten ältesten Stils' (A.M.W., 1923, p. 185).

OREL, ALFRED, 'Enige Grundformen der Motettenkomposition' (S.M.W., VII).

STEPHAN, WOLFGANG, 'Die burgundisch-niederländische Motette zur Zeit Ockegheims' (Cassel, 1937).

TISCHLER, HANS, 'English Traits in the Early 13th-Century Motet' (M.Q., XXX, 1944, p. 458).

The Introductions to the various collections named in the footnotes also contain information of great value.

See also Arts antiqua. Arts nova. Clausula. Conductus. Faburden. Isorhythm. Organum. Trope.

MOTETT SOCIETY, THE. An association established in London in 1841, its chief promoter being William Dyce, R.A. The object was to print 'A Collection of Ancient Church Music', adapted to English words, with a compressed score for the purpose of accompaniment. The subscription was a guinea a year. The musical portion was under the charge of Edward Rimbault, who acknowledges in his preface that "the greater part of the motets of Palestrina were adapted by William Dyce".

The works were published in large folio, and in parts, forming three divisions: No. 1, Anthems for Festivals; No. 2, Services; No. 3, Miscellaneous Anthems; in all 192 pages of music, and a few more of introductory matter.

W. C.

MOTEZUMA (Opera). See MYSLIVEČEK. ZINGARELLI.

MOTIF (Fr.; Ger. Motiv). A word which has become naturalized into English and has no less than three distinct meanings, according to which it will be found under separate heads: first, the French word originally means what in English is called "figure", that is, a short group of notes "which produces a single, complete, and distinct impression"; second, it is used as a synonym for "subject"; third, it is equivalent to and an abbreviation of the German Leitmotiv.

J. A. F.-M.

MOTION. Change of pitch in successive sounds, when they are allotted to a single part or voice, or to groups of parts or voices which sound simultaneously. The motions of a single part are classified according as the successive steps do or do not exceed the limits of a degree of the scale at a time, the former being called "disjunct" and the latter "conjunct" motion. The following examples illustrate the two forms:

The independent motions of different parts sounding together constitute counterpoint and are classified according to their relations as

"contrary", "similar" and "oblique" motions. In the first the parts either distinctly converge or diverge, one rising when the other falls. In the second the parts either rise or fall together, though not necessarily at equal distances. The third refers to one part only, which moves up or down while another stands still.

Further explanations and examples will be found under the respective headings.

C. H. H. P.

MOTO (It.). Motion, pace.

MOTO PERPETUO (It., perpetual motion). A piece in which a rapid figuration is persistently maintained. The Latin perpetuum mobile is also used.

MOTTA, Vianna da. See VIANA DA MOTA.

Motteux, Peter Anthony. See Akeroyde ('Love's a Jest', incid. m.). Benjamin (song). Bononcini (2, lib.). Clarke (J., songs for 3 plays). Clayton ('Arsinoë', lib. trans.). Dieupart ('Britain's Happiness', incid. m.; 'Love's Triumph', opera). Eccles (2, 4 stage pieces). Finger ('Loves of Mars and Venus', masque). Franck (W., songs publ. by M.; song for 'Loves of M. & V.'). King (R., Ode for Earl of Exeter). Leveridge (incid. m. for 3 plays). Love's Triumph (2, lib.). Purcell (4, 3 songs). Purcell (5, 'Island Princess' & 'Younger Brother', incid. m.). Thomyris (pasticcio, lib.). Weldon (J., songs for 'Britain's Happiness').

MOTTL, Felix (b. Unter-St.-Veit nr. Vienna, 24 Aug. 1856; d. Munich, 2 July 1911).

Austrian conductor and composer. As a boy he possessed a fine soprano voice and obtained admission to the Löwenburg Seminary, the preparatory school of the imperial court chapel in Vienna. Later on he entered the Vienna Conservatory, where Josef Hellmesberger soon recognized the eminent gifts of the youth, who in due course obtained all the prizes the institution could award. The Academical Richard Wagner Society of Vienna elected him to the post of conductor, and it was there that his eminent ability attracted general notice.

In 1876 Mottl took part in the Bayreuth festival performances of Wagner's 'Ring' as stage conductor, and he became one of the most active members of the so-called "Nibelungen-Kanzlei". At the recommendation of Dessoff he obtained in 1881 the post of conductor at the grand-ducal opera-house at Karlsruhe, which post he held until 1903. His energetic activity raised the performances at this opera-house to a place among the finest in Germany. A sworn enemy of all routine work, he produced at Karlsruhe many important stage works of modern times, including all the operas by Berlioz and all the music-dramas of Wagner.

Mottl also obtained brilliant successes as a conductor of concerts; he was director of the Philharmonic Society of Karlsruhe until 1892, and was in 1886 appointed by the Bayreuth authorities to conduct the festival performances of 'Tristan und Isolde', a task which he accomplished to perfection. He conducted a Wagner concert in the London Queen's Hall on 17 Apr. 1894 and appeared subsequently at many series of similar concerts in England. In June 1898 he conducted the 'Ring' at Covent Garden. In 1904 he was made a director of the Berlin Royal Academy of Music. He went to New York to conduct the performances of 'Parsifal' given there in 1903-4, and in 1907 he became director of the Opera at Munich.

Mottl composed three operas: 'Agnes Bernauer' (after Hebbel, produced at Weimar in 1880), 'Rama' and 'Fürst und Sänger'; a Festspiel, 'Eberstein' (produced at Karlsruhe in 1881); a string Quartet; a song cycle, 'Pan im Busch', besides a considerable number of songs for voice and pianoforte. He edited various works by Berlioz and Cornelius's 'Barbier von Bagdad'. He also orchestrated Liszt's pianoforte solo 'St. Francis of Assisi preaching to the Birds', Wagner's 'Five Songs', Chabrier's 'Bourrée fantasque', and he edited several works by Bach and other classics.

C. A., adds.

See also Chabrier (arrs. for orch.). Chausson (projected opera prod.).

MOTTO. A short phrase or theme serving as dominating figure of a composition, usually appearing at the opening and used again at appropriate moments in the course of a movement (e.g. the "Lebewohl" phrase in Beethoven's pianoforte Sonata Op. 81a) or in several or all of the movements of an extended work (e.g. Tchaikovsky's fourth and fifth Symphonies). It may reappear note for note in its original form or altered in various ways (e.g. the idée fixe in Berlioz's 'Symphonie fantastique').

E. B.

MOULAERT, Raymond (b. Brussels, 4 Feb. 1875).

Belgian composer and teacher. He studied at the Brussels Conservatoire and from 1898 to 1912 was attached to the Théâtre de la Monnaie there as pianist and coach. He taught at the Brussels Conservatoire for forty-three years, first as a student-teacher and later successively as professor of sight-reading, of harmony and of counterpoint. He taught Queen Elisabeth of the Belgians and was director of the Saint-Gilles school of music in 1913-38.

Moulaert's chief works include the opera 'Meisotternije'; the ballet 'Sirine'; 'Passacaille-Suite', 'Symphonie de valse' and 'Symphonies de fugues' for orch.; 4 fanfares; pf. Concerto; Sextet for wind & pf., Divertimento for stg. trio; Sonata for cello & pf.; Sonata & var. pieces for organ; song cycles 'Poèmes de la vieille France', 'Quatre Poèmes chinois', 'Le Jardin de ma tante', &c.

E. B.

MOULE-EVANS, David (b. Ashford, Kent, 21 Nov. 1905).

English composer. He studied conducting and composing at the R.C.M. in London under Malcolm Sargent and Herbert Howells, winning the Mendelssohn Scholarship in 1928 and obtaining the D.Mus. at Oxford in 1930. His Concerto for string orchestra won the Carnegie Publication Award in 1928, and several other of his works have had some public success, notably the concert overture 'The Spirit of London' and his Divertimento for string orchestra, which has been played at Zurich by Hermann Scherchen. His poem for orchestra 'September Dusk' was given at a London Promenade Concert in 1945. In that year he was appointed to the teaching-staff of the R.C.M. His Symphony (1950) won the Australian Jubilee Competition in 1952. His other works include 'Cliff Castle' and 'Vienna Rhapsody' for orchestra; instrumental pieces; songs and partsongs.

C. M. (iii).

Moult, Thomas. See Rootham (C., 'Brown Earth', choral work).

MOULTON, Dorothy (Lady Mayer) (b. London, 24 Aug. 1886).

English soprano singer and musical organizer. She studied in Germany and also with Raimund von Zur Mühlen and William Shakespeare in London. She made her first appearance as a concert singer in 1916 and had one season with the Carl Rosa Opera Company. After the 1914-18 war she was the first to give a recital of German songs in London, on Armistice Day, 11 Nov. 1918. In 1922 she appeared at the inaugural Festival of the I.S.C.M. at Salzburg. One of her specialities was the introduction of many important modern works to English audiences, including Schoenberg's second string Quartet (with soprano solo), in which she also performed in the U.S.A., at the Pittsfield Festival of 1923. A number of modern English works were sung by her abroad for the first time. With her husband, Sir Robert Mayer, she established the Children's Concerts, which in 1922 started a movement now spread over the whole of Great Britain and have continued ever since. She is also the founder and president of various musical societies and non-competitive festivals, and co-editor with her husband of 'Crescendo'.

E. B.

See also Children's Concerts.

MOULU, Pierre (b. ?; d. ?).

French or Flemish 16th-century composer. He was a pupil of Josquin des Prés. He wrote masses, motets and other church music. His Mass on a popular song, 'A deux visages et plus' (not "villages", as in Coussemaker and Q.-L.) appears to have been a great favourite. It appeared generally as 'Missa duarum facierum' or 'Missa sans pause', as it was without a rest, one of the many tricks of the old contrapuntists. Several of Moulou's works were published by Jacques Moderne (1532, 1540).

E. v. d. s.

MOUNSEY, Ann (Sheppard) (b. London, 17 Apr. 1811; d. London, 24 June 1891).

English organist, teacher and composer. She studied under Logier. She is alluded to by Spohr in his account of his visit to Logier's academy in 1820.¹ In 1828 she was elected organist to a church at Clapton, in 1829 to St. Michael's, Wood Street, E.C., and on 22 Nov. 1837 to St. Vedast's, Foster Lane. In 1834 she became an associate of the Philharmonic Society. In 1843 she gave the first of six series of Classical Concerts, at Crosby Hall, London, for one of which Mendelssohn² composed 'Hear my Prayer' for voice and organ, first performed on 8 Jan. 1845. On 28 Apr. 1853 she married W. Bartholomew and in the same year composed the oratorio 'The Nativity', which was performed on 17 Jan. 1855, under the direction of John Hullah at St. Martin's Hall. Mrs. Bartholomew was well known in London as a teacher; she published upwards of 100 songs, 40 partsongs and a large number of works for pianoforte and for organ.

G.

MOUNSEY, Elizabeth (b. London, 8 Oct. 1819; d. London, 3 Oct. 1905).

English organist and composer, sister of the preceding. She developed considerable musical ability at a very early age. She was appointed organist of the London church of St. Peter's, Cornhill, in 1834, when only fourteen years old, a post she did not resign till 1882. The organ of St. Peter's, a fine instrument by Hill, was one of those on which Mendelssohn frequently played during his visits to London. In 1842 Elizabeth Mounsey was elected an associate of the Philharmonic Society. Besides the organ and the pianoforte she at one time devoted much study to the guitar, and in 1833 and 1834 she appeared in public as a performer thereon. She published several works for all three instruments. She lived in the same house, 58 Brunswick Place, City Road, for eighty-three years.

G.

BIBL.—Mus. T., 1905, p. 718.

MOUNT-EDGCUMBE (Richard Edgcumbe), Earl of (b. Plymouth, 13 Sept. 1764; d. Richmond, Surrey, 26 Sept. 1839).

English amateur musician. His Italian opera 'Zenobia' was performed at the King's Theatre, London, in 1800 for the benefit of Brigitta Banti. He is best known as author of 'Musical Reminiscences, containing an Account of the Italian Opera in England from 1773' (London, 1825), an amusing, gossiping book containing much useful information. Two other editions, with a continuation, appeared, and in 1834 a fourth, including an account of the musical festival in Westminster Abbey in that year. W. H. H.

¹ Autobiography, II, 99, 100.

² See his letter, in Polko's Reminiscences, p. 220. The autograph is now in the Victoria and Albert Museum, London.

Mount, George. See British Orchestral Society.

MOUNT OF OLIVES. The English name of Beethoven's oratorio 'Christus am Ölberge'. It was first produced in England on 25 Feb. 1814, by Sir George Smart, at the Lenten Oratorios at Drury Lane Theatre in London. The English version was probably made by Arnold, at that time manager of the King's Theatre and a prominent person in all theatrical matters. Another version was made by Thomas Oliphant and a third by Bartholomew. The strong feeling prevailing in 19th-century England against the appearance of Christ as a personage in the oratorio, which led to modifications in the versions already mentioned, at last resulted in one by Dr. Hudson of Dublin in 1842, in which the story was changed to that of David and the title to 'Engedi'. On this Bernard Shaw made the following comment¹:

Beethoven composed an oratorio called 'The Mount of Olives'; and immediately the question arose whether the Handelian privilege extended to the New Testament. After about thirty years' consideration we made up our minds the wrong way and turned 'The Mount of Olives' into 'Engedi', with David for the principal figure. Thirty years more, and the original work was performed at the Leeds Festival, with such complete immunity that it was evident that the Engedification had been an act of gratuitous folly.

The compromise, however, was adopted as late as 1905, at the Bristol Festival.

G., adds.

There was a considerable demand for short sacred cantatas, or oratorios, and Viennese composers maintained the supply. Beethoven persuaded a prominent man of letters, Franz Xaver Huber, to provide a text (in which the composer collaborated) and wrote the music in the summer of 1801. The first performance was at the Theater an der Wien on 5 Apr. 1808 (with the first two Symphonies and the third piano Concerto). The work was much to the taste of the Viennese public and contributed greatly to Beethoven's reputation. Under the title of 'Mount of Olives' it was introduced to England by Sir George Smart, who performed it at Drury Lane Theatre on 25 Feb. 1814. In the English text all the characters were made to speak in the third person, since it was not permissible for Christ and the Apostles to speak in their own persons on a stage. W. M.

MOUNTAIN, Henry (b. ? Dublin, ?; d. Dublin, 15 Nov. 1794).

Irish violinist, music-seller and publisher. He was established in the Irish capital towards the end of the 18th century. In 1751 he was one of the Rotunda band at Dublin, and in 1765-85 he was leader of the Dublin City Music. From before 1785 he was at 20 Whitefriar Street, but about 1790 removed to 44 Grafton Street. He published a large number of engraved single songs from the popular operas of the day, and besides, about 1785, issued a small book, 'The Gentleman's Catch Book', which he edited and dedicated to the Hibernian Catch Club. F. K.

MOUNTAIN, Joseph (b. Dublin, ?; d. ? London, ?).

Irish violinist, son of the preceding. He settled at Liverpool, where he became leader at the concert-hall and the theatre. It was there, in 1787, that he married the singer Sarah Wilkinson, with whom he went to London, where he became leader at Covent Garden. In 1820 he was leader at the English Opera House. He was still alive in 1837.

F. K., adds.

MOUNTAIN, Sarah (born Wilkinson) (b. ?, c. 1768; d. London, 3 July 1841).

English soprano singer, wife of the preceding, also known as Rosoman and sometimes as Sophia. Theatrical writers speak of her as "Rose", and it is said that she was named "Rosoman" after the proprietor of Sadler's Wells, where her parents were engaged as circus performers. She was handed over at an early age to Charles Dibdin, who taught her singing at his "seminary" at the Royal Circus, and appeared both at the Royal Circus and at the Haymarket Theatre in her teens, as "little Miss Wilkinson". She travelled with her parents, and in 1784 called upon Tate Wilkinson at Hull, who (after an initial refusal) engaged her as Patty in Arnold's 'The Maid of the Mill'. This led to a regular engagement in the northern theatres, and she became well-known at York, Leeds, Doncaster and Liverpool as a charming young singer, most at home in parts of a genteel and artless character. In 1786 she made her début at Covent Garden as Fidelia in 'The Foundling' and Leonora in 'The Padlock'. In 1787 she married the violinist Joseph Mountain. They had one son. She remained at Covent Garden until 1798 and sang such parts as Louisa in 'The Duenna' and the Pastoral Nymph in 'Comus' with success, but never reached the front rank, possibly through the fault of the management. She also sang at the Oxford concerts and was a great favourite at Vauxhall. In 1798 she left Covent Garden, owing to some disagreement with the management, and was absent from the London stage for two years. She toured Ireland and the provinces, accompanied on the pianoforte by her husband's pupil Panormo, and had lessons with Rauzzini at Bath. These were probably the cause of the remarkable change and improvement noticed when she reappeared in London in 1800. After a short summer engagement at the Haymarket, she sang Polly in 'The Beggar's Opera' at Drury Lane and remained there until her retirement in 1815. She also sang at the Antient Musick Concerts, and in 1802 toured with a monologue entertainment called 'The Lyric Novelist'.

¹ 'Our Theatres in the Nineties', II, 25, article on 'Church and Stage'.

M. S. (ii).

BIBL.—D.N.B.

KELLY, MICHAEL, 'Reminiscences' (London, 1826).

ROBSON, William, 'The Old Playgoer' (London, 1846).

WILKINSON, TAIE, 'The Wandering Patentee' (London, 1795).

MOUNTAIN SYLPH, THE (Opera). See BARNETT (J.).

MOUNTEBANKS, THE (Operetta). See CELLIER.

Mountford, William. See Draghi (G. B., 'Injured Lovers', songs). Purcell (4, 'Henry II', incid. m.).

MOUNTIER, ? (b. ?; d. ?).

English 18th-century tenor singer. He was educated musically in the choir of Chichester Cathedral and called by Burney "the Chichester boy". He made his first appearance "in Character on any stage" as Acis, to the Galatea of Susanna Maria Arne (afterwards Mrs. Cibber), on 17 May 1732, at the Haymarket Theatre in London—the performance got up by the elder Arne. Mountier sang in the same year the part of Neptune (though advertised for that of Phoebe, which was afterwards given to Barret) in Lediard's 'Britannia, an English Opera', with music by Lampe, "after the Italian manner", a work not mentioned by the biographers of that composer. It may be, therefore, interesting to record that the cast included Cecilia Young (Britannia), afterwards Mrs. Arne, Susanna Mason (Publick Virtue), Comano, or Commano (Discord), a bass who had sung the year before on the Italian stage, Waltz (Honour) and other performers. In the following year we find Mountier singing the part of Adelberto in Handel's 'Ottone' (revived), after which his name does not again appear in the bills.

J. M.

MOURET, Jean Joseph (b. Avignon, 16 Apr. 1682; d. Charenton, 22 Dec. 1738).

French composer. He was in the service of the Duchess of Maine in Paris from about 1707 and composed his first ballets in 1714. His opera-ballet 'Les Fêtes de Thalie' was produced at the Paris Opéra on 19 Aug. 1714 and another, 'Le Mariage de Ragonde et de Colin' at the duchess's palace at Sceaux in Dec. of the same year. The former consisted of three one-act operas ('La Folie', 'La Femme' and 'La Veuve') and an epilogue, the latter of three intermèdes.¹ An opera, 'Ariane', in five acts and a prologue, was produced on 6 Apr. 1717. 'Les Amours des dieux', an opera-ballet in four scenes and a prologue, came out at the Opéra on 14 Nov. 1727 and 'Les Triomphes des sens' in 1732.

¹ For full details, including parodies and revivals, see Loewenberg, 'Annals of Opera', p. 67.

Mouret was appointed musical director of the Concert Spirituel in 1728 and held the post till the concerts were taken over by the Académie Royale in 1734. For this institution he wrote a book of motets, published in 1742. He also composed 'Divertissements' (published in 6 books) for the Comédie-Italienne, of which he was for some time the conductor. His instrumental works, published before 1739, consist of no less than 47 'Divertissements', 'Fanfares pour des trompettes, timbales, violons et hautbois . . .'; 'Symphonies pour des violons, des hautbois et des cors de chasse . . .'; 'Concert de chambre à deux et à trois parties pour les violons, flûtes, et hautbois' (2 books); 2 'Suites de symphonies', 2 'Concerts de chambre', cantatas, 'Cantatilles', 2 books of motets and a Mass.

M. L. P.

BIBL.—VIOILLIER, RENÉE, Articles in 'Bulletin de la Société Suisse de Musicologie', 1934; 'Revue de Musicologie', May 1935, Nov. 1936; Rev. Mus., July-Aug. 1938.

See also Duni (E. R., 2 parodies). Gossec (add. airs for 'Amours des dieux'). Vaudeville.

"MOURNING" SYMPHONY (Haydn). See TRAUER-SINFONIE.

MOURNING WALTZ. See TRAUER-WALZER.

MOUSQUETAIRES DE LA REINE, LES (Opera). See HALÉVY.

MOUSSORGSKY. See MUSSORGSKY.

MOUTH ORGAN (or Mouth Harmonica). A small and simple "free reed" instrument invented about 1829 by the London firm of Wheatstone and called Aeolina by them. It consisted of a few free reeds, which were fixed into a metal plate and blown by the mouth. As each reed was furnished with a separate aperture for supplying the wind, a simple melody could be played by moving the instrument backwards and forwards before the mouth. There was a double row of reeds, which had the advantage that tunes could be played in thirds, but the much greater disadvantage that thirds occurred, unless the player was fairly skilled, where they were not wanted. The same reed played two different (adjacent) notes when the breath was blown out or drawn in respectively.

The value of the instrument for artistic purposes amounted to nothing; its only interest is a historical one, as being one of the earliest attempts to make practical use of the discovery of the free reed. But even this is a questionable blessing, for the mouth organ must be regarded as the first germ of the accordion and concertina, instruments which produce quite the most unpleasant musical sound ever devised by the inventor's and the instrument maker's ingenuity, so far as we can tell from instruments still in use.

E. P., adds.

See also Accordion.

MOUTHPIECE (Fr. bec, bocal, embouchure; Ger. Mundstück). The portion of a wind instrument which is inserted into the player's mouth or applied to his lips. Of the French words, bec (beak) is applied to the first variety and embouchure to the second or the mouthpieces of brass instruments. As an anglicized word the name embouchure is also applied to the mouth-hole in the head-joint of the transverse flute, which is never spoken of as the mouthpiece, although for purposes of comparison it is convenient to refer to it under this heading. (For bocal see CROOK.) Including, therefore, the orifice for sound-production in the transverse flute, mouthpieces may be classed in four groups:

(1) The open end of a tube, across which a stream of air is blown, as when a note is produced from a Pandean pipe or from a common key. This is the simplest of all forms and possibly the most ancient; it is the form adopted in the Nay or Egyptian flute (see FLUTE). In the ordinary modern or transverse flute the open end across which the stream of air is directed is obtained by means of a lateral orifice.

(2) A tubular conduit inserted between the lips by which air is conveyed under pressure to a whistle, as in the flageolet; or to enclosed reeds, either directly as in the cromorne or indirectly through a wind-bag as in the bag-pipe. The beaked mouthpiece of the recorder is merely a modified form of this tubular conduit, but by its name marks the distinction between the flûte-à-bec and the transverse flute.

(3) A beak-shaped chamber forming the upper end of single-reed instruments of the clarinet and saxophone types. One side is flattened to form a bed or table for the reed, and communication is opened with the general tube of the instrument by a slot cut in this table.

This variety of mouthpiece can be applied, although rather ineffectively, to the bassoon and its diminutives. The dolcino or small bassoon in the B \flat of the four-foot octave was actually played in military bands by means of a single reed as late as the early years of the nineteenth century, and even since then attempts have been made to revive this means of producing tone on the bassoon.

(4) Cupped mouthpieces, which are applied to the outer surface of the lips, not inserted between them. The lips thus stretched across the calibre of the cup form a kind of double reed, closely resembling the vocal cords of the larynx. Each instrument of this class has a somewhat different form of cup, which is described under their respective headings. In the older examples, however, and in those used by uncivilized tribes, the cup consists of a simple hole, at the end of a cow's horn for instance, or in the side of an ivory tusk, communicating with the medullary cavity. The transition from this to the shaped cup can be well seen in the Swiss alphorn, in which a small globular cavity, like the mouthpiece of the trumpet, is rudely carved out of the wooden strips of which the long tube is built up. In more finished instruments of this class the mouthpiece is turned out of brass, ivory, aluminium or silver, with a rounded cushion-shaped edge for the accurate and painless pressure of the lips. Glass has also been used, and of late the cushion has been made of vulcanized indiarubber.

In all the mouthpieces comprised in the third and fourth groups the exact dimensions and proportions exercise a great effect upon the tone-quality. In those of the clarinet type the ruling factor is the exact degree of opening between the reed and the bed of the mouthpiece; this is technically called the "spring" or "lay". In the cupped mouthpieces of brass instruments the variations are even greater and of more importance, for in addition to the general size suitable to the range of compass of each class, the exact form of the cup and rim and the diameter of the bore of each mouthpiece have a marked effect.

The cups of the mouthpieces of cornets, bugles and saxhorns are intermediate in character between those of the horn and trumpet.

Double-reeds, as used on the oboe and bassoon are mouthpieces only in the literal sense that they are placed in the mouth; they are described under REED.

W. H. S., adds. D. J. B.

MOUTON, Charles (b. ?, 1626; d. ?).

French lutenist. He was a pupil of Gaultier and lived at Turin between 1670 and 1700. He visited Paris in 1675 and 1678, and lived there entirely from 1700 to 1720. Of his numerous and once popular compositions little is left. One book of 'Pièces de luth sur différents modes' (publ. 27 Feb. 1699) was or is in private hands at Stockholm. Many MS pieces are in collective volumes. His portrait was engraved by Edelinck from a painting by de Troy.

E. v. d. s.

MOUTON, Jean (b. Dept. of Somme¹, c. 1475²; d. Saint-Quentin, 30 Oct. 1522).

French composer. He was a pupil of Josquin, teacher of Willaert, musician to Louis XII and Francis I of France, canon of Théroutanne³ and afterwards, like Josquin des Prés, canon of the Collegiate Church of Saint-Quentin, in which place he died and was buried, the following words being inscribed on his tomb⁴:

Ce gist maistre Jean de Hollingue dit Mouton, en son vivant chantre du Roy, chanoine de Therouanne et de cet eglise, qui trepassa le penultieme jour d'Octobre MDXXII. Priez Dieu pour son âme.

When Petrucci began to print music, Mouton was in his prime, and the edition of five masses (a 4), which Fétis assigned to the year 1508, is an early example of a whole book devoted to one composer. This book, which Glarean⁵ found "in manibus omnium", is now scarce, and Fétis thinks the copy of the second edition⁶ in the British Museum the only complete one. Burney carefully examined the fourth Mass⁷ and scored several movements, discovering no variety of measure or subject, no melody, no ingenuity of contrivance, no learning of modulation. Yet the masses were highly valued in their day, reprinted by other publishers⁸ and much admired, according to Glarean and Le Roy⁹, by Pope Leo X, Giovanni de' Medici.¹⁰ As for motets, Mouton saw twenty-one printed in the best collection of his time, Petrucci's 'Motetti de la Corona'.¹¹ Posthumous publications continued for nearly forty years, and the list of known printed works includes nine masses¹², about seventy-five motets and psalms and a few French chansons. (See Q.-L.)

The British Museum has a single voice-part (superius) of Mouton's twenty-two motets printed by Le Roy in 1555, and happily a complete MS score of the same collection. This gives many interesting pieces: the 'Nesciens Mater' (a 8) with four of the parts derived canonically from the others; the 'Quis dabit oculis' composed in 1514 on the death of Anne de Bretagne, Queen of France; some Easter pieces, 'Alleluia', and 'In illo tempore', and one for Christmas, 'Noe, noe, psallite', on which Arcadelt afterwards wrote a mass.

Burney scored, besides the mass movements, three motets¹³, and in this style of composition finds Mouton more smooth and polished than his contemporaries. "Life in a court" can scarcely account for it. Most great musicians of the time had the same surroundings. Glarean, more reasonably, attributes to zeal and industry the rare faculty which separated Mouton from his fellows. The numerous examples drawn from his works for the 'Dodecachordon', and the evident pride with which Glarean¹⁴ recalls the meeting in Paris, are evidence of the high value set upon the French composer. Had Mouton left no compositions of his own, he would still be remembered as belonging to a remarkable line of great teachers—Okpeghem, Josquin, Mouton, Willaert, Zarlino.

J. R. S.-B.

BIBL. — BRUNELT, MICHEL, 'Jean Mouton' (Paris) (with a full list of works).

DROZ, E. & THIBARET, G., 'Bibliographie des recueils de chansons du XV^e siècle' (Paris, 1926).

'Tribune de Saint-Gervais' (Dec. 1899).

EINSTEIN, ALFRED, 'The Italian Madrigal' (Princeton & Oxford, 1940), passim.

See also Paix (parody mass on motet).

MOVEMENT. A term most customarily applied to instrumental works of the cyclic order, suite, sonata, symphony, etc. It denotes any portion of such a work sufficiently complete in itself to be regarded as a distinct entity; for example, first allegro, adagio, scherzo or finale. In modern music of the kind a movement is rarely so entirely independent as to be detachable from its associated movements, save in the case of the suite.

H. C. C.

¹¹ Eight in Book I (1514); ten in Book II (1519); three in Book III (1519).

¹² Besides the six mentioned in notes above, the 'Missa d'Allemagne', 'Tua est potentia' and 'Quem dicunt' were printed. Fétis mentions a MS 'Missae sans cadence' at Cambrai. Zarlino speaks of a Mass 'Benedicam Dominum', a 6 ('Istitutioni harm.', pt. iv, p. 414).

¹³ 'Quis dabit oculis', 'Non nobis Domine', composed in 1509 at the birth of Renée, daughter of Louis XII. Also 'Quam pulcra es', which Burney likes so much that he gives the first movement in his 'History'. This motet had in its own time been ascribed to Josquin.

¹⁴ Speaking of it continually in the 'Dodecachordon'. See pp. 296, 320, 464. They conversed by means of an interpreter.

¹ See 'Joannis Mouton Sameracensis . . . aliquot moduli' (Paris, Le Roy & Ballard, 1555; B.M.A. 132) — an edition apparently unknown abroad, or the word 'Sameracensis' would not have escaped attention. Glarean merely calls Mouton "Gallus". Fétis thinks, from the inscription on the tomb, that Hollingue, a little town near Metz, may have been his birthplace. In that case "Sameracensis" may refer simply to Mouton's residence at Saint-Quentin.

² Date proposed by Fétis. Mouton's first publication appeared in 1505.

³ Whence he removed, probably, when the English took the town in 1513.

⁴ See 'Études saint-quentinoises' (Saint-Quentin, 1851-62, etc.), I, 302. Ch. Gomart, the author, took the inscription from a "MS of Quentin Delafons", but does not state where it is to be found. It is the only authority for the date of Mouton's death, and for his two church preferences.

⁵ 'Δωδεκάχορδον' (Basle, 1548), p. 464.

⁶ 'Missae J. Mouton' (Fossombrone, Petrutius, 11 Aug. 1515), containing 'Missae sine nomine', 'Alleluia', 'Alma redemptoris', another 'Sine nomine', 'Regina mearum' (B.M. K. 1, d 7).

⁷ For Burney's examples from Mouton, and critical notes, see 'Musical Extracts' (II, 104, 134, 137, 169) in B.M. Add. MSS 11,582. Most of the notes are incorporated in his 'History' (II, 533; modern ed. I, 769).

⁸ The 'Alma redemptoris' was reprinted, and a new one, 'dittes moy toutes vos pensées', added in Antiquis's famous 'Liber quindecim missarum' (Rome, 1516).

⁹ See preface to 'Joannis Mouton Sameracensis'.

¹⁰ "A passionate lover of music . . . the sounds of which were daily heard floating through the palace, Leo himself humming the airs that were performed" (Ranke's 'History of the Popes').

MOYSE, Marcel (Joseph) (b. Saint-Amour, Jura, 17 May 1889).

French flautist. He was awarded the first prize at the Paris Conservatoire in 1906 and then followed a twofold career, both orchestral (solo flautist of the principal French symphonic orchestras) and as a chamber-music player and recitalist. In both respects he is regarded as one of the finest exponents of his instrument in France. He is professor of the flute at the Conservatoire, where he succeeded Philippe Gaubert in Feb. 1932.

His son Louis (b. 14 Aug. 1912), who obtained the first prize for flute (1932), is also an excellent pianist. This enables him to appear with his father in works for two flutes and also as pianist of the Marcel Moyse trio (with Blanche Honegger, violin).

M. P.

MOYZES, Alexander (b. Kl'aštor pod Znievom, Slovakia, 4 Sept. 1906).

Slovak composer. The son of Mikuláš Moyzes, he received a secondary school education at Prešov and studied at the Prague Conservatory (1925–28), where his principal teachers were R. Karel and O. Štín. In 1928–30 he perfected his technique in composition under Novák at the Master School. In 1929 he became professor of composition at the Conservatory of Bratislava (Hudebná akadémia), where he has since been living and working. From 1935 to 1948 he was musical director of the broadcasting station there (since Feb. 1948 on involuntary leave). In 1949 he took part in organizing a new Artistic Folksong Ensemble in Slovakia and in the autumn of the same year he was appointed professor of the newly founded Academy of Music. After the liberation of Czechoslovakia in 1945 he did much to further the organization of music and raise the musical standards in Slovakia, and particularly to ease the relations between the Slovaks and the Czechs.

Gifted with exceptional talent, Moyzes began to compose when he was fifteen, and in 1922, three years before his admission to the Conservatory, he heard compositions of his publicly performed for the first time. In the strict school of Novák he acquired a thorough knowledge of technique, and the splendid example of his beloved and admired master became decisive for the further development of his art. In the same way as Novák did in a very considerable part of his works, Moyzes found inspiration in the spirit of folk music, making use, at the same time, of modern developments; he thus works in perfect conformity with recent Slovak musical ideals. He is doubtless one of the two leading personalities in the contemporary Slovak musical community, the other being Eugen Suchoň. Moyzes is not only a composer of forthright character, of spontaneous invention and resourceful technique; he is also a methodical and conscientious worker. The definitive versions of his works are often the result of several revisions. Up to 1950 over forty numbered compositions of his have been performed and some of them published. A short selection of his works follows:

- Scenic cantata 'Svatopluk' (words by Ján Hollý), Op. 25 (1935).
- Scenic cantata 'Červené zore — nová dedina' ('Red Morning-Sky — a New Village'), Op. 43 (1949).
- Incidental music for Shakespeare's 'The Winter's Tale', Op. 24 (1935).
- Incidental music for Shakespeare's 'Hamlet', Op. 29 (1938).
- Symphony No. 1, D ma., Op. 4 (1927, def. 1936).
- Symphonic Overture, Op. 10 (1929).
- 'Little Symphony' for small orch., Op. 17b (orch. version of the wind Quintet, Op. 17a).
- Overture 'Jánošíkova chlapci' ('Janošík's Boys'), Op. 21 (1934).
- Dramatic overture 'Nikola Šuhaj', Op. 22 (1934).
- Symphony No. 2, A mi., Op. 16 (1932, def. 1941).
- Symphonic suite 'Dolu Váhom' ('Down the Váh-River'), Op. 26 (1935, def. 1945).
- Symphony No. 4, E♭ ma., Op. 38 (1941–47).
- Symphony No. 5, 'Podľa odkazu drahého otca' ('After the Heritage of my Dear Father'), F ma., Op. 39 (1948).
- Symphony No. 6 ('Pioneers'), G ma., Op. 45 (1950).
- Concertino for pf. & orch., Op. 18 (1933, def. 1939).
- 'Cesta' ('The Way'), song cycle with orch. (words by L. Novomeský), Op. 36 (1932, def. 1942).
- String Quartet, A mi., Op. 9 (1928–29, def. 1942).
- Quintet for wind insts., Op. 17a (1933, def. 1942, also an orch. version entitled 'Little Symphony', Op. 17b).
- 'Poetic Suite' for vn. & pf., Op. 35 (1940).
- Sonata, E mi., for pf., Op. 2 (1926–27, def. 1942).
- Divertimento, Op. 11, for pf. (1929).
- Also music for films, songs, partsongs, &c.
- Arrangements of folksongs, especially 'Znejú piesne na chotári' ('Songs resound in the Country'), cantata-suite, Op. 40 (1948) and 'Či organy hrajú' ('As Organs play'), cycle of choruses for unaccompanied men's, women's & mixed voices, Op. 37 (1946–47).

G. Č.

MOYZES, Mikuláš (b. Veľká Slatina nr. Zvolen, 6 Dec. 1872; d. Prešov, 2 Apr. 1944).

Slovak composer, father of the preceding. Having been educated at the "Gymnasium" of Banská Bystrica and at the Teacher's Training-College of Kl'aštor pod Znievom, he studied organ and composition at the Academy of Music in Budapest. Under the Hungarian rule he worked as a cathedral organist in Eger and later in Nagyvárád. In 1907 he was appointed professor of music at the Teacher's Training-College and director of the Municipal School of Music at Prešov, places he held until his retirement, even when this town passed from Hungary to Czechoslovakia (in 1918).

Sacred and organ music predominated among Moyzes's early compositions, written in an impersonal style; his 'Missa solemnis' in C major (1905) should be particularly mentioned. He composed besides several orchestral works (e.g. a Scherzo), pianoforte pieces, songs and partsongs. He also helped to raise the standards of musical education by writing suitable textbooks and an organ tutor. Later, through his son, he came in contact with the new tendencies and methods in music which were shown in several chamber works (Quintet and Sextet for wind instruments, 2 string Quartets), as well as in compositions for orchestra, particularly 'Malá vrchovská symfonia' ('Little Highland Symphony') (1934). His overture 'Naše Slovensko' (Our Slovakia) (1938) became very popular, having been reorchestrated by his son Alexander, who also made use of his father's sketches in his own Symphony No. 5. Mikuláš Moyzes made many arrangements of folksongs. o. č.

MOZART. Austrian family of musicians of German origin.

(1) (Johann Georg) Leopold Mozart (b. Augsburg, 14 Nov. 1719; d. Salzburg, 28 May 1787), father of the great composer. He was himself a musician of some note. The son of Johann Georg Mozart, a bookbinder at Augsburg, he determined to push himself beyond the narrow circle of his parental home. He studied for two years (1737-39) at the University of Salzburg with the intention of entering the priesthood, but his love of music proving too strong for him (he was already an excellent violinist), he obtained an appointment in 1740 as musician and chamberlain to Count Thurn and Taxis, Canon of Salzburg. Three years later he was appointed fourth violinist in the private orchestra of the Archbishop of Salzburg, in whose service he ultimately (1763) attained to the post of vice-Kapellmeister, after having already in 1757 been granted the additional appointment of court composer. On 21 Nov. 1747 he married Anna Maria Pertl¹, daughter of an official of St. Gilgen. They were described as the handsomest couple at Salzburg. Of their six children only two survived — a daughter, Maria Anna, and a son, the illustrious Wolfgang. Both showed great musical gifts at an early age, and Leopold soon found himself compelled to devote almost the whole of his time to their training. The story of his travels with them will be told below. There is perhaps something that smacks a little of the showman in the manner in which he rushed them round Europe and exhibited them as prodigies, and the strain of these years of travel undoubtedly had a very bad effect on Wolfgang's health. On the other hand, the latter owed much to his father's careful training and strict supervision, irksome as this often was to one so different in temperament.

The list of Leopold Mozart's compositions is fairly extensive and includes religious music, symphonies and concertos, divertimenti and pianoforte sonatas. A selection, edited by Max Seiffert, was published by Breitkopf & Härtel in 1908.² Six divertimenti written about 1760, and included in this collection, possess considerable merit and deserve to be better known. Leopold's great work, however, was his 'Versuch einer gründlichen Violinschule' (Augsburg, 1756), which passed through many editions in several languages and was for long the standard method for the violin.

BIBL.—A selection from Leopold Mozart's letters is given in Vols. III and IV of L. Schiedermair's 'Die Briefe Mozarts und seiner Familie' (1914). In 1920 the diary he kept during his travels with his children was published by A. Schurig under the title 'Leopold Mozart: Reiseaufzeichnungen, 1763-1771'. His letters to Maria Anna are published in 'Leopold Mozart's Briefe an seine Tochter', ed. by O. E. Deutsch and B. Paumgartner (Vienna, 1936). Extracts from Leopold's most important letters are translated in Emily Anderson's 'The Letters of Mozart and his Family' (1938). A good study of Leopold's character is to be found in J. Kreitmaier's biography of his son (1919).

See also Accidentals. Dot (invention of double dot). Eberlin (contrib. to Hornwerk).

(2) Maria Anna (Marianne) Mozart (b. Salzburg, 30 July 1751; d. Salzburg, 29 Oct. 1829), daughter of the preceding. She was, like her brother, a child prodigy, but, unlike him, never developed into anything more. She shared her brother's successes as a pianist on their joint tours, but later in life was chiefly in request as a teacher. In 1784 she married Baron von Berchtold zu Sonnenburg, court councillor of Salzburg and warden of St. Gilgen. On his death in 1801 she returned to Salzburg and again occupied herself with teaching. She became blind in 1820 and ended her days in comparative poverty.

(3) Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart³ (b. Salzburg, 27 Jan. 1756; d. Vienna, 5 Dec. 1791), brother of the preceding.

LIFE.—Even as a child of three Mozart showed his love of music in a remarkable manner. He listened eagerly to his sister Marianne's music-lessons, amused himself for hours with picking out thirds, and showed a good memory for the pieces he heard. Encouraged by these indications his father began, almost in play, to teach him little minuets on the harpsichord; but the boy showed such aptitude that play soon became real work. Marianne's manuscript music-book⁴ was called into requisition, the father writing down in it pieces of progressive difficulty. The impulse to compose similar pieces for himself was soon roused in the boy; these, which already betray his feeling for beauty both of sound and form, he ¹ He was christened in full Joannes Chrysostomus Wolfgangus Theophilus: instead of Theophilus his father wrote Gottlieb—in Latin Amadeus. In his earlier letters Mozart added his confirmation-name Sigismundus. On his first works, and those engraved in Paris in 1764, he signs himself J. G. Wolfgang, afterwards Wolfgang Amade; in private life he was always Wolfgang.

² Now in the Mozarteum at Salzburg. On his seventh name-day (1762) Wolfgang received from his father a music-book of this sort for his own use, lately in the possession of Dr. L. Koenig of Kiel. It consisted of a collection of little pieces by various composers written out by Leopold in the form of suites, and designed to serve both as an album of piano music and as a guide to the various forms of composition. It was published in 1922, with an introduction by H. Abert.

³ Not Pertlin: that was simply the old-style feminine ending, still in use in the Slavonic languages, but no longer in German.

⁴ D.T.B., IX, ii. There is a valuable introduction.

played to his father, who wrote them down in the book. Before long he was able to enter his own compositions. Schachtner, the court trumpeter and a friend of the family, relates many touching instances of his lively and essentially childlike disposition¹; of his eagerness in learning anything, especially arithmetic; of his ear, which was so delicate that he could detect and remember to the next day a difference of half a quarter-tone, and so susceptible that he fainted away at the sound of a trumpet; and of his earnestness over his music-lessons. His father wrote to him in 1778:

As a child and a boy you were too serious even to be childish: and when sitting at the harpsichord, or doing anything in the shape of music, you would not stand a joke from any one. Indeed, from the precocity of your talent, and the extremely thoughtful expression of your countenance, many people feared you would not live to grow up.

When a little over five and a half, Mozart took part in a comedy, 'Sigismundus Hungariae Rex', set to music by Eberlin, the court organist, and performed in the hall of Salzburg University, 1 and 3 Sept. 1761. There were about 150 performers, including young counts, students and choristers of the chapel.

The father, struck by the rapid progress of his children, determined to travel with them. Their first excursion was in Jan. 1762, to Munich, where the elector received them kindly and expressed great admiration; and encouraged by this success the family next went to Vienna, giving a concert at Linz by the way.

The reputation of the little prodigies had preceded them to Vienna, but the reality far exceeded the expectations formed by the court and nobility. The emperor was especially taken with the kleiner Hexenmeister (little magician) and in joke made him play first with one finger only, and then with the keyboard covered. Wolfgang asked expressly for Wagenseil, the court composer, that he might be sure of having a real connoisseur among his hearers. "I am playing a concerto of yours," he said, "you must turn over for me." He treated the empress with all the frankness of an unspoilt child, jumping up into her lap, throwing his arms round her neck and kissing her. Of course the upper classes went wild about the children, and "all the ladies lost their hearts to the little fellow". But a change soon came, for Wolfgang took the scarlet fever, and even after his recovery people held aloof from fear of infection. After a short excursion to Pressburg the family returned to Salzburg at the beginning of 1763.

The father now considered himself justified in attempting a longer journey, his main objective this time being Paris. They left Salzburg on 9 June and travelled by Munich, Augsburg, Schwetzingen, Mainz, Frankfurt², Coblenz, Aachen and Brussels, giving public concerts or playing at the various courts. Wolfgang played the violin, and also the organ at the various churches.

They arrived in Paris on 18 Nov. and stayed five months. The children played before the court at Versailles, gave two concerts and excited the greatest enthusiasm. Grimm, the cultivated man of letters, took them up warmly and was of great use in procuring them introductions and rendering services of various kinds. To show Wolfgang's talent in composition, the father had four Sonatas for pf. and violin engraved, two (K. 6, 7)³ being dedicated to the Princess Victoire, the king's second daughter, and two (K. 8, 9) to the witty Comtesse de Tessé. The young musician's portrait was twice painted during his stay in Paris, by Carmontelle in the well-known family group and by M. B. Ollivier in the picture of a tea-party in the Prince de Conti's salon, which now hangs in the Louvre.⁴

They left Paris, 10 Apr. 1764, and went by Calais to London, where they took lodgings in Cecil Court, St. Martin's Lane.⁵ Here also they met with a gracious reception at court, and the children, especially Wolfgang, made an extraordinary impression. The king put before the "invincible" Wolfgang pieces by J. C. Bach, Abel, Wagenseil and Handel, which he played at sight, and also made him play on his organ, to the still greater admiration of everybody. He then accompanied the queen in a song and a flute-player in his solo, and improvised a charming melody to the bass part of one of Handel's airs. He became very intimate with the queen's music-master, J. Christian Bach and with the singers Tenducci and Manzuoli, the latter of whom gave him singing-lessons of his own accord. He also made the acquaintance of the Hon. Daines Barrington, a man of very versatile attainments, who after putting him to the severest tests, wrote a paper for the Royal Society in which ¹ Here the father announced in the programme, 30 Aug., that "he would play with the keyboard covered", thus turning the emperor's joke to account. Here also Goethe heard him—"I was about 14, and I still distinctly remember the little man with his frizzled wig, and sword". Eckermann's 'Gespräche mit Goethe' (Leipzig, 1908), II, 178.

² The numbers throughout refer to Köchel's catalogue of Mozart's compositions. For the chronological order of the works the third edition, as revised by Dr. A. Einstein, has been generally followed.

³ It is possible, however, that this latter picture was painted during the Mozarts' return visit in 1766.

⁴ For details of the Mozarts' stay, and the condition of music at the time, see Pohl's 'Haydn und Mozart in London' (Vienna, 1867). Further particulars may be gleaned from Leopold's own diary published by Dr. A. Schurig in 1920 as 'Leopold Mozart: Reiseaufzeichnungen', and from F. G. Edwards's 'Musical Haunts in London' (1895).

⁵ Letter to Mozart's sister, dated Salzburg, 1792; given entire by Jahn, I, 21. The references throughout are, unless otherwise stated, to the English translation.

he detailed the facts and his own admiration and astonishment.¹ After a second performance at court the children gave their first concert on Tuesday, 5 June, at the Great Room in Spring Gardens. In the advertisement the father called his children "prodigies of nature", and directed special attention to Wolfgang; "his father had brought him to England, not doubting but that he will meet with success in a kingdom where his countryman Handel, the late famous virtuoso, received during his lifetime such particular protection". The town was very full for the king's birthday (4 June), and the receipts were as much as 100 guineas; moreover, many of the performers engaged declined receiving any remuneration for their services. The sensation was immense; even the father was astonished and wrote home describing their progress. "To play the British patriot" he next allowed Wolfgang to play the harpsichord and organ at a concert at Ranelagh on 29 June, "for the benefit of a useful public charity."² A projected visit to Tunbridge Wells, which was then at the height of its vogue as a fashionable resort, had to be suddenly abandoned. Towards the end of July Leopold took cold in returning from a concert at Lord Thanet's and had a severe illness. During his convalescence they went to live near Chelsea, then a detached village, at the house of a Dr. Randal in Fivefields (now 182 Ebury Street). Not being able to play any instrument, on his father's account, Wolfgang composed his first two Symphonies (K. 16, 19³), and amused himself with a number of experiments in composition which possess a special interest in that they were never intended for his father's eyes and never underwent correction by him.⁴ On their return to town the Mozarts lodged at a Mr. Williamson's, No. 15 Thrift Street (now Frith Street, Soho); and on 25 Oct. they were again invited to court. The father had six of Wolfgang's sonatas for harpsichord and violin (K. 10-15) engraved at his own cost and dedicated to the queen, who sent him 50 guineas. The last two concerts, in which "all the overtures were of the little boy's own composition", took place respectively on 21 Feb. 1765, at the Little Theatre, Haymarket, and 13 May, in Hickford's Great Room, Brewer Street, the latter at reduced prices, as the charm of novelty had worn off. Here the children played a piece of Wolfgang's for four hands on the same harpsichord, a thing then quite new.⁵ The instrument was one with two manuals and pedals, as well as a Venetian swell, made by Burkat Shudi for the King of Prussia.⁶

From this time the father put forth repeated invitations to the public to hear and test the youthful prodigies in private, "every day from 12 to 3, admittance 2/6 each person", first at their lodgings and afterwards at the Swan and Hoop Tavern, Cornhill. Playing with the keyboard covered is mentioned as a special attraction. Visitors, however, became constantly fewer, in spite of the increasing urgency with which they were invited ('The Advertiser' of 11 July contains the last advertisement), and some popular disturbances, together with the appearance of the first symptoms of George III's malady, made the elder Mozart determine to leave the country. The family, however, first visited the British Museum (opened 15 Jan. 1759), to which the father is said to have presented Wolfgang's printed sonatas and a copy of the engraving from Carmontelle's picture.⁷ In memory of his visit Wolfgang composed, by request, a four-part motet,⁸ his only vocal piece to English words, and presented the autograph to the Museum. They left London on 24 July, stayed until the end of the month at Burne Place with the nephew of Sir Horace Mann, Walpole's correspondent, and on 1 Aug. left England for The Hague in consequence of an invitation to the court of Holland.

They were detained a month at Lille by Wolfgang's falling ill and spent a few days at Ghent and Antwerp. They arrived at The Hague on 11 Sept. and were most graciously received by the Prince of Orange and his sister, Princess Caroline of Nassau-Weilburg. For 30 Sept. a concert was arranged, at which, according to the announcements, all the overtures were again to be of Wolfgang's composition. But a few days before the little girl fell ill, and then Wolfgang took a violent fever which lasted many weeks. It was not till Jan. 1766 that the family was able to proceed to Amsterdam, where two public concerts were given, at one of which the Symphony in B major (K. 22) was probably performed. In Mar. they were again at The Hague for the fêtes on the occasion of the installation of the Prince ¹ On this Sonata (now K. 19d) see G. de Saint-Foix, 'Une Sonate inconnue de Mozart', 'Revue musicale', May 1921, and A. H. King in M. Rev., XII, 1951, p. 29.

² See A. J. Hipkins's 'History of the Pianoforte' (1897). An account of the concert was given in the 'Salzburger Zeitung', 6 Aug. 1765.

³ There is no trace of this copy in the British Museum. Moreover the official receipt, now in the Mozarteum at Salzburg, merely thanks Leopold for "the present of the musical performances of your very ingenious son".

⁴ 'God is our Refuge and Strength.' For facsimile of the autograph see Pohl's 'Mozart in London' and Wyzewa and Saint-Foix's 'W. A. Mozart'. The piece, edited by Dr. W. H. Cummings, was reprinted in 'Musical News', 27 Jan. 1906.

¹ 'Philosophical Transactions', Vol. LX, for the year 1770, p. 54. Reprinted in Barrington's 'Miscellanies' (1781).

² Probably the Lying-in Hospital (Surrey), the foundation-stone of which was laid in 1765.

³ K. 17 and 18 are copies of works by other composers.

⁴ They are preserved in a little music-book now in the Berlin library, and were published by Breitkopf in 1909 under the title 'Mozart als achtjähriger Componist'. The marked difference between them and the work written under Leopold's supervision is significant.

of Orange as Stadtholder, for which Wolfgang composed harpsichord variations on an air by Graaf and on the folksong (now the Dutch national anthem) 'Wilhelmus van Nassouwe' (K. 24, 25), which were immediately printed. He also composed for the festival a kind of concerto grosso which he called 'Galimathias musicum' (K. 32); it concludes with a fugue on the folksong. Six Sonatas for pianoforte and violin (K. 26-31), dedicated to the princess, were also engraved.

After spending a few days at Amsterdam and Utrecht, in each of which towns a concert was given, the Mozarts started on their return journey. Travelling by Malines, they arrived at Paris towards the end of April. The children played repeatedly at court, and their improvement was appreciated, but here too there was a falling-off in interest. On 9 July they left Paris and, passing through Dijon and Lyons to Switzerland, spent many pleasant days at Geneva, Lausanne, Berne, Zürich and Schaffhausen. They were fêted everywhere, but most of all at Zürich by the poet Gesner, from whom they parted with great regret. From Geneva the father took his children over to Ferney, bearing a letter of introduction from Damilaville of Paris. But Voltaire had been in bed for six weeks, and Mme Denis, Rameau's pupil, was ill too. "Comment pourrais-je recevoir votre jeune joueur de clavecin? Ah! nous sommes bien loin de donner des fêtes!" he wrote to his friend in Paris; and so this strange encounter between Leopold Mozart the sincere believer and Voltaire the sceptic did not take place.¹ That the former should have desired it is a proof of his readiness to sacrifice even his scruples to the interests of his children. At Donaueschingen they spent twelve pleasant days with the Prince of Fürstenberg, who had music nearly every evening and, after remunerating them very handsomely, took leave of them with tears in his eyes. At Biberach Count Fugger of Babenhausen made Wolfgang compete on the organ with Sixtus Bachmann, a gifted boy two years older than himself; neither was able to obtain a decided advantage over the other. Passing through Munich, where the elector was much pleased with Wolfgang's progress, the travellers returned to Salzburg in Nov. 1766.

The father's first care was to carry on Wolfgang's interrupted studies; as a solid foundation he took him through Fux's 'Gradus ad Parnassum'. The archbishop, not believing in the boy's powers, gave him the first part of a sacred cantata, 'Die Schuldigkeit des ersten Gebotes'² (K. 35), to compose under strict surveillance. The work was eventually performed on 12 Mar. and 2 Apr. 1767, by the students in the University hall.³ To this period also belong a 'Passionskantate' or 'Grabmusik' (K. 42); a Latin comedy 'Apollo et Hyacinthus', performed 13 May at the Aula; a series of arrangements, in the form of pianoforte concertos, of movements from sonatas by the Parisian school of German composers (K. 37, 39-41); and possibly a 'Cassation' (K. 99), a Serenade (K. 100) and two Symphonies (K. 76, 43). In the beginning of Sept. the family, attracted by the approaching betrothal of the Archduchess Maria Josepha, went to Vienna; but they came in for a series of misfortunes. The archduchess died of the smallpox, the upper classes took flight for fear of infection, and the Mozarts also fled to Olomouc, where, however, both children took the disease and Wolfgang was blind for nine days. Count Podstatzky generously gave them free quarters, and every care was lavished upon them. After their recovery they made a short stay at Brno, where they were kindly welcomed by Count Schrattenbach and other nobles.

They returned to Vienna in Jan. 1768, and were kindly received at court; but the empress was living in retirement after the death of her husband, and, her son, Joseph II, set an example of parsimony which was scrupulously followed by the aristocracy. Worse than all was the envy and jealousy shown by other musicians. In the midst of these various difficulties and trials, however, the emperor invited Wolfgang to compose an opera and conduct it at the harpsichord. Coltellini's 'La finta semplice' (K. 51) was chosen, but a series of intrigues prevented its being produced. Wolfgang had, however, the satisfaction of producing his little German operetta 'Bastien und Bastienne' (K. 50)⁴ in the private theatre of a Doctor Mesmer, who is now known to have been no other than the celebrated discoverer of animal magnetism. He had also an opportunity of appearing in public as a composer, being commissioned to furnish a solemn Mass,⁵ an Offertorium (K. 47) and a trumpet Concerto⁶ for the consecration of the new church at the orphanage. The ceremony took place on 7 Dec., and Wolfgang conducted in presence of the emperor and the court. During his stay at Vienna Mozart also composed two Symphonies (K. 45, 48).⁶

³ Hammerle ('Mozart und einige Zeitgenossen', Salzburg, 1877) quotes the notice in the University minutes: "1767, 12 Martii, Jovis: Vacatio (Post prandium). Hora media 7 in Aula Oratorium fuit decantatum a D. Wolfgango Mozart adulescentulo 10 annorum in modulos musicos egregie redactum."

⁴ The libretto was a German version, by F. W. Weiskern, of Madame Favart's parody on Rousseau's 'Devin du village'. These works have not been preserved.

⁵ The string Quintet, formerly assigned to this period (K. 46), is almost certainly an arrangement, possibly by Mozart himself, of the Serenade for wind instruments (K. 361) written in 1780. The MS is not in Mozart's hand, and the superscription "Salzburg, 25 Jan. 1768" cannot possibly be correct.

¹ See 'Voltaire musicien', by Edmond van der Straeten (1878).

² The MS is at Windsor Castle.

A great pleasure awaited Wolfgang on his return to Salzburg; the archbishop had his rejected opera performed in the palace. He also made him his Konzertmeister, though without salary. Wolfgang again devoted himself to study, composing two Masses (K. 65, 66), a Te Deum (K. 141) and a 'Cassation' (K. 63). His father now determined to carry out a long-cherished plan and to take his son to Italy, the golden land of music and the one gateway to operatic fame. They left Salzburg at the beginning of Dec. 1769 and, travelling by Innsbruck, where Wolfgang was greatly admired at a private concert given by Count Kunigl, visited Rovereto, Verona, Mantua, Cremona, Milan, Lodi — where Wolfgang composed his first Quartet — Bologna, Rome, Florence, Naples, and on their return Bologna, Milan and Venice. At Rovereto Wolfgang played at Baron Todeschi's, and the day after played the organ in the parish church to an immense crowd. At Verona one of his symphonies was performed, and his playing at sight, and composing and singing an air to given words, caused great astonishment. His portrait was painted by Cignaroli, and poets celebrated his praises. At Mantua, at a concert of the Società Filarmonica, nine out of fourteen pieces were by Wolfgang. At Milan they were lodged in San Marco, and Count Firmian, the governor-general, who was a great connoisseur, introduced them to all the principal families. "It is the same here as everywhere," writes the father, "so there is no need to describe it." The foremost musician in the city, the aged Giambattista Sammartini (or San Martini), subjected Wolfgang to severe tests. After a brilliant soirée at Count Firmian's, for which he composed four airs to words by Metastasio (K. 88, 77-79), he was commissioned to write an opera for the next season. At Parma they admired the celebrated singer Aguiari.¹ At Bologna they were most hospitably received by Count Pallavicini, who gave a brilliant concert, at which even Padre Martini was present, although he had then given up attending such functions. The father writes² that Wolfgang was more admired there than anywhere, and anticipates that from Bologna, the residence of so many artists and scientific musicians, his fame will soon spread over Italy. And he was right; for the recommendation of Padre Martini, the great church composer and referee in all musical disputes, at once gave him a position in the eyes of the world. After each visit to Martini, Wolfgang carried away a fugue to work out at home and in every case acquitted himself to the satisfaction of the great contrapuntist. His acquaintance, too, with the great singer Farinelli was of service to him from an artistic point of view.

At Florence, where they arrived on 30 Mar., the Mozarts were graciously received by the Archduke Leopold, who had known them in Vienna. Wolfgang played at court, accompanied Nardini the great violinist, and solved, "as easily as if he were eating a bit of bread", the hardest problems set him by the Marquis de Ligniville, director of the court music and a thorough contrapuntist. Wolfgang copied for his own use nine pieces from the marquis's Stabat Mater with thirty canons and composed in imitation of it a 'Kyrie a cinque con diversi canoni' (K. 89). Here to his great delight he again met Manzuoli, who had taught him to sing in London. He also struck up a great friendship with Thomas Linley, the young composer of 14, who was a pupil of Nardini and already gave remarkable promise. The two young artists were inseparable for the few days of Mozart's stay and competed "not like boys, but like men". They parted with many tears, but never met again, Linley being drowned in 1778. Long afterwards in Vienna Mozart spoke of him and lamented his early death.³ Burney says that the talk throughout Italy was of the two geniuses, little Mozart and "Tommasino", from both of whom much was expected.⁴

The travellers reached Rome on Wednesday in Holy Week and went straight to the Sistine Chapel to hear Allegri's celebrated *Miserere*⁵, when Wolfgang gave the well-known proof of his ear and memory by writing down the entire work, after one hearing, merely correcting one or two passages during the repetition on Good Friday. This feat made a great sensation. The principal people received him with open arms, and Wolfgang played everywhere. For these concerts he composed three Symphonies (K. 81, 97, 95) and two soprano airs (K. 82, 83).

On 8 May they went direct to Naples. Wolfgang was not invited to play before the court, but the nobility treated both father and son with great respect; they also met many previous acquaintances, who were of use to them in various ways, among them the English ambassador Sir William Hamilton. On the 28th Wolfgang gave a concert, which was brilliantly attended and brought in a good sum. When he played at the Conservatorio alla Pietà, his hearers were superstitious enough to attribute his marvellous execution to the charm of a ring on his finger, and when he laid it aside their astonishment knew no bounds. On 25 June they went back to Rome, and the

¹ Kelly's 'Reminiscences', 1st ed., I, 225.

² 'Present State of Music in France and Italy', 1st ed., p. 247.

³ Wolfgang's letter to his sister of 24 Mar. 1770 affords the chief testimony to the remarkable range of this singer's voice.

⁴ Letter to his wife, 27 Mar. 1770.

⁵ The 'Miserere' which Mozart composed, probably in July or Aug. 1770 (K. 85), shows traces of imitation of this model.

pope, in a private audience, bestowed on Wolfgang the Order of the Golden Spur — "the same that Gluck has", as the father wrote home with pardonable pride. Leopold also told, as a good joke, how the guards let them pass, taking Wolfgang for a young prince and himself for his tutor. Now Wolfgang was Signor Cavaliere Amadeo, and his father insisted on his thus signing his compositions. Wolfgang, however, was less pretentious and soon let the title drop.

Leaving Rome on 10 July, they arrived on the 20th at Bologna, where a great distinction awaited Wolfgang. The Accademia Filarmonica, after testing his powers¹, admitted him to their ranks as compositore, although the statutes, besides other qualifications, required that members should be at least twenty. His election as *maestro di cappella*² followed on 5 June 1771. Again they saw much of Martini, and under his influence Wolfgang wrote for practice a series of sketches in the forms of strict counterpoint.³ Finally Martini gave him a formal testimonial.⁴

By 18 Oct. they were at Milan, and Wolfgang set seriously to work on his opera, before the completion of which the usual battles with the singers, and in this case with jealous rivals, had to be gone through. On 26 Dec., however, 'Mitridate, re di Ponto' was produced for the first time, Wolfgang conducting; and it was repeated to full houses twenty times, amid cries of "Evviva il Maestro! Evviva il Maestrino!" After an excursion to Turin, they again passed through Milan on their way to Venice, entered into all the amusements of the Carnival, were fêted by the nobility and gave a brilliant concert. On 12 Mar. they went to Padua, where Wolfgang played the organ in San Giustino, and was commissioned to compose an oratorio, which Jahn conjectures to have been 'Betulia liberata' (K. 118), possibly performed there during Lent 1772.⁵ After some days' detention at Vicenza and Verona they arrived at Salzburg, 28 Mar. 1771. Mozart's success in Italy procured him two commissions — one from Milan for an opera for the Carnival of 1773 and the other from the Empress Maria Theresa for a dramatic serenata for the marriage of the Archduke Ferdinand, to take place at Milan in Oct. His stay at Salzburg was to last only five months, but during that brief period he not only completed his oratorio, but found time to compose a 'Regina coeli' (K. 108), a Litany (K. 109), an Offertory (K. 72), a Psalm (K. 93), four Symphonies (K. 75, 73, 110 and App. 216) and a number of uncompleted works. Father and son set out again on 13 Aug. 1771 and arrived in Milan on the 21st; but the libretto of the serenata was not ready till the end of the month. Wolfgang completed the score in a few weeks, a remarkable instance of rapidity, considering that he had a violinist overhead, an oboe-player beneath and a teacher of singing next door, all hard at work the whole day long — a Babel of sounds which he, however, pronounced to be "delightful [lustig] for composing, as it gave him ideas!" He was now so firmly established in the favour both of the court and the public that he had no intrigues to encounter. He was on the best terms, too, with Hasse, who was composing 'Ruggiero' and who, with commendable generosity, prophetically remarked: "This boy will cause us all to be forgotten" ("Questo ragazzo ci farà dimenticare tutti").⁶ The marriage of the archduke and Princess Beatrice of Modena took place on 15 Oct.; Hasse's opera was performed on the 16th and Wolfgang's serenata 'Ascanio in Alba' (K. 111) on the 17th, with a success which enabled the father to write home: "I am sorry to say Wolfgang's serenata has cut out Hasse's opera to an extent I cannot describe". Besides his fee, the empress sent him a gold watch set with diamonds, with her portrait at the back. After the opera he composed two Symphonies (K. 96, 112) and a Divertimento (K. 113).

They returned home in the middle of Dec. 1771. In the last days of the year Wolfgang composed another Symphony (K. 114) and was then laid up by serious illness. Meantime the archbishop died, and Wolfgang was commissioned to compose an opera for the allegiance festival of his successor, Hieronymus, Count von Colloredo, whose election caused universal astonishment and dismay. The work chosen was Metastasio's 'Il sogno di Scipione', an allegorical piece whose appropriateness to the occasion is not evident. Mozart does not seem to have bothered much about it; at any rate his setting (K. 126) is one of the dullest things he ever wrote. It was performed on 29 Apr. 1772. Between Feb. and Oct. of this year Mozart also composed seven Symphonies (K. 124, 128-130, 132-134), four Divertimenti (K. 131, 136-138), the well-known Litany 'de venerabili' in B \flat (K. 125) and a 'Regina coeli' (K. 127).

The travellers again set out for Milan on 24 Oct. 1772 and arrived on 4 Nov. Here Wolfgang completed his new opera, 'Lucio Silla' (K. 135), produced on 26 Dec. and repeated

¹ An antiphon was given him to set in four parts (K. 86).

² Jahn (2nd Ger. ed.) gives — Minutes, II, 613; Letter from the Father, I, 126; Text-composition, II, Notenbeilage viii; Diploma, II, 614.

³ Jahn (2nd Ger. ed.), II, Notenbeilage v.

⁴ See Jahn (2nd Ger. ed.), II, 616.

⁵ There is, however, no record of this. Anton André is said to have possessed a copy of the libretto, which bore a note, apparently in Mozart's hand, to the effect that the work was first performed in 1786 (Jahn, I, 197).

⁶ Mennicke ('Hasse und die Gebrüder Graun als Sinfoniker', p. 433, etc.) questions the authenticity of this remark, chiefly on the ground that Leopold Mozart says nothing about it in his letters.

more than twenty times to crowded and enthusiastic audiences.¹ Rauzzini was one of the singers, and Wolfgang composed for him a motet, 'Exsultate' (K. 165), which he sang in the church of the Theatines.

They returned in the beginning of Mar. 1773 to Salzburg, where Wolfgang, still strongly under the influence of Italian models, composed five Symphonies (K. 184, 181, 162, 182, 199), a Divertimento for wind (K. 166), a Concertone for two violins (K. 190) and a Mass (K. 167), in which no solo voices are employed. In the summer the father and son took the opportunity of the archbishop's absence in Vienna to go there themselves. Their immediate object is not known, but probably the father was trying to obtain some court appointment. He had made a similar attempt at Florence, but without success. He wrote to his wife and daughter: "Things will and must alter; take comfort, God will help us" This visit to Vienna, though it failed of its immediate object, had an important bearing on Mozart's artistic career. He was brought once more into contact with German music. We are told that he here made acquaintance with some of Haydn's quartets—probably those numbered as Op. 17 and Op. 20, the latter being the series known as the "Sun" Quartets—and that to these we owe the six Quartets (K. 168-173) he wrote in Aug., and to which he specially referred when he spoke of Haydn as his master in this form of composition. The fugal finales of the first and last of these Quartets were obviously inspired by similar movements in these works by Haydn. During his stay at the capital he also wrote a Serenade for Salzburg (K. 185) and "was bold enough", as his father wrote, to play a violin concerto at a festival in the Theatine monastery. His Mass in C major (the "Pater Dominicus Missa", K. 66) was performed in Aug. at the Jesuit church and made a great impression. Other works of this period were a Divertimento (K. 205) and the piano variations on "Mio caro Adone" (K. 180).

Wolfgang's return to Salzburg at the beginning of Oct. 1773 was marked by an almost feverish outburst of creative activity. Before the end of the year he had composed a Symphony (K. 200), his first pf. Concerto (K. 175), refashioned a string Quintet (K. 174) he had written in the previous year, and composed entr'actes and choruses for Gebler's heroic drama 'Thamos, König in Aegypten' (K. 345).² In the opening months of 1774 there followed four more Symphonies (K. 183, 200, 201, 202); the first, in G minor, remarkable for its sustained earnestness of mood, the third, in A, a sparkling composition which marks the beginning of Mozart's conversion to the so-called galante Stil—a "courtly" style in which depth and solidity tended to be sacrificed to brilliance of effect. To this transitional period also belong a Sonata for pianoforte duet (K. 358), a bassoon Concerto (K. 191), two Masses, in F and D respectively (K. 192, 194), a Dixit and Magnificat (K. 193), a Serenade (K. 203), the first of the Sonatas for pianoforte solo (K. 279) and the Variations for pianoforte on Fischer's minuet (K. 179) that Mozart played so frequently on his tours. The pianoforte Sonatas written during the following autumn (K. 280-283) show Mozart fully converted to the new style.

On 6 Dec. the father and son started for Munich, where Wolfgang was engaged, through the influence of his patron, Count Ferdinand von Zeil, Prince-Archbishop of Chiemsee, to compose an opera for the Carnival of 1775. Stimulated, doubtless, by the rich resources at his disposal, Wolfgang exerted himself to the utmost, and 'La finta giardiniera' (K. 196), produced 13 Jan. 1775, was a great success. Schubart, who had heard it, speaks of the composer's "wonderful genius" and adds: "unless Mozart should prove to be a mere overgrown product of the forcing-house, he will be the greatest composer that ever lived".³ Court and public vied with each other in paying him attentions, and the court chapel performed one of his grand Litanies (K. 125), two of his masses⁴ and an offertory, 'Misericordias Domini' (K. 222), written in haste at the request of the elector and an admirable specimen of strict counterpoint. The pianoforte Sonata in D (K. 284), interesting for its unexpected traces of French influence, appears also to have been written at Munich, at the suggestion of Baron Durnitz.

Soon after their return to Salzburg in Mar. 1775 a series of fêtes was given at court in honour of the Archduke Maximilian, afterwards Archbishop of Cologne, and Wolfgang's dramatic festival play to Metastasio's much-used 'Il rè pastore' (K. 208) was performed on 23 Apr. To the remainder of this year belong two airs for tenor (K. 209, 210), an air for soprano (K. 217), a Divertimento (K. 213), a Serenade (K. 204), a "sonata" for organ and strings (K. 212) and, above all, the five violin Concertos (K. 207, 211, 216, 218, 219).⁵ All these works are typical examples of Mozart's "courtly" style in its extreme development. The concertos show that he

¹ 'Teutsche Chronik', 1775, p. 267.

² One of these was probably the 'Missa brevis' (K. 220), which seems to date from this time and bears obvious signs of hurried workmanship.

³ The authenticity, in the form in which it has been preserved, of the violin Concerto in E \flat (K. 268) is open to question. See the article by C. B. Oldman in M. & L., Apr. 1931, and cf. Kochel, 3rd ed., p. 435.

¹ Such is Leopold Mozart's account (letter of 2 Jan. 1773). It is significant, however, as Dent remarks ('Mozart's Operas', 2nd ed., p. 25), that Mozart received no further invitation to write for the Italian stage.

² Partly rewritten by Mozart in 1779.

was working at the violin, which he did to please his father, as he disliked playing at court, though it was one of his duties. His father writes to him, 18 Oct. 1777: "You have no idea how well you play the violin, if you would only do yourself justice and play with boldness, spirit and fire, as if you were the first violinist in Europe". Again: "I suspect you have scarcely touched the violin since you were in Munich; I should be very sorry if that were the case"; and later: "The violin is hanging up on its nail, I suppose" — and the conjecture was right. The remark about Munich refers to his Cassation (K. 287): "Everybody was staring away; and I played as if I had been the greatest violinist in Europe". Later, in Vienna, he preferred taking the viola in quartets.

The whole of 1776, and the greater part of the following year, passed quietly in the old routine, numerous compositions testifying to Wolfgang's industry. This period may be divided into three main divisions: in the first, which extends from Jan. to Sept. 1776, Mozart is found refining the cruder features of his "courtly" style, partly under the influence of a growing acquaintance with some of the more cultivated members of Salzburg society such as the Countess Lodron and her daughters; in the second (Oct.-Dec. 1776) we see him, by way of further reaction, devoting himself for a time exclusively to religious music; in the third (Jan.-Sept. 1777) we find him renewing his acquaintance with the works of the older writers and undertaking other preparations for his forthcoming journey to Paris. To the first division belong a grand Mass (K. 262), a Litany "de venerabili" (K. 243), an offertory 'Venite populi' for two choirs (K. 260), four "organ Sonatas" (K. 225, 224, 244, 245), three pianoforte Concertos (K. 238, 242, 246), the second of which, for three pianofortes, was written for the Countess Lodron and her daughters, three Serenades (K. 239, 250 and 101), of which the first is a curious composition for two small orchestras and the second the well-known Haffner¹ Serenade, seven Divertimenti² (K. 188, 240, 247, 251-254), of which the third, written for the Countess Lodron, is one of Mozart's finest works in this kind, and three arias (K. 126, 255, 256) for soprano, contralto and tenor respectively. The second division is represented by three Masses (K. 257, 259, 258), the last of which marks a definite advance in Mozart's attitude to religious music. To the third belong a 'Missa brevis' (K. 175), an Offertory (K. 277), the beautiful 'Sancta Maria' (K.

273), two organ Sonatas (K. 274, 278), a remarkable pianoforte Concerto written for the French pianist Mlle Jeunehomme (K. 271), a violin Concerto³ (K. 271a), a 'Nocturne' for four orchestras (K. 286), four Divertimenti (K. 270, 287, 289, 288), the second of which was written for the Countess Lodron as a companion-piece to the work already mentioned, and is perhaps an even finer composition, a Trio for two violins and bass (K. 266), a series of dances (K. 267), and a fine scena written for Josepha Dušek (K. 272).

Mozart was now twenty-one years of age, a skilled performer on three instruments, and at home in the most varied branches of composition. His father had given him a conscientious and systematic education, protected him from all injurious influences and made him concentrate his whole powers on his artistic cultivation. All that teaching could do for him had been done at Salzburg; the time had now come for him to go out into the world and let the discipline of life complete the work. His existence at Salzburg had long been intolerable to him: beyond a few intimate friends he had no society; he was disgusted at the want of appreciation for art, and his relations with Archbishop Hieronymus became daily more and more strained. On this point both he and his father became anxious. Something must be done. Not daring as yet to send his son alone into the world, the father asked leave to take a professional tour with him. It was refused, the archbishop's reason being, as he said afterwards, "that he could not bear people going about begging in that fashion". The cup was now full, and Wolfgang applied for his discharge.⁴ Irritated that anyone should dare to leave him so abruptly, and quite aware of what he was losing, the archbishop granted the request on 28 Aug., adding that "Nach dem Evangelio"⁵ father and son were free to seek their fortune wherever they pleased". He relented, however, with regard to the father, who came to the painful resolve of sending his son away with his mother. It was true that she had little bodily and still less intellectual energy; but she was an experienced traveller and could be useful to her son in many practical ways. The necessary preparations were accordingly made, even to the purchase of a carriage, that they might present

³ This Concerto was first published in 1907. The authenticity of the work, which in any case raises many problems, has been questioned by some critics, notably by A. Moser in his 'Geschichte des Violinspiels' (1923). Cf. Köchel, 3rd ed., p. 346.

⁴ This interesting document was found in the archiepiscopal archives by Pirckmeyer, the custodian, and published with other matter under the title of 'Zur Lebensgeschichte Mozarts', Salzburg, 1876; also copied in the Preface to Nohl's 'Mozartbriefe', 2nd ed., 1877.

⁵ This probably means "as the Gospel directs", and is a hit at Mozart's reference, in his petition, to the passage about hiding one's light under a bushel.

¹ Composed for the wedding of Elisabeth Haffner, the daughter of the late Salzburg burgomaster. The work is so long that it was probably intended to be performed in sections at appropriate intervals in the festivities.

² K. 254 is, in form, a pf. Trio, but is described by Mozart himself as a Divertimento.

a suitable appearance. On 23 Sept. 1777 mother and son left home. The father bore up bravely till they were really off, and then, going to his room, sank exhausted on a chair. Suddenly he remembered that in his distress he had forgotten to give his son his blessing. He rushed to the window with outstretched hand, but the carriage was already out of sight. His son, however, breathed freely when once fairly off; the deliverance from a position he had long groaned under was delightful enough to mitigate even the pain of separation from his father and sister. Fortunately for him he could not foresee the life which lay before him — a life full to its close of crosses and disappointments, and with so few joys!

Their first halting-place was Munich, where Mozart was at once in great demand as a performer, but was not successful in his efforts to obtain a permanent appointment. At Augsburg he visited J. Andreas Stein, the celebrated maker of organs and pianofortes, and both at his house and in the monastery of St. Ulric charmed all hearers by his playing. A concert, however, produced but a small sum. On 30 Oct. they reached Mannheim, where they stayed much longer than they had planned. The good prospects which at first seemed to open before them were not indeed realized; but the visit formed a decisive stage in Mozart's life. Under the Elector Karl Theodor, Mannheim possessed a good opera, with an orchestra containing virtuosi of the first rank, and at that time considered the first in Europe for instrumental music.¹ Mozart made great friends with Cannabich, an excellent conductor and good teacher, and gave pianoforte lessons to his daughter Rose, who for a time undoubtedly captured his heart. He also made the acquaintance of the poets Wieland² and Freiherr von Gemmingen, the composers Holzbauer³ and Schweitzer, Raaff the great tenor, Wendling, Ramm and Ritter, excellent performers on the flute, oboe and bassoon. Here also his playing, both on the pianoforte and the organ, was much admired, and he had opportunities of measuring himself with Sterkel and Vogler, neither of whom impressed him much. The latter, indeed, he positively disliked. Upon the failure of his attempts to gain admittance to the elector's establishment, Wendling, Ramm and Ritter tried to persuade him to accompany them to Paris and give concerts there. He was inclined to the plan, and his father agreed, though with reluctance; but when it came to the point he allowed his friends to start without him. The truth was he had again fallen in love, and this time more seriously. Aloysia, the second daughter of Fridolia Weber, prompter and copyist, was a gifted singer, with a fine voice and considerable beauty, and during an excursion to Kirchheim, where the Princess of Orange kept a private orchestra and had daily concerts, these qualities made a due impression upon Wolfgang. Aloysia returned his attachment and allowed him to teach her singing; and he, touched by the family's poverty, conceived the plan of taking her to Italy and there writing a new opera for her first appearance. So romantic a proposition drove his father nearly out of his senses. In such a case quick action was everything. Urging upon him the doubtful character of the plan, he used all his endeavours to tear him away from these dangerous surroundings:

Off with you to Paris, and that immediately! Take up your position among those who are really great — aut Caesar aut nihil! From Paris the name and fame of a man of talent spread throughout the world.

As for his Aloysia, he advised him to commend her to Raaff, who would not only be able to teach her, but whose good word would have great weight with impresarios. It was a hard struggle for Wolfgang, but his love for his father enabled him to defer to his authority, and the time for departure was fixed. Before leaving, however, he gave some concerts, at which he played, and produced both his compositions and his pupils; and now for the first time Mannheim became aware of what it was losing. Parting with the Webers was hard work: they all wept, and thanked him as their "greatest benefactor". At Mannheim he composed a Kyrie (K. 322), two soprano arias, one for Aloysia Weber (K. 294), the other for Dorothea Wendling (K. 486a), a tenor air for Raaff (K. 295), two songs (K. 307, 308); two flute Concertos (K. 313, 314), an Andante for flute (K. 315), a Quartet for flute and strings (K. 285)⁴, seven Sonatas for pianoforte and violin, partly composed in Paris (K. 296, 301-6), and two pianoforte Sonatas (K. 309, 311), his first mature works for piano solo. In all these works it is easy to trace the influence of the Mannheim school, especially evident in the sudden alternations of piano and forte.

Leaving Mannheim on 14 Mar. 1778, the travellers reached Paris on the 23rd. The father's anticipations did not in this instance prove correct: their old friend Grimm was still there, but by no means so devoted to their interests as he had been; the youth was not the same attraction as the marvellous boy had

¹ Although Mozart had heard (and had written for) the clarinet before he became acquainted with this orchestra, it was at Mannheim that he first learnt its value as an orchestral instrument.

² Mozart draws a very unflattering portrait of the poet in a letter to his father dated 27 Dec. 1777.

³ Holzbauer's 'Gunter von Schwarzburg', which Mozart heard during his stay, seems to have made a deep impression on him, for even in 'Die Zauberflöte' there are reminiscences of it.

⁴ Wyzewa and Saint-Foix (II, 404) assign to this period another flute Quartet (in G) printed in the Peters edition but not recorded in the first two editions of Köchel. (See 3rd ed., p. 982.)

been, and the musical world was absorbed in the Gluck and Piccinni controversy. Nor had they succeeded in obtaining from Vienna a recommendation to Marie-Antoinette. They were thus thrown upon their Mannheim friends and upon Count von Sickingen, to whom Gemmingen had given them an introduction. Wolfgang renewed his acquaintance with Piccinni, whom he had met in Italy, but they never got beyond the terms of ordinary courtesy: "I know my business, and he his — that is enough", writes Wolfgang. Gossec he calls "my very good friend, and an uncommonly dry man". There is no trace of any acquaintance with Grétry. Grimm procured him admittance to the Duc de Guines, who played the flute superbly, as Mozart says, and whose daughter was a skilful performer on the harp. Accordingly he had to compose a Concerto (K. 299) for these two instruments, for which, as solo instruments, he cared less than for any others. To the daughter he gave daily lessons in composition, and he had a few other lady pupils. But he was not given the opportunity of writing an opera. Noverre, ballet-master at the Opéra, promised to use his influence, which was great, in his favour; but all he did was to employ him to compose twelve pieces for his ballet 'Les Petits Riens'.¹ He composed a Sinfonie concertante (K. App. 9) for flute, oboe, horn and bassoon, at the request of Le Gros, director of the Concert Spirituel, but it was never performed.² Some airs in a Miserere by Holzbauer, produced at the Concert Spirituel without Mozart's name, passed unnoticed except by Gossec, who expressed great admiration. Le Gros afterwards ordered another symphony, which pleased greatly — the "Paris" or "French" Symphony in three movements (K. 297) — and at his request Mozart wrote a second Andante in place of the original one.

In the meantime his mother, who had never been well in Paris, became seriously ill and died in Wolfgang's arms on 3 July. With great thoughtfulness he wrote to their friend Bullinger to prepare his father for the sad news and then sent a letter direct. He felt he could not remain longer in Paris, and his father even urged his departure, especially as there was now some prospect for him at Salzburg, owing to the deaths of Adlgasser, the court organist, and Lolli, the old Kapellmeister. Moreover, the archbishop had promised to allow him to go anywhere to superintend the production of an opera, should he be commissioned to write one. His last few days in Paris were cheered by his old London friend, John Christian Bach, who had come over for the performance of his 'Amadis'. "His joy, and mine too, at meeting again, you can well imagine", he wrote to his father. With Bach came Tenducci, and the three spent a few pleasant days at the Maréchal de Noailles's château at Saint-Germain. Mozart wrote a scena for Tenducci,³ with accompaniment for pianoforte, oboe, horn and bassoon, and this was played by the maréchal's servants, who were all Germans. In addition to the works already mentioned, Mozart composed during his stay in Paris: an Overture for orchestra (K. App. 8?), a Quartet for flute and strings based on favourite airs of the day (K. 298), four sets of pf. Variations on popular French tunes (K. 264, 265, 353, 354), five pf. Sonatas (K. 310, 330-333), and two Sonatas for pianoforte and violin (K. 304, 306).

On 26 Sept. 1778 Mozart left Paris, still heavier at heart than he had entered it six months before, but displayed no haste in returning to his native town. He went by Nancy and Strasbourg, which he reached in the middle of Oct. Here he began three concerts, which produced much applause but little money, and played on Silbermann's two best organs in the New Church and St. Thomas. On 3 Nov. he started for Mannheim, although it was, as his father said, a foolish notion to go there when the court, the Webers and his best friends were all absent at Munich, and there was nothing for him to do. But it did him good to recall the old memories, and, as he said, "I love Mannheim and Mannheim loves me". Besides, he had some prospect of an engagement for an opera. Seyler's company was still at the theatre; they were indeed only an operetta company, but there was some talk of founding a German national opera. Here, too, Mozart saw two of Benda's melodramas, 'Medea' and 'Ariadne auf Naxos', and was so delighted with them that he willingly undertook to set Gemmingen's 'Semiramis' in the same fashion.⁴ Dalberg, director of the theatre, also had his eye upon Mozart for his opera 'Cora', although he was already in negotiation with Gluck and Schweitzer. However, all came to nothing, and his father, who had run into debt on his account and had, moreover, great hopes of seeing him well placed at Salzburg, put forth his authority to make him return: "You will start immediately on receipt of this". The son obeyed, and by 25 Dec. was at Munich;

³ Tenducci appears to have taken this composition with him to London. Burney (see Barrington's 'Miscellanies', p. 289) speaks of it as a masterpiece of invention and technique (Pohl's 'Mozart in London', p. 121). Unfortunately it has now completely disappeared.

¹ See K. App. 10.
² See his letter to his father, 5 Apr. 1778. The work is almost certainly the original version of the 'Sinfonia concertante' for oboe, clarinet, horn and bassoon, K. App. 9. But see Köchel, 3rd ed. p. 373, and a contemptuous reference by Sir Donald Tovey in his article on Mozart in the 'Encyclopædia Britannica' (14th ed.).

⁴ He took the libretto home with him to compose "gratuitously". "You see", he writes to his father, "how strong my liking for this kind of composition is." It is uncertain whether Mozart ever completed this work. See Jahn, II, 78; Abert, I, 752.

but his father, anxious lest he should be detained for good, and fearing the proximity of his beloved, did not let him rest there. Cannabich and Raaff were indeed "working for him hand and foot", but there was no need for anxiety on Aloysia's account. Her family welcomed him warmly, but she who "had wept for him" seemed now scarcely to remember him and was even displeased that he had altered the fashion of his clothes. Yet he again offered her his musical homage: this time a grand aria (K. 316) suited to her present capabilities, to words taken from Gluck's 'Alceste', and with oboe and bassoon obbligato parts intended for Ramm and Ritter. This air, begun in Paris, was his farewell to Aloysia Weber, about whom he wrote to his father in May 1781:

I did love her truly, and feel still that I am not indifferent to her; but luckily for me her husband is a jealous fool and never lets her go anywhere, so that I rarely see her.¹

In mourning for his mother, disappointed in his first love and with all his hopes falsified, Mozart returned in the middle of Jan. 1779 to the home of his childhood. In such circumstances the warmth with which he was received was doubly gratifying. A good many of his old friends were still there to rally round him, but nothing could overcome his dislike of Salzburg. Even the duties entailed by his position as Konzertmeister and organist to the court and cathedral² were fulfilled as an irksome task. His desire to write for the stage was rekindled by the presence of the dramatic companies directed by Böhm and Schikaneder. With Schikaneder Mozart was soon on excellent terms, and it was to oblige him that he refashioned and supplemented the music to Gebler's 'Thamos' which he had originally composed in 1773. To this period also belongs the uncompleted German opera, on a libretto by Schachtner, to which André afterwards gave the title of 'Zaide' (K. 344).³

During his stay at Salzburg in 1779-80 Mozart produced the following works: two Masses (K. 317, the 'Coronation Mass', and K. 337), a Kyrie (K. 323), two Vespers (K.

321, 339), among his best compositions, a 'Regina coeli' (K. 276); two Symphonies (K. 319, 338), an 'Overture-symphony' (K. 318), a Sinfonia concertante for violin and viola (K. 304), a Serenade (K. 320), a Divertimento for strings and two horns (K. 334), a Concerto for two pianofortes (K. 365) and three organ Sonatas (K. 328, 329, 336).

His next employment was most congenial. Through the exertions of his friends at Munich the grand opera for the Carnival of 1781 was put into his hands. The libretto was by Abbate Varesco, court chaplain at Salzburg, who consulted Mozart at every step, as he began the work at home. He went to Munich at the beginning of Nov., and at the very first rehearsals the music was highly approved by the elector and the performers. His father even wrote to him from Salzburg: "The universal subject of conversation here is your opera". The archbishop being in Vienna at the time, his father and sister were able to go to Munich for the first performance on 29 Jan. 1781. 'Idomeneo, rè di Creta', opera seria (K. 366; ballet music, K. 367), was enthusiastically received and decided once for all Mozart's position as a dramatic composer. During his stay at Munich he also wrote a Kyrie (K. 341), two concert airs for soprano (K. 368, 369), two songs with mandoline accompaniment (K. 349, 351) and a Quartet for oboe and strings for his friend Ramm (K. 370).

But while he was in the full enjoyment of the pleasures of the Carnival, into which he plunged as soon as his labours were over, he suddenly received a summons from the archbishop to join him in Vienna. He started immediately, and on 16 Mar. 1781, after a journey of four days, arrived "all by himself in a post-chaise"⁴ in Vienna, where he was to remain, save for a few brief excursions, for the rest of his life. His first experiences in the Austrian capital were not encouraging. He was made to live with the archbishop's household and dine at the servants' table — treatment in striking contrast to that he received from the aristocracy in general. The Countess Thun, "the most charming and attractive woman I have ever seen in my life", invited him to dinner, and so did vice-chancellor Count Cobenzl and others. The archbishop liked the prestige of appearing in society with Mozart, Ceccarelli and Brunetti as his domestic virtuosi, but did not allow Mozart either to play alone in any house but his own or to give a concert. He was obliged,

¹ She was engaged as prima donna in Vienna in 1780 and married Joseph Lange, the court actor. She acknowledged afterwards that as a young girl she had not appreciated Mozart as highly as she ought to have done, but she became a great admirer of his music and a true friend. She did not live happily with her husband, but their intercourse with Mozart was quite unconstrained. He composed for her in Vienna five more airs, and they gave mutual assistance at each others' concerts. Kelly 'Reminiscences', I, 253) admired her as a singer of the first rank. Her voice had an exceptionally high range.

² His father succeeded in getting him appointed successor to Adlgasser, with a salary of 450 florins (about £45).

³ It seems merely to want the overture and the concluding finale. André himself supplied these numbers for his edition. It is possible, however, that 'Zaide' was planned as a three-act opera. See Kochel, 3rd ed., p. 423. The score contains some of Mozart's most delightful music, and it is a pity that it is not better known.

⁴ Generally quoted as overture composed for Bianchi's 'Villanella rapita'. Mozart wrote a trio and a quartet for performance in this opera, but is not known to have written an overture; nor are there any grounds, apart from tradition, for connecting this Symphony with the opera.

⁵ Letter of 17 Mar. 1781.

however, to yield to the entreaties of the nobility and allow him to appear at the concert of the Tonkünstler-Societät. "I am so happy", Mozart exclaimed beforehand, and wrote to his father afterwards of his great success. At the archbishop's private concert, too, he excited the greatest enthusiasm, though he was often addressed in that very house as Gassenbube (street urchin). It was useless for his father to urge him to forbearance: he was determined not to remain in a position where he had such indignities to endure. The opportunity came only too soon. The archbishop, detested by the nobility and above all by the Emperor Joseph, did not receive an invitation to Laxenburg, the summer residence of the court, and in his disgust determined to leave Vienna. The household was to start first, but Mozart, "the villain, the low fellow", was turned out of the house before the others. He took lodgings with the Webers, who were living in the Petersplatz at a house called "zum Auge Gottes". At his next audience he was greeted with Lump, Lausbube and Fex (untranslatable terms of abuse). "None of his servants treated him so badly", continued the archbishop. "Your Grace is dissatisfied with me then?" said Mozart. "What! you dare to use threats?" (using all the time the contemptuous "Er"). "Fex! there is the door; I will have nothing more to do with such a vile wretch" (elenden Buben). "Nor I with you", retorted Mozart, and turned on his heel. Not having received an answer to his application for his discharge, Mozart drew up a fresh memorial, with which he presented himself in the ante-chamber of this prince of the church; but as a culmination to all the brutal treatment he had already received, Count Arco, the high-steward, addressed him as Flegel (boor), Bursch (fellow), etc., and kicked him out of the room. This took place on 8 June. Mozart was now free, though he had not received his formal dismissal. "I will never have anything more to do with Salzburg", he wrote to his father. "I hate the archbishop almost to fury." It was summer, the nobility were all going into the country, and there was no demand for either concerts or lessons. The Countess Rumbeck was his only pupil. Composition was, of course, his resource, and while thus employing his leisure, he fulfilled his long-cherished desire of writing an opera for the National Singspiel (German opera), founded by the emperor in 1778. The emperor interested himself in his favour, and he soon received a libretto to his taste. He was hurt, however, at finding himself passed over at the fêtes in honour of the Grand Duke Paul and his wife; even his Idomeneo had to give way to two operas of Gluck's. His contest with Clementi, in the presence of the emperor and the grand duchess on 24 Dec.¹, afforded him some slight compensation. He had previously (16 Nov.) played at the house of the Archduke Maximilian, who was very fond of him, though under the circumstances unable to do anything for him. It was probably during this winter that he first met Haydn², who visited the Viennese court to superintend the performance of the six Quartets (Op. 33) dedicated to the Grand Duke Paul. From this meeting dates a ten years' friendship which ceased only at Mozart's death and influenced for good the compositions of both masters. It is no coincidence that the greatest works of both were written after 1781. Haydn learned from Mozart a rounder phrase, a richer harmonization and a fuller command of the orchestra; Mozart learned from Haydn a wider range of structure and a gravity and dignity of expression which are particularly noticeable in his later symphonies. Amongst the works written by Mozart before the production of 'Die Entführung' may be mentioned four Sonatas and two sets of Variations for pf. and violin (K. 376, 377, 379, 380; K. 359, 360), two Serenades for wind instruments (K. 361, 375), the Sonata for two pianofortes (K. 448), the Prelude and Fugue for pianoforte in C (K. 394) and two sets of pianoforte Variations (K. 398, 352). In spite of unremitting intrigues his 'Entführung aus dem Serail' (K. 384), libretto by the younger Stephanie, based on a play by Bretzner, was produced by the emperor's express command, with great success, on 16 July 1782.³ Mozart was arranging it for wind-band when he received through his father a request for a serenade, to be composed in all haste for the Haffners of Salzburg. This is the work which was afterwards transformed by Mozart into the well-known Symphony in D (K. 385). He had forgotten all about it, and when he came to rearrange it was quite surprised to find how good it was. At the same time Mozart also composed the fine Serenade for wind instruments in C minor (K. 388), better known in an arrangement of it for string quintet (K. 406).

On the grand duke's second visit to Vienna in Oct. he attended Mozart's opera, which was still attracting "swarms of people"; the composer conducted in person, "to show himself the father of his own child". Prague soon produced it with great success — a foretaste of the many honours Mozart was to receive in that city.

¹ The theme of the sonata played by Clementi ('Euvres', VI, 1) on this occasion was utilized by Mozart in the overture to the 'Zauberflöte'.

² It is, however, just possible that the Haydn whom the Mozarts met at Augsburg in 1763 was the great Josef. See Schurig, 'L. Mozart: Reiseaufzeichnungen', pp. 22, 65.

³ 12 July, in Jahn (2nd Ger. ed.), I, 648, is wrong, as is also the alteration to 13 July in the Eng. trans. (II, 209). The emperor is reported to have said: "Too fine for our ears, my dear Mozart, and much too many notes", meaning that the accompaniments overpowered the voices. Mozart answered frankly: "Exactly as many notes as are necessary, your Majesty".

He found his new abode with the Webers very comfortable; but the world soon began to inquire whether he were not intending to marry one of the daughters. The report reached his father, who admonished him seriously; but Wolfgang solemnly declared that he was thinking of nothing of the kind, and to prove his statement took another lodging, in the Graben. Here, however, the want of the attentions to which he had been accustomed drove him to a new step, for which we soon find him preparing his father. "To my mind a bachelor lives only half a life", he writes, and hesitatingly names the object of his love. "But surely not a Weber? Yes, a Weber, Constanze, the third daughter." All attempts at dissuasion were vain; his resolution was fixed, and on 4 Aug., scarcely a month after the production of his opera, he led Constanze to the altar, at St. Stephen's. Bringing home his bride was his "Entführung aus dem Auge Gottes", as he told his friends. "As soon as we were married, my wife and I both began to weep; all present, even the priest, were touched at seeing us so moved, and wept too."

His marriage involved Mozart in innumerable troubles. With many good qualities his wife was a thoroughly bad manager, and this was the worst defect possible, since Mozart was naturally careless in money matters, and his life as a busy artist was an unfavourable one for economy. The young couple began house-keeping with next to nothing, and their resources were uncertain at the best. No wonder, then, that in six months they were in serious difficulties; and so it went on to the end. His friends, the worthy Puchberg especially, were always ready to come to his assistance, but they could not prevent his often being put to embarrassing and humiliating straits. Without even a prospect of a fixed appointment he was thrown back upon lessons and concerts. Pupils were scarce, but he was more fortunate as a virtuoso; and for the next few years he was constantly employed with concerts, his own and those of other artists, and still more in playing at the houses of the nobility. Lent and Advent were the regular concert seasons in Vienna. The emperor was frequently present, and always had a loud "bravo" for Mozart, speaking of him, too, at his own table "in the highest terms" as un talent décidé. This makes it all the more difficult to exonerate the monarch from the charge of yielding to the efforts of those immediately about him to prevent his bestowing some suitable post on Mozart. The latter writes on this subject to his father:

Countess Thun, Count Zichy, Baron van Swieten, even Prince Kaunitz, are all much vexed at the little value that the emperor puts on men of talent. Kaunitz said lately, when talking to the Archduke Maximilian about me, that men of that stamp only came into the world once in a hundred years, and that they ought not to be driven out of Germany, especially when, as good luck would have it, they were already in the capital.

After the success of his first concert in Lent 1782, Mozart entered into an engagement with Martin, who had instituted a series of concerts held in the winter at the Mehlgrube,¹ and removed in May to the Augarten², where Mozart played for the first time on 26 May. He afterwards joined the pianist Richter, who gave subscription concerts. Among the artists at whose concerts he appeared were the singers Laschi, Teyber and Storace, and his sister-in-law, Aloysia Lange.

His own subscription concerts, generally three or four, were held in the theatre, at the Mehlgrube or in the Trattnerhof and, being attended by the cream of nobility³, produced both honour and profit. The programme consisted chiefly, sometimes entirely, of his own compositions — a symphony, two pianoforte concertos, an orchestral piece with an obligato instrument, three or four airs and an improvised fantasy. The latter, in which he showed incomparable skill, always roused a perfect storm of applause. For each concert he composed a new pf. concerto, the greatest number and the best belonging to this time. With so much on his hands he might well say, when excusing himself to his sister for writing so seldom: "Has not a man without a kreutzer of fixed income enough to do and to think of day and night in a place like this?" A list he sent to his father of the concerts for 1784 will best show the request he was in. During six weeks (26 Feb. to 3 Apr.) he played five times at Prince Galitsin's, nine times at Count John Esterházy's, at three of Richter's concerts and five of his own.

Tired of waiting for an appointment, which must have been most trying to one of his excitable nature, Mozart seriously thought of going to London and Paris and began to practise himself in English and French. He had even written to Le Gros in Paris about engagements for the Concert Spirituel and the Concerts des Amateurs, but his father, horrified at the idea of a newly married man without resources thus wandering about the world, succeeded in putting a stop to the scheme. As a compensation for the postponement of one desire, he was able to fulfil another, that of presenting his young wife to his father. Starting after her recovery from her first confinement (17 June) they reached Salzburg at the end of July 1783.

¹ A very old building, with rooms in which balls and concerts were held. A flour-warehouse in the basement gave its name to the house. It is now the Hotel Kranz.

² See AUGARTEN.

³ In the list of his subscribers for 1784 we find, besides his regular patrons, Countess Thun, Baroness Waldstätten, Count Zichy, van Swieten, etc., the Duke of Württemberg, Princes Lichtenstein, Auersperg, Kaunitz, Lichnowsky, Lobkowitz, Paar, Palm and Schwarzenberg; the distinguished families of Bathany, Dietrichstein, Erdödy, Esterházy, Harrach, Herberstein, Keglewicz, Nostitz, Pálffy, Schaffgotsch, Stahrenberg and Waldstein; the Russian, Spanish, Sardinian, Dutch and Danish ambassadors; the eminent financiers Fries, Henickstein, Arenfeld, Bienenfeld, Ployer and Wetzlar; government officials of position and scientific men, such as Isidenczy, Bedekovich, Nevery, Braun, Greiner, Keess, Puffendorf, Born, Martini, Sonnenfels, etc.

Before his marriage Mozart had made a vow that if ever Constanze became his wife he would have a new Mass of his own composition performed at Salzburg. The work was nearly ready, and the missing numbers having been supplied from one of his older masses, this fine and broadly designed composition (K. 427)¹ was given at the end of Aug. in St. Peter's Church, Constanze herself singing the soprano part. Opera buffa having been reintroduced in Vienna, he began a new opera, 'L'oca del Cairo' (K. 422), but after some progress found the libretto (by Varesco) so wretched that he let it drop.² A second opera, 'Lo sposo deluso' (K. 430), only reached the fifth number, partly perhaps because he despaired of being able to produce it, as Sarti and Paisiello were then in Vienna, and the latter in particular was absorbing public attention with the triumph of his 'Il re Teodoro' (1784). In the meantime Mozart rendered a service of love to his friend Michael Haydn, who was incapacitated by illness from completing two duets for violin and viola for the archbishop. The archbishop had characteristically threatened to stop his Konzertmeister's salary, but Mozart came to the rescue and undertook to write the two pieces "with unmistakable pleasure". His friend retained his salary, and the archbishop received the duets (K. 423, 424) as Haydn's. Mozart also took an active interest in his father's pupils — Heinrich Marchand, a young violinist aged 12, his sister Margarethe, then 14, afterwards Mme Danzi, the well-known singer, and a child of 9, the daughter of Brochard the celebrated actor. He also became intimate with Maria Theresia Paradis, the blind pianist, who was then at Salzburg, and for whom he afterwards composed a Concerto (probably K. 456). The main object of his visit, however, was not fulfilled. It was only after long opposition that his father had unwillingly given his consent to his marriage, but Wolfgang hoped that his prejudice against Constanze would disappear on acquaintance; neither his father nor his sister, however, could ever reconcile themselves to the match.

Leaving Salzburg on 30 Oct. and stopping at Lambach for Mozart to play the organ in the Monastery, they found Count Thun waiting for them at Linz and stayed with him for some time, being treated with every consideration. For a concert which Mozart gave in the theatre, he composed in haste a new Symphony (K. 425).³

In 1785 the father returned his son's visit, staying with him in the Grosse Schulerstrasse (now No. 8) from 11 Feb. to 25 Apr. He was rejoiced to find the domestic arrangements and money matters for the time being in good order. He found a grandson too — "little Karl is very like your brother". Though not yet on thoroughly good terms with his son or his daughter-in-law, he derived all the old pleasure from Wolfgang's successes as an artist and listened with delight to his productions. He had come just at the right time, when concerts were succeeding each other as fast as possible and his son taking part in all, and at the first he attended his eyes filled with tears of happiness at Wolfgang's playing and compositions. The day after his arrival Wolfgang invited his friend Haydn and the two Barons Tinti, and his father wrote home⁴ a full account of this memorable evening. "Three new quartets were played", writes the happy father, the three [K. 428, 464, 465] he has added to those we already have [K. 387, 421, 458]; they are perhaps a trifle easier, but excellently composed. Herr Haydn said to me: "I declare to you before God as a man of honour that your son is the greatest composer that I know, either personally or by reputation; he has taste, and beyond that the most consummate knowledge of the art of composition".

In return for this avowal Mozart dedicated to Haydn, with a laudatory preface, these six Quartets, "the fruits of long and arduous toil". "It is but his due," he said, "for from Haydn I first learnt how to compose a quartet." The success of his pupil Marchand and the great progress of Aloysia Lange, both as a singer and actress, also afforded pleasure to Leopold Mozart. It is a significant fact that a man of his way of thinking should have joined the Freemasons, avowedly through his son's influence. This, however, was their last meeting, for soon after his return from Vienna his health began to fail, and on 28 May 1787 he ended a life which had been wholly consecrated to his children.

Since 1784 Mozart the son had been a member of the Viennese Masonic lodge "Zur Wohltätigkeit". His interest in the order was great; indeed he at one time thought of founding a society of his own to be called "Die Grotte", and had drawn up the rules. A letter to his father, during his illness, in ¹ Afterwards converted by Mozart into the cantata 'Davide penitente' (K. 469).

² It was completed by André, with a rondeau, quartet from 'Lo sposo deluso', finale from 'La villanella rapita', by Mozart, and was later adapted by Victor Wilder, Virgilio Mortari, Hans Redlich and others. For performance see OCA DEL CAIRO.

³ Dedicated to Count Thun and known as the 'Linz' Symphony. André imagined K. 444 to have been the one composed for this occasion, but this is a copy by Mozart of a work by Michael Haydn, to which he merely added a short introduction.

⁴ 16 Feb. 1785.

which he enlarges upon the true significance of death to a Mason, is a proof of the serious light in which he considered his obligations. His connection with the order also inspired many of his compositions. For it he wrote 'Gesellenreise' (K. 468), 'Maurerfreude' (K. 471), a short cantata, at the performance of which his father was present shortly before his death, the noble 'Maurerische Trauermusik' (K. 477) for strings and wind, a 'Lied', with chorus, and a chorus in three parts, both with organ (K. 483, 484), for the ceremony at the opening of the "Neugekrönte Hoffnung" lodge (by a decree of the Emperor Joseph) in 1785, and a short Cantata for tenor, with closing chorus (K. 623), composed 15 Nov. 1791, the last of his recorded works which he conducted himself. A short Adagio for two basset horns and bassoon (K. 410), an Adagio for two clarinets and three basset horns (K. 411) and two Cantatas (K. 429, 619) were also probably intended for Masonic use.

In Mar. 1785 Mozart produced at the concert of the Tonkünstler-Societät the cantata 'Davide penitente' (K. 469), the materials for which, as mentioned above, he drew from his last unfinished Mass (K. 427), writing the Italian words below the Latin, and adding two new airs.

After a long delay he was again gratified by an opportunity of writing for the stage. An opera buffa had been organized as far back as Apr. 1783, and the emperor had secured an excellent company¹; and after a failure the National-Singspiel had been revived in Oct. 1785. A libretto, 'Rudolf von Habsburg', sent to Mozart from Mannheim, remained unused, but at length he and Salieri were requested to supply German and Italian pièces de circonstance for some fêtes in honour of distinguished visitors to Schönbrunn. To Mozart's lot fell 'Der Schauspieldirector' (K. 486), a one-act burlesque of operatic life by Stephanie the younger, produced at Schönbrunn, 7 Feb. 1786 and afterwards at the Kärntnertor Theatre.²

In the next month a gratifying performance of 'Idomeneo' took place at the palace of Prince Auersperg, by a cast of titled and efficient performers, under Mozart's own supervision.³ This mark of the favourable disposition of the aristocracy towards him bore fruit, attracting the attention of Lorenzo da Ponte, the well-known dramatist. His proposal to adapt Beaumarchais's 'Mariage de Figaro' for Mozart received the emperor's consent — reluctantly given on account of the political implications of the original plot — and the first performance of 'Le nozze di Figaro' (K. 492) took place after violent intrigues, on 1 May 1786. The theatre was crowded and the audience enthusiastic; several numbers were repeated, others sung as many as three times, and this went on at succeeding performances till the emperor prohibited encores.⁴ Kelly, who took the parts of Basilio and Don Curzio, writes with great spirit:

Never was anything more complete than the triumph of Mozart, and his 'Nozze di Figaro,' to which numerous overflowing audiences bore witness. Even at the first full band rehearsal, all present were roused to enthusiasm, and when Benucci came to the fine passage, "Cherubino, alla vittoria, alla gloria militar", which he gave with stentorian lungs, the effect was electric, for the whole of the performers on the stage, and those in the orchestra, as if actuated by one feeling of delight, vociferated "Bravo! Bravo, Maestro! Viva, viva, grande Mozart!" Those in the orchestra I thought would never have ceased applauding, by beating the bows of their violins against the music desks.

And Mozart?

I never shall forget his little animated countenance when lighted up with the glowing rays of genius; — it is as impossible to describe it, as it would be to paint sunbeams.⁵

And yet, after all this success, nothing was done for him. Earning a living by giving lessons and playing in public was in every respect unsatisfactory. "You lucky man," he said to young Gyrowetz as he was starting for Italy, "and I am still obliged to give lessons to earn a trifle." Moreover, he soon found himself eclipsed on the stage by two new pieces, which for a time absorbed the public entirely: Dittersdorf's Singspiel 'Doctor und Apotheker' (11 July) and Martin's 'Una cosa rara' (17 Nov.). Again he resolved to go to England, and was again dissuaded by his father. A gleam of light came, however, from Prague, whither he was invited to see for himself the immense success of his 'Figaro', which, like 'Die Entführung', had been produced there immediately after its performance at Vienna. Count Johann Joseph Thun, one of the greatest amateurs in Prague, placed his house at Mozart's disposal, and he joyfully accepted the invitation. His first letter⁶ gives a vivid picture of what he found at Prague: "the one subject of conversation here is — Figaro; nothing is played, sung or whistled but — Figaro; nobody goes to any opera but — Figaro; everlastingly Figaro!" He was literally overwhelmed with attentions and felt himself at the summit of bliss; at the opera, ¹ Including three English singers, Nancy Storace, her brother Stephen and the tenor Michael Kelly.

² See R. Hirsch: 'Mozart's Schauspieldirector' (1859). This Singspiel was given several times with a new libretto and several interpolations. A later attempt by Schneider (1861), introducing both Mozart and Schikaneder, was particularly unfortunate, but some adaptation of the topical and long-winded dialogue is clearly necessary.

³ He composed for it a new duet for soprano and tenor (K. 489) and a rondo for soprano with violin solo (K. 490).

⁴ Kelly relates ('Reminiscences', I, 262): "When the singers were one day rehearsing, the emperor said, 'I dare say you are all pleased that I have desired there shall be no more encores'. To which they all bowed assent, but Kelly said boldly, 'Do not believe them, Sire, they all like to be encored, at least I am sure I always do.'"

⁵ Ibid., I, 258, 259.

⁶ To his friend Gottfried von Jacquin, 15 Jan. 1787.

which was given quite to his satisfaction, he received a perfect ovation. Furthermore, two concerts were brilliantly successful; at the first, his new Symphony (K. 504) having been loudly applauded, he sat down to the piano and improvised for fully half an hour, rousing the audience to the highest pitch of enthusiasm. Again and yet once again he had to resume, till, obeying the general acclamation, he finished by extemporising variations on "Non più andrai", which completed his triumph. The receipts also were thoroughly satisfactory. He chanced to let fall the remark that he should like to compose an opera for so intelligent and appreciative a public, whereupon the impresario Bondini at once took him at his word and concluded a contract with him for an opera for the ensuing season, for which he was to receive the usual fee of 100 ducats. The distractions of society in Prague took up all his time, and his only compositions while there were nine Country Dances for orchestra (K. 510)¹ written for Count Pachtá, who locked him in for an hour before dinner for the purpose, and six German Dances for full orchestra (K. 509).

On his return to Vienna after this magnificent reception, he felt his position more galling than ever; and his desire to visit England was rekindled by the departure of his friends Nancy Storace and her brother, Kelly and his pupil Attwood, who promised to endeavour to secure him some position there, so that he would be able to go without undue risk.

The libretto of 'Figaro' having proved so satisfactory, Mozart applied again to da Ponte, and this time their choice fell upon an opera on the Don Juan legend. In Sept. 1787 Mozart and his wife went to Prague and took lodgings at "The Three Lions". But his favourite resort was the vineyard of his friend Dušek near the city, where are still shown his room and the stone table at which he used to sit working at his score, often in the midst of conversation or skittle-playing.² Before the production of his new opera Mozart conducted a festival performance of 'Figaro' on 14 Oct., in honour of the Archduchess Maria Theresa, bride of Prince Anton of Saxony. He was very anxious about the success of 'Don Giovanni', although, as he assured Kucharz, the conductor of the orchestra, he had spared neither pains nor labour in order to produce something really good for Prague. On the evening before the production the overture was still wanting, and he worked at it far into the night, while his wife kept him supplied with punch and told him fairy stories to keep him awake.³ Sleep, however, overcame him, and he was obliged to rest for a few hours; but at seven in the morning the copyist received the score, and it was played at sight in the evening. This first performance of 'Don Giovanni' (K. 527) took place on 29 Oct. 1787. On Mozart's appearance in the orchestra he was greeted with enthusiastic applause and a triple flourish of trumpets, and the opera was accompanied from beginning to end with rapturous marks of approval. He had of course no time for other compositions, but his friend Josepha Dušek locked him into her summer-house to ensure his writing an aria he had promised her. He revenged himself by making it difficult, and would only give it her on condition that she should sing it at sight. It is one of his finest airs, 'Bella mia fiamma' (K. 528).

About the time of his return to Vienna Gluck died (15 Nov. 1787), and Mozart had reason to hope that some suitable position would now be open to him.⁴ But the emperor was in no hurry. By way, however, of recognizing his recent triumph at Prague, and in order to retain him in Vienna (his hankering after England being well known), he appointed him Kammercompositeur with a salary of 800 florins⁵ (about £80). Mozart looked upon this appointment as a mere beggar's dole, and when, according to custom, he had to send in a sealed letter stating his income, he wrote bitterly "Too much for what I produce⁶; too little for what I could produce". 'Don Giovanni' was not given in Vienna till 7 May 1788, and then did not please.⁷ Mozart added a new air for Elvira ("Mi tradi"), another for Ottavio ("Dalla sua pace") and a duet for Zerlina and Leporello.

In spite of the success of his last opera, Mozart's pecuniary condition continued desperate. This is shown convincingly by a letter (27 June) to his friend Puchberg, in which he begs piteously for a loan and speaks of gloomy thoughts which he must repel with all his might. And yet at the very height of his distress he manifests extraordinary power. Besides other compositions, he wrote within six weeks (26 June to 10 Aug.) his three last and finest Symphonies, in E \flat , G minor and C ("Jupiter") (K. 543, 550, 551). But other very congenial work awaited him. From the ¹ Unless this is also a fairy story. Various conflicting accounts of the composition of the overture have been preserved. See, e.g., Dent, 'Mozart's Operas', pp. 190, 191.

² Gluck had been Kammercompositeur to Maria Theresa since 7 Oct. 1774.

³ His father did not live to see the partial realization of his hopes; he had died, as already stated, on 28 May.

⁴ Viz. the dances for the imperial balls, which it was his duty to supply.

⁵ According to da Ponte, the emperor said: "The opera is divine, finer perhaps than 'Figaro', but it is not the meat for my Viennese". When the saying was reported to Mozart he replied: "We must give them time to chew it".

¹ There is, however, some doubt whether the dances listed by Köchel as No. 510 are those written for Count Pachtá or are even Mozart's work at all. They are now classed as spurious in the 3rd ed. of Köchel (p. 906).

² The villa is now called Bertramka. A bust of Mozart, by Seidan, was placed on a slight eminence in the grounds and solemnly unveiled on 3 June 1876 by the then owner, Lambert Popelka.

beginning of his life in Vienna he had been acquainted with Gottfried van Swieten, director of the Court Library, who was a great amateur of classical music, and who with a small band of friends devoted every Sunday morning to studying the works of the old masters. He himself sang the treble¹, Mozart (who sat at the piano) the alto and Starzer and Teyber tenor and bass. It was for these practices that Mozart sent for his manuscript book of pieces by Michael Haydn and Eberlin, and afterwards for the fugues of Bach and Handel.

By 1788, however, van Swieten's practices had assumed larger proportions. At his instigation a number of gentlemen united to provide the necessary funds for performances of oratorios with chorus and orchestra. The fine large hall of the Court Library served as their concert-room, Mozart conducted and young Weigl took the pianoforte. It was for these performances that Mozart added wind parts to Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' (Nov. 1788), 'Messiah' (Mar. 1789), 'Ode to St. Cecilia's Day' and 'Alexander's Feast' (July 1790).²

The wholeheartedness with which Mozart threw himself into the study of these older masters and strove to assimilate their style is shown not merely by the numerous contrapuntal sketches by him that have been preserved, but also by various compositions in which he took them for his model. Of these the most important are a Prelude and Fugue for pianoforte in C major (K. 394), a Fugue in C minor for two pianofortes (K. 426), afterwards arranged for string quartet and provided with an introductory Adagio (K. 546), a Suite for pianoforte in the Handelian style (K. 399)³ and a Fugue for pianoforte in G minor (K. 401). These were, however, only the more obvious fruits of his new studies, the influence of which can be traced no less certainly in almost everything he wrote from 1782 till his death in 1791.

Such work as this, however, did nothing to improve his pecuniary condition; and in the hope that the journey might bring to light some means of extricating himself, he gratefully accepted an invitation from his pupil and patron, Prince Karl Lichnowsky, to accompany him to Berlin.

Leaving Vienna on 8 Apr. 1789, they made Dresden their first halting-place worth noting, and there Mozart played at court, exciting great admiration and receiving 100 ducats.

¹ Diskant. Mozart's letter, 12 Mar. 1789.

² The "arrangement" of 'Judas Maccabæus', sometimes attributed to Mozart, was really the work of Starzer. As to the public adoption of these additional accompaniments in England, see Mus. T., 1899, p. 18. Of the beauty of Mozart's additions, in most instances, there can be no question; but they are not always faithful to the spirit of Handel's work. In recent years 'Messiah', at any rate, has often been performed with Handel's original instrumentation.

³ An incomplete Sarabande is the last movement of this unfinished Suite.

He was well received also in private circles, and the general interest was increased by a competition with J. W. Hässler of Erfurt, then distinguished as pianist and organist.⁴ Without considering him a formidable opponent, Mozart acknowledged his talent. Here also he made the acquaintance of the poet Körner and his sister-in-law Doris Stock, who drew a charming portrait of Mozart in silver-point. He produced a still greater effect at Leipzig, where he made the acquaintance of Rochlitz, who has preserved innumerable interesting traits both of the man and the artist.⁵ On 22 Apr. he played the organ in the St. Thomas Church, Doles the cantor and Görner the organist pulling out the stops for him. All present were enchanted, especially Doles, who could almost have believed in the restoration to life of his teacher, the great Bach himself. In return he made the choir of the Thomas School sing Bach's 8-part motet 'Singet dem Herrn', at which Mozart exclaimed with delight: "Here is something from which one may still learn", and having secured the parts of the other motets (no score being at hand), spread them out before him and became absorbed in study.

On their arrival in Berlin the travellers went straight to Potsdam, where Prince Lichnowsky presented Mozart to the king, who had been anxiously expecting him. Frederick William II was musical, played the violoncello well (he was a pupil of the elder Duport) and had a well-selected orchestra. The opera was conducted by Reichardt and the concerts by Duport. The king's favourable anticipations were fully realized in Mozart, but Reichardt and Duport were set against him by his candidly replying to the king's question what he thought of the band: "It contains great virtuosi, but if the gentlemen would play together, they would make a better effect".

On 8 May Mozart returned for a while to Leipzig, where, on the 12th, he gave a public concert. The programme consisted entirely of his own unpublished compositions, and at the close he improvised by general request; but the audience was a scanty one. For Engel, the court organist, he composed a charming little Gigue for pianoforte (K. 574). Returning to Berlin on 19 May, he rushed to the theatre, where his 'Entführung' was being performed and, taking a seat near the orchestra, made observations in a half-audible tone; the second violins, however, playing D# instead of D, he called out: "Confound it, do take D!", and was recognized immediately. He was much ⁴ Hässler played a concerto of Mozart's at his concert in London, 30 May 1792. See Pohl's 'Haydn in London', pt. 2, p. 200.

⁵ In a series of articles in the A.M.Z. (1797-1802), subsequently reprinted in his 'Für Freunde der Tonkunst'. Unfortunately Rochlitz was a born romancer and must be read with caution.

pleased to meet his pupil Hummel, who only became aware while playing of his master's presence at his concert. This time Mozart played before the queen, but gave no public performance. The king sent him 100 Friedrichs d'or and asked him to compose some quartets for him. As to the pecuniary results of the tour, Mozart wrote laconically to his wife: "On my return you must be glad to have me, and not think about money". The story goes that before Mozart left Potsdam the king offered him the post of Kapellmeister at a salary of 3000 thalers (about £600), but that the composer refused the offer, replying with emotion: "How could I desert my good Emperor?" There is, however, every ground for believing that this story is a pure invention.¹ The musical outcome of the tour was even slighter. Apart from the little Gigue already mentioned the only work Mozart composed during his visit was the pianoforte Variations on a theme by Duport (K. 573). He started on his homeward journey on 28 May and, passing through Dresden and Prague, reached Vienna on 4 June 1789. He set to work immediately on the first Quartet (K. 575) for the King of Prussia, and received a kind letter of thanks, with a gold snuff-box and a second sum of 100 Friedrichs d'or. Two others (K. 589, 590) followed in May and June 1790.

His position still continued a most melancholy one, his wife's constant illnesses adding to his expenses. Again he applied to his friend and brother Freemason Puchberg "for immediate assistance. I am still most unfortunate! Always hovering between hope and anxiety!" On 29 Aug. 'Figaro' was revived² after a long interval, and it was no doubt the success of the revival that induced the emperor to order a new opera, for which da Ponte again furnished the libretto (said to have been founded on recent occurrences in Vienna). This was the opera buffa 'Così fan tutte' (K. 588), produced 26 Jan. 1790, but soon interrupted by the emperor's serious illness, terminating in death on 20 Feb. Musicians had little to expect from his successor, Leopold II, and there was no break in the clouds which overshadowed Mozart. The rough draft is still preserved of an application for the post of second Kapellmeister, but he did not obtain it. The magistrate did indeed grant (9 May 1791) his request to be appointed assistant, "without pay for the present", to the cathedral Kapellmeister, which gave him the right to succeed to this lucrative post on the death of Hoffmann, the Kapellmeister; but Hoffmann outlived him.

The coronation of the Emperor Leopold at Frankfort on 9 Oct. was the occasion of his last artistic tour. Having pawned his plate to procure funds, he started on 23 Sept. and after a journey of six days reached the ancient Reichstadt. He gave a concert on 15 Oct., in the municipal theatre, the programme consisting entirely of his own compositions. On the return journey he visited Mainz, Mannheim and Munich. At Munich, at the elector's request, he played at a court concert given in honour of the King of Naples. He had not been invited to play before the latter in Vienna and he wrote to his wife with some bitterness: "It sounds well for the court of Vienna, that members of their own family should hear me for the first time at a foreign court!" Soon after his return to Vienna, Mozart had to take leave of his best friend, for Salomon, the impresario, had come in person to carry Haydn off to London.³ With a heavy heart he said good-bye to the only artist who understood him thoroughly and honestly wished to see him prosper. They were never to meet again.

The year 1790 was a critical period in Mozart's life. The previous nine years, with all their hardships, had been for him one prolonged spell of creative activity, during which he had written nearly 200 compositions of the most varied character. It has not been possible to mention more than a few of these in the course of the preceding narrative; of the remainder the following are, perhaps, the most important: the great series of pf. concertos (K. 413-415, 449-451, 453, 456, 459, 466, 467, 482, 488, 491, 503, 537), two Symphonies, in C (K. 425) and in D (K. 504), two Serenades (K. 361, 375), two string Quintets, in C (K. 515) and G minor (K. 516); the Serenade for strings in G ('Eine kleine Nachtmusik', K. 525); a "musical joke" for strings and two horns (K. 522); the Quintet for pianoforte and wind (K. 452), two pianoforte Quartets (K. 478, 493), a string Quartet in D (K. 499), the E♭ Divertimento for string trio (K. 563), the clarinet Trio (K. 498) and Quintet (K. 581), the pianoforte Trio in E (K. 542), the violin Sonatas in B♭ (K. 454) and A (K. 526), the Sonata for two pianofortes (K. 448), of other pianoforte works the duet in F (K. 497), the Sonatas in C minor (K. 457), with the Fantasy (K. 475) afterwards associated with it, and in D (K. 576), the Allegro and Andante in F (K. 533), an Adagio (K. 540), a Rondo (K. 511) and two sets of Variations (K. 455, 460), the aria for soprano 'Bella mia fiamma' (K. 528) and, last but not least, the song 'Das Veilchen' (K. 476). Towards the end of 1789 the strain seems already to have begun to tell, and in 1790 there is a marked falling off in the number of Mozart's compositions, the most important work, apart from 'Così

¹ See Abert, I, 1004, 1005.

² Mozart composed two new airs (K. 577, 579) for Adriana Ferrarese del Bene, who sang Susanna. The first, "Al desio", was not intended for the Countess, although it seems to suit her character rather than Susanna's.

³ He made preliminary offers of a similar kind to Mozart.

fan tutte', which was written mainly in 1789, being the Quintet in D major (K. 593), which was completed in Dec. In 1791 Mozart's affairs were, if anything, worse than ever, but he seems to have spurred himself to a final effort, with the result that the last year of his life is one of the most prolific periods in his whole career, and musically one of the most interesting. Apart from his last two operas and the Requiem, he wrote the string Quintet in E \flat (K. 614), Adagios for two basset horns and bassoon (K. 410) and for two clarinets and three bassoons (K. 411), an Adagio and Rondo for harmonica, flute, oboe, violin and violoncello (K. 617), an Adagio for harmonica solo (K. 356), three compositions for a mechanical organ (K. 594, 608, 616), his last pianoforte Concerto (K. 595), the clarinet Concerto (K. 622), a set of pianoforte Variations (K. 613) and a Minuet for pianoforte (K. 355), three songs (K. 596-598), a bass air with obbligato double bass and orchestra (K. 612), two masonic cantatas (K. 619, 623), the motet 'Ave, verum corpus' (K. 618) and a few compositions of less importance, including the inevitable dance music for the court.

In Mar. Emanuel Schikaneder, the Salzburg acquaintance of 1780, now manager of a little theatre in the grounds of Prince Starhemberg's house in the suburb of Wieden, invited Mozart to compose a magic opera to a libretto he had himself written. This was 'Die Zauberflöte'. Mozart, after some hesitation as to his fitness for the task, finally agreed and set to work on the score, the greater part of which was written in a little pavilion¹ near the theatre and in a summer-house in the little village of Josefsdorf, on the Kahlenberg, close to Vienna. To keep him in good humour, Schikaneder provided him with wine and amusing society — his enjoyment of which good things, grossly exaggerated, has tended more than anything to throw discredit upon his character.

In July, while hard at work, he received a visit from a stranger, who, enjoining secrecy, commissioned him to write a Requiem for an unknown individual.² The price (50 or, according to some, 100 ducats) was fixed, and Mozart set to work with the more ardour in that he had composed no church music since the Mass of 1783. But once more he was interrupted, this time by an urgent invitation from the Estates of Bohemia to compose an opera for the approaching coronation of Leopold II at Prague. Mozart was on the point of stepping into the travelling carriage when the mysterious messenger suddenly stood before him and asked what had become of the Requiem. Touched and distressed by the question, Mozart assured the man that he would do his best on his return; and so saying, departed with his pupil Sussmayr. He worked hard at the opera during the journey, Sussmayr filling in the recitativo secco. The coronation took place on 6 Sept., and 'La clemenza di Tito' (K. 621) was performed the same evening in the National Theatre, in presence of their majesties and a select audience, who were too much absorbed by the occurrences of the day to pay great attention to the opera. Indeed, the empress is said to have made very disparaging remarks on the porcheria of German music. Mozart, who was not well when he came to Prague, suffering severely from the strain, but he spent a few pleasant hours with his friends and parted from them with tears.

Disappointed and suffering he reached home in the middle of Sept. and at once set to work with energy at Schikaneder's opera. The overture and introductory march to the second act were finished on 28 Sept., and two days later, on the 30th, 'Die Zauberflöte' (K. 620) was given for the first time. Mozart conducted at the piano, Sussmayr turned over for him, and Henneberg, who had conducted the rehearsals, played the bells. It was coldly received at the outset, and at the end of the first act Mozart, looking pale and agitated, went on the stage to Schikaneder, who endeavoured to comfort him.³ The audience recovered from their coldness so far as to call for Mozart at the close, but he was with difficulty persuaded to appear before the curtain. The interest in the opera increased, however, with each performance, and soon the 'Zauberflöte' was as great a draw as Schikaneder could desire.

Mozart now hoped to be able to devote his whole time to the Requiem, but his late exertions and excitement had proved too much for him, sorely tried as he was in other respects. Fainting fits came on, and he fell into a state of deep depression. His wife tried in vain to raise his spirits. During a drive in the Prater he suddenly began to talk of death and said with tears in his eyes that he was writing the Requiem for himself. "I feel certain", he continued, "that I shall not be here long; someone has poisoned me, I am convinced. I cannot shake off the idea."⁴ By the advice of ¹ Schenk, in his MS autobiography, tells how he had a place in the orchestra at the first performance and was so enchanted with the overture that he crept up to the conductor's chair, seized Mozart's hand and kissed it. Mozart, putting out his right hand, looked kindly at him and stroked his cheek.

² It is notorious that Salieri was very much suspected, but he indignantly repudiated the accusation. His own words (reported by Niemtschek, p. 81) prove that he was not displeased at Mozart's death: "It is indeed a pity to lose so great a genius, but his death is a good thing for us. If he had lived longer, not a soul would have given us a bit of bread for our compositions." The

¹ Now on the Kapuzinerberg at Salzburg, a gift from Prince Starhemberg.

² Proved after his death to have been Count Walsegg, an amateur anxious to be thought a great composer, who had the Requiem performed under his own name. The messenger was his steward Leutgeb.

his physicians his terrified wife took the score away from him, and he rallied sufficiently to compose on 15 Nov. a Cantata (K. 623) for his lodge to words by Schikaneder. He even conducted the performance himself; but the improvement was of short duration, and he took to his bed. Now, when it was too late, favourable prospects opened before him. He was informed that some of the nobility of Hungary had clubbed together to guarantee him a yearly sum, and at the same time a subscription was got up in Amsterdam, for which he was to furnish compositions to become the property of the subscribers. When the hour for the theatre arrived, he would follow in imagination the performance of the 'Zauberflöte', and the Requiem continued to occupy his mind. On 4 Dec. he had the score brought to him in bed and tried a passage, singing the alto himself, while his brother-in-law Hofer took the tenor, and Schack and Gerl from the theatre the soprano and bass. When they got to the first few bars of the "Lacrimosa", it suddenly came home to him that he should never finish it, and he burst out crying, putting away the score. In the evening Süssmayr came in, and he gave him some directions about the Requiem, with which his thoughts seemed constantly occupied, for even while dozing he puffed out his cheeks as if trying to imitate the drums. Towards midnight he suddenly sat up with his eyes fixed; then he turned his head on one side and appeared to fall asleep. By 1 o'clock in the morning of 5 Dec. 1791 his spirit had fled. He died of malignant typhus fever.¹ At three o'clock in the afternoon of the 6th his body was removed to St. Stephen's; the service was held in the open air, as was the custom with the poorest class of funeral, and van Swieten, Süssmayr, Salieri, Deiner, Roser and Orsler stood round the bier. They followed as far as the city gates and then turned back, as a violent storm was raging, and the hearse went its way, unaccompanied, to the churchyard of St. Marx. Thus, without a note of music, forsaken by all he held dear, the remains answer given to the accusation by Salieri's friend, Kapellmeister Schwanenberg, was, to say the least of it, remarkable: "Pazzi! non ha fatto niente per meritar un tal onore". ("Fools! what has he done to deserve so great an honour?") This legend is the subject of a powerful little sketch by Pushkin which was set to music by Rimsky-Korsakov and was made famous by Shalypin's performance as Salieri.

¹ The official certificate gives ein hitziges Frieselfieber as the cause of death, and Schiedermaier (p. 469) quotes a remarkable passage from an unpublished diary by Karl Bursy which seems to support this diagnosis. Dr. J. Barraud, however, in his study, 'De quoi est mort Mozart?' ('Chronique médicale', 1905; reprinted in his 'Promenade d'un médecin à travers l'histoire', 1906) unhesitatingly rejects it. His opinion is that Mozart's death was the result of a complete collapse of the system, brought on by prolonged overwork, and culminating in some kind of nephritis. There is no ground for the oft-repeated assertion that Mozart died of consumption. A recent attempt at diagnosis suggests uraemia.

of this prince of harmony were committed to the earth — not even in a grave of his own, but in the common pauper's grave.²

PERSONALIA AND PORTRAITS. — Mozart was short, but slim and well-proportioned, with small feet and good hands. As a young man he was thin, and it was then that the prominence of his nose was most noticeable; later in life he became much stouter. His head was somewhat large in proportion to his body, and he had a profusion of fine hair, of which he was rather vain. His large blue eyes were well-formed, with fine eyebrows and lashes, but as a rule they looked languid, and his gaze was restless and absent. His general appearance was perhaps somewhat insignificant, and it was partly for this reason, no doubt, that he was very particular about his clothes and wore a good deal of embroidery and jewellery. When playing, however, he appeared completely different. His countenance changed, his eye settled at once into a steady calm gaze, and every movement of his muscles conveyed the sentiment expressed in his playing.

Of the numerous portraits that tradition has associated with Mozart's name only a few are of indisputable authenticity. These, together with one or two which have some claims to be considered genuine, are set out in the following list:³

1. 1762. An oil painting, by an unknown artist, representing the composer in the Archduke Maximilian's gold-laced suit, given him by the empress. This now hangs in the Mozart Museum.

2. 1763. A small family picture in water-colour painted by Carmontelle in Paris. Mozart is seated at the harpsichord, presumably accompanying his sister, who is singing. Leopold stands behind his son with his violin, possibly playing an obbligato accompaniment. The picture is preserved in several replicas, one of which is now in the National Gallery.⁴ It was engraved by Delafosse⁵, and has been frequently reproduced since. In H. de Curzon's second book on Mozart (Paris, 1938) there is published what purports to be the original sketch for this picture. Its authenticity seems very doubtful.

3. 1763 or 1766. An oil painting by M. B. Ollivier, now hanging in the Louvre. It represents a tea-party in Prince Conti's salon, with Mozart — a very tiny figure —

² By van Swieten's orders the strictest economy was observed in the funeral arrangements. The site of the actual grave was soon forgotten; but the city of Vienna erected on the probable spot a handsome monument by Hans Gasser, solemnly unveiled on the anniversary of Mozart's death, 5 Dec. 1859.

³ For further information see Vol. II, of Schurig's biography (2nd ed.), pp. 441-52, the same author's 'Leopold Mozart: Reiseaufzeichnungen', pp. 83-97, and two excellent papers by E. Speyer, one ('Mozart at the National Gallery') in the 'Burlington Magazine' for Mar. 1916 and the other ('Some Notes on the Iconography of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart') in M.Q. for Apr. 1919. The detailed article by Emil Vogel in the 'Jahrbuch der Musikbibliothek Peters für 1899' is still of value. With the exception of No. 6 all the portraits here mentioned are reproduced in Schurig's biography, and the majority of them in the 5th vol. of L. Schiedermaier's ed. of the letters.

⁴ Reproduced in the 'Burlington Magazine', Mar. 1916. Another is preserved in the Musée Chantilly, and there are at least two versions in private collections in England.

⁵ It is curious that Leopold Mozart in a letter dated 1 Apr. 1764, explicitly states that the portrait was being engraved by "M. de Mechel" (Christian von Mechel, 1736-1813).

playing at the harpsichord. It was first exhibited at the Salon of 1777. This suggests that it may not after all have been done from life.

4. 1764-65? A portrait of the young Mozart with a bird's nest in his hand, possibly by Zoffany and painted during the Mozarts' visit to London, as Zoffany's name is mentioned in Leopold Mozart's diary among the notabilities whose acquaintance he made there. The portrait, which was formerly in an English collection, was acquired in 1924 by the Salzburg Mozart-Gemeinde. The best authorities now hold that this is neither a Zoffany nor a portrait of Mozart.

5. 1770. A portrait painted at Verona, now in the possession of M. Alfred Cortot in Paris. Leopold Mozart mentions "Sgr. Cignaroli, Pittore" in the list of his acquaintance at Verona. The portrait is generally ascribed to one of several painters of that name.

6. 1770. A portrait-group by an unknown artist, painted on the occasion of Mozart's reception into the Accademia Filarmonica di Bologna (9 Oct. 1770). The composer is shown exhibiting a contrapuntal exercise to a nobleman (? Count Baldassare Carrati) in the presence of a third person in clerical dress (? Petronio Lanzi, the maestro di cappella of the Academy). This picture remained unknown until 1925, when it was discovered in the shop of a dealer at Bologna, among a number of canvases purchased from the Municipality, and said to have been formerly in the possession of the Liceo Musicale.¹ It has also been severely handled by the critics. It is reassuring to know that the anaemic young man shown in it is not Mozart.

7. 1771? A three-quarter length oil painting, by an unknown artist, representing Wolfgang wearing his diamond ring. This portrait, which has been in the possession of the Salzburg family of Heinrich von Brunfeld ever since Mozart's own day, is said to have been painted at Salzburg in 1771.²

8. 1773? An ivory miniature, formerly in the possession of Mozart's sister. It was possibly painted by Martin Knoller, who is mentioned by Leopold in a letter dated 13 Feb. 1773, during the composer's stay at Milan.

9. 1777. A portrait in oils representing Mozart as a Knight of the Golden Spur. It was painted at Salzburg for Padre Martini, and is now in the possession of the Liceo Musicale at Bologna.

10. 1777. An ivory miniature, painted at Mannheim in Nov. 1777 and presented by Mozart to his cousin Maria Anna Thelia Mozart (the "Basle" of his letters). It is now in the possession of Frau Justizrat Marie Vogel of Ratisbon.

11. 1780. A family group painted by J. N. della Croce at Salzburg in the autumn of 1780 and now in the Mozart Museum. The picture shows Wolfgang and Marianne playing a duet upon the harpsichord. The father is seated at the side of the instrument, and the mother's portrait hangs on the wall.

12. 1786. An engraving by G. A. Sasso after a drawing by G. B. Bosio. The original has not been preserved. Mozart is seated at the harpsichord, on the top of which lies a score of 'Figaro'. The portrait, which is certainly not flattering, bears every sign of having been done from life.

13. 1787. An attractive silhouette printed in Loschenkohl's 'Nationaltaschenkalender für das Jahr 1787' (reproduced in Carola Croag Belmonte's 'Die Frauen im Leben Mozarts', 1924).

14. 1788. The profile by Leonard Posch, the best-known of all portraits of the composer. This has been preserved in many forms, the relation of which to one another has only recently been established.³ There are two main types. In the first the head and neck only are shown; the hair falls in loose curls, and there is no indication of any clothing. The second shows the complete bust; the hair is dressed in the typical Mozartian manner and the composer is wearing a cloak. The original of the first type is undoubtedly a wax-relief now in the Mozart Museum at Salzburg. It bears the artist's signature on the back and is dated 1788. In 1820 it was presented by him to the composer's son Franz Xaver

Wolfgang, who ultimately presented it to the Museum. Posch seems also to have made a number of plaster copies of it. The second type represents a later and more realistic treatment of the same portrait, possibly undertaken at the request of Mozart's friends. The original, which was in a mixture of plaster and wax, has now disappeared. It was formerly in the possession of the sculptor C. Waschmann, who took a bronze cast from it in 1904, which is now in the Department of Coins and Medals of the National Museum at Vienna. This version has been preserved in two other forms which may both have been the work of Posch himself: in a box-wood relief, and on a belt-clasp, said to have belonged formerly to the composer's wife. Both are now in the Mozart Museum. The well-known engravings by J. G. Mansfeld (during Mozart's lifetime) and by A. Kohl (1793) were also based on this second type.

15. 1789. A portrait in silver-point by Doris Stock, the sister-in-law of Korner and friend of Schiller, drawn during Mozart's short stay at Dresden in 1789, and now in the Musikbibliothek Peters at Leipzig. Artistically this is the finest of all the portraits.

16. 1791? An unfinished portrait by Lange, Mozart's brother-in-law, now in the Mozart Museum. Mozart is shown, seated at the piano, apparently absorbed in improvisation. The date of this picture has been the subject of much discussion.⁴ Tradition associates it with the last year of the composer's life, possibly on account of its unfinished character. Some writers, on the other hand, maintain that it was the original of one of a pair of miniatures (now lost, but preserved in the form of lithograph illustrations to Nissen's biography) which Mozart sent to his father in 1783. This earlier date (1782-83) is now preferred by most authorities, especially since the recent discovery of the original of Lange's portrait of Constanze Mozart, now in the Hunterian Museum of the University of Glasgow, which is obviously a companion to it and was certainly painted at the time of her marriage. See Farmer and Smith's 'New Mozartiana' (1935).

These are the only portraits of Mozart the credentials of which are worth considering at all.⁵ Of the doubtful or unauthenticated portraits the best-known are those ascribed to T. Helbling, A. de Saint-Aubin, P. Battoni, Greuze and Tischbein. Full particulars of these and of numerous other portraits will be found in the literature referred to above.

Mozart was fond of active exercise, which was the more necessary as he suffered materially in health from his habit of working far into the night. At one time he took a regular morning ride, but had to give it up, not being able to conquer his nervousness. It was replaced by billiards and skittles. He even had a billiard table in his own house: "Many and many a game have I played with him," says Kelly, "but always came off second best". When no one else was there he would play with his wife, or even by himself. His favourite amusement of all, however, was dancing, for which Vienna afforded ample opportunities. This, too, Kelly mentions (I, 226): "Mme Mozart told me that, great as his genius was, he was an enthusiast for dancing, and often said that his taste lay in that art, rather than in music".

In society Mozart found amusement of the ¹ See especially the article by E. Speyer in M.Q., Apr. 1919, where a case is made out for the later date.

² While Mozart lay on his death-bed, Count Deym, for whose mechanical clock he had written one or two pieces, took a death-mask, and with its aid constructed a wax figure which he dressed in the composer's clothes and exhibited in his gallery. The mask, or at least a copy of it, remained in the widow's possession until she smashed it one day while cleaning. She is said to have remarked that "she was glad that that was the end of the hateful old thing". (Schurig, 'L. Mozarts Reiseaufzeichnungen', p. 92; L. Nohl, 'Mozart nach den Schilderungen seiner Zeitgenossen', p. 393.)

³ See the articles by H. Prunières (Rev. Mus., Oct. 1925) and by R. Schade ('Die Musik', Feb. 1926). Both are accompanied by reproductions of the picture.

⁴ Schurig prefers to date it about 1774, but does not give his reasons. In 1926 it was acquired for the Mozart Museum.

⁵ By R. Lewicki, in two papers in the 'Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft', 1919-20. See also a note in the 'Mozarteums Mitteilungen' for Feb.-May 1921.

highest kind and inspiration as well as affection and true sympathy. No house offered him so much of these as that of Countess Thun, whom he described as "the most charming and attractive lady I have ever seen". Other associates were: the countess's son-in-law and Mozart's pupil, Prince Karl Lichnowsky; Hofrath von Born; Baron Otto von Gemmingen; Hofrath von Spielmann; Prince Kaunitz; Count Cobenzl; Field-Marshal Haddik; Geheimrath von Kees, who had weekly orchestral concerts at his house; the botanist Jacquin and his son and daughter; Count Hatzfeld, an intimate friend who played in his quartets; a merchant named Bridi; a good tenor who sang in 'Idomeneo'; the families Greiner, Martinez and Ployer, all of whom had constant music; and Baron van Swieten, who kindled his enthusiasm for the works of Bach and Handel. Another great admirer of his was Barisani the physician, "that noble man, my best and dearest friend, who saved my life" (when seriously ill in 1784), and whose unexpected death in 1787 was a great shock to him. It is easy to imagine how gratefully the composer enjoyed the refreshment of social intercourse after long hours of solitary creative work. On such occasions he was full of fun, ready at a moment's notice to pour out a stream of doggerel rhymes or irresistibly droll remarks; in short, he was a frank, open-hearted child, whom it was almost impossible to identify with Mozart the great artist. His brother-in-law Lange¹ says that he was never so unlike a "great man" as when he was occupied with some important work.

It has been reiterated ad nauseam that Mozart was a drunkard, whose indulgence in this and cognate vices brought him to an early grave², but that such a charge was totally unfounded no one who has studied his life can doubt for a moment. That, like other people, he enjoyed a good glass of wine nobody can deny, but his laborious life and the prodigious number of his compositions convincingly prove that he was never given to excess. Those who accused him of intemperance also magnified his debts tenfold when he died, and thus inflicted grievous injury on his widow.³ These "friends" propagated the worst reports as to his domestic affairs and constant embarrassments. Undoubtedly his wife was a bad manager, and this was a serious defect in a household which acquired a regular income (800 fl., about £80!) only in 1788, and whose resources before and after that time were most irregular. Her constant illnesses, too, were a great additional burden. Though naturally unfitted for anything of the kind, Mozart made many serious attempts to regulate his expenses and would every now and then keep strict accounts of income and expenditure; but these good resolutions did not last.⁴ In most cases he was led astray by sheer good-nature, for he never could refuse anyone in need. His kindness was grievously abused by false friends, whose acquaintance was damaging to his character, but he never learned prudence. The worst offender in this respect was Stadler, the eminent clarinet player, who often dined at his table and repeatedly wheedled money out of him under pretext of poverty. After all that had passed, Mozart composed a Concerto (K. 622) for Stadler's tour, finishing it two days only before the production of the 'Zauberflöte', when he was, of course, particularly hard pressed.

Mozart was brought up by his father as a pious Catholic, and although subsequently, when he became interested in freemasonry, he found himself drifting farther and farther away from strict orthodoxy, he never definitely broke with the church. The peculiar tone — there is more than a trace of mysticism in it — which his religious opinions took on in his later years comes out clearly in a letter he wrote to his father in Apr. 1787, when Leopold was already lying on his death-bed:

As death is, strictly speaking, the true end and aim of our lives, I have for the last two years made myself so well acquainted with this true, best friend of mankind that his image no longer terrifies, but calms and consoles me. And I thank God for giving me the opportunity (you know what I mean⁵) of learning to look upon death as the key which unlocks the gate of true bliss. I never lie down to rest without thinking that, young as I am, before the dawn of another day I may be no more; and yet nobody who knows me would call me morose and discontented. For this blessing I thank my Creator every day, and wish from my heart that I could share it with all my fellow-men.

The best commentary on this passage is Mozart's own 'Maurerische Trauermusik', written some two years before.

ARTISTIC PROCESSES.—A few words on various aspects of Mozart's life as an artist may serve as a suitable transition to a discussion of his music. First, as to his methods of composition. There can be no doubt that with Mozart the creative process was to a very large extent completed before he put pen to paper. The work of recording his ideas was in the main a purely mechanical task, and one that he always tried to postpone to the very last moment. But his thoughts were always occupied with music. "You know", he wrote to his father, "that I am, so to speak, ¹ 'Biographie des Joseph Lange k. k. Hofschauspielers' (Vienna, 1808, p. 172).

² Compare Schlichtegroll's 'Nekrolog'; Arnold's language is even worse ('Mozarts Geist', p. 65).

³ His association with Schikaneder gave some colour to the reports. Hummel protested vehemently against such accusations.

⁴ In one of these orderly fits he began (1784) a thematic register of all his compositions as they were completed, and continued the practice up to a short time before his death. This invaluable document was first published by André in 1805 (revised ed. 1828), and was edited in facsimile, with introduction and notes, by Otto Erich Deutsch in 1937.

⁵ A reference to the doctrine of the Freemasons.

swallowed up in music, that I am busy with it all day — speculating, studying, considering." Many works which seemed to be thrown off on the spur of the moment may thus have been the fruit of long meditation: the rapidity with which he committed them to paper, often in the intervals of playing billiards or skittles, must not be taken to imply a careless and light-hearted attitude towards his art. His handwriting was always, even when he was most hurried, beautifully neat and clear, and he very rarely found it necessary to make any alterations and erasures. Several manuscripts have, however, been preserved which show that he occasionally made preliminary sketches for passages which presented some special difficulty.

As a performer Mozart distinguished himself as a virtuoso on the pianoforte, organ and violin; the viola, which he preferred to the violin in later life, he played only when he took part in chamber music with his friends. As a pianist he impressed his contemporaries above all by his marvellous gift of extemporization. "If I might have the fulfilment of one wish on earth", said his biographer Niemetschek, "it would be to hear Mozart improvise once more on the piano; those who never heard him cannot have the faintest idea what it was." The qualities in performance on which he laid the greatest stress were a singing tone, a quiet steady hand, a strict sense of time and a smoothness of execution that made rapid passage-work "flow like oil".

As a teacher of music Mozart was never in very great request. Such men as Steffan, Kozeluch and Righini had a far larger number of pupils. Mozart, it is true, hated the work, but poverty often drove him to it, and from 1778 till the end of his life he was scarcely ever free from the necessity of giving lessons, either in clavier-playing or in composition. When he found pupils who could really profit by his instruction he spared no pains, although even with them he was never methodical enough to make an ideal teacher. When Hummel came to him in 1787 he took him into his house in order to be able to supervise his instruction more thoroughly; but, as it turned out, his lessons were extremely irregular, and the less tangible influences of daily intercourse with the master were probably of more value to him than any special tuition that he received. Thomas Attwood, who came to him from Italy in Aug. 1785 to study composition and, according to Kelly, became his favourite pupil¹, used to say that Mozart "would at any time rather play a game of billiards with him than give him a lesson". Kelly himself, who had some talent for song-writing, wished to have some instruction from Mozart in composition, but the latter dissuaded him from it, on the ground that it was too late for technical training to do him anything but harm.² Mozart also gave lessons in composition to a niece of his friend the Abbé Stadler. The music-book in which she worked her exercises is still preserved in the National Library at Vienna and is interesting as showing how strictly Mozart kept to the orthodox "theory" of the day, however much he may have seasoned its exposition with characteristic jokes and playful remarks.³ His pianoforte pupils were more numerous and included several ladies, some of them of high rank. Of the majority little is recorded except that they were Mozart's pupils, and perhaps that recognition was all that they sought. Others, however, such as Franziska von Jacquin, Barbara Ployer, Josephine Aurnhammer and above all Frau von Trattner, the wife of a wealthy bookseller, possessed real talent, and some of the composer's best music was written specially for them.⁴

MUSIC.—Kochel's catalogue of Mozart's compositions records roughly some 600 authentic works that have been preserved, and a large number which, when he compiled his list, were considered to be of doubtful genuineness or were known only by name. Very few of these works were printed in Mozart's lifetime, although many were in circulation in manuscript copies. Practically the whole of this vast mass of music has, however, been published in the standard edition of the master's works issued by Breitkopf & Hartel. The classified list at the end of this article gives a complete list of his work in the various forms. In many cases the dates given are conjectural only.

It is hardly necessary to say that these compositions vary greatly in merit. Some are youthful and immature; others are experiments in which Mozart is endeavouring to assimilate a strange technique; others (and study under Neapolitan masters he seems to have been amazingly ignorant when he came to Vienna. The exercises which he worked under Mozart have been preserved (they are at present in the possession of the reviser of this article) and show that, in spite of the composer's dislike to teaching, he was ready to take great pains even over the most elementary matters once he became interested in his pupil. ² Ibid., I, 227.

³ This music-book forms the main subject of an excellent monograph by R. Lach, 'W. A. Mozart als Theoretiker' (Vienna, 1918).

⁴ For Franziska von Jacquin he wrote the clarinet Trio (K. 498); for Barbara Ployer the Sonata for two pianos (K. 448) and two pf. Concertos (K. 449, 453); for Josephine Aurnhammer (presumably) the six violin Sonatas which he dedicated to her (K. 376, 296, 377-380); for Frau von Trattner the Fantasy and Sonata for pf. in C minor (K. 457, 475), about which he is said to have written her two interesting letters, which have unfortunately disappeared.

¹ 'Reminiscences', I, 228: "Attwood is a young man for whom I have a sincere affection and esteem: he conducts himself with great propriety, and I feel much pleasure in telling you that he partakes more of my style than any scholar I ever had, and I predict that he will prove a sound musician". Mozart's tuition was certainly the making of Attwood. In spite of two years'

these form a fairly numerous class) are pièces d'occasion written without enthusiasm in the fulfilment of his duties as a court composer or, at the best, to oblige patrons and pupils whose abilities and limitations had to be carefully considered. But nothing is more remarkable in Mozart's career than the versatility with which he was able to adapt himself to the most varied and hampering conditions, and when everything of merely ephemeral importance has been eliminated, there still remain an astonishingly large number of compositions which have lost none of their vitality. We can here do no more than discuss the more important works in each class.¹

THE PIANOFORTE, ETC.—It will be convenient to consider first the compositions for pianoforte solo, as it is through them that the average student gains his first introduction to Mozart's music. On the whole they do not represent the composer at his best, and they certainly give but an imperfect idea of his pianoforte technique, which is most fully exemplified in the concertos. The majority of them are comparatively early works and exhibit passing mannerisms of style which Mozart soon outgrew. Thus, while most sides of his genius — his wit, humour, melancholy and passion — find expression in them, it is only to a limited extent. The customary explanation — that they were written mainly for pupils — will hardly serve. The first six Sonatas (K. 279-284), which are on the whole the weakest, were not, so far as is known, written for pupils and were not published during the composer's lifetime; but he frequently performed them himself in the course of his tours. On the other hand, the Sonatas in C minor (K. 457) and in D major (K. 576), written respectively for Frau von Trattner and Princess Frederica of Prussia, are among the composer's best works in this form. The fact that one or two are slight and unpretentious does not preclude the possibility that Mozart wrote them for his own use: he was accustomed to adapt himself to his company. Some of them, moreover, seem to call for the harpsichord for their proper performance, although Mozart soon developed the harpsichord style of the earlier works into a technique more suited to the already fashionable pianoforte. The last Sonata of the first group (K. 284, written in 1775) already demands the new instrument; in the C minor Sonata (K. 457, written in 1784) full use is made of all its resources, including its greatly increased compass. This Sonata is undoubtedly the finest of those written for the solo instrument; of the others only the comparatively early work in A minor (K. 310, 1778) displays anything like the same intensity of fire and passion. Next in importance comes the unfinished Sonata in F major (K. 533, 1788; afterwards published with the Rondo K. 494), the Allegro of which is remarkable for the boldness of its counterpoint and the Andante for some interesting harmonic progressions. Ingenuity of contrapuntal treatment also distinguishes the brilliant Sonata in D (K. 576, 1789), sometimes known as the "Trumpet" Sonata from the fanfare-like character of its opening theme. Of the earlier sonatas that in A minor has already been mentioned. In complete contrast with it is the delightful work in A major (K. 331, 1778), with a set of variations as opening movement and a spirited 'Rondo alla Turca' as finale. Of other works for pianoforte solo the Fantasy in C minor (K. 475, 1785) is of special importance: its earnestness of mood and dramatic force make it a worthy prelude to the Sonata in the same key with which it was afterwards united. The Fantasies in C major (K. 395, 1778), in C minor (K. 396, 1782) and in D minor (K. 397, 1782) are in a different style, being indeed strongly reminiscent of Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach, particularly the two former works, which are almost of the character of free improvisations. Another Fantasy in C (K. 394, 1782) forms the prelude to a fine Fugue in the Handelian manner. Handel also served as model for the unfinished Suite (K. 399, 1782), in which Mozart seems to revel in the keen harmonic clashes resulting from an unsparing polyphony. A little masterpiece in the same somewhat impersonal style is the Gigue (K. 574) which the composer wrote at Leipzig in 1789 in the album of the court organist Engel. The Rondo in A minor (K. 511, 1787) and the Adagio in B minor (K. 540, 1788) have, on the other hand, all the intimacy of personal confessions and breathe that spirit of noble resignation which is so characteristic of Mozart's later years. Technically they are of great interest: the Rondo for the homogeneity of its form and the Adagio for its keen harmonies. In both works the writing is often more quartet-like in style than specifically pianistic. The variations for pianoforte are mostly of the ornamental or "melismatic" type, in which the melodic outline of the original theme is easily recognizable throughout. Curiously enough, the set which is most free in style (the Variations on "Mio caro Adone", K. 180, 1773) is also one of the earliest. The best of them, such as those on "Unser dummer Pöbel meint" from Gluck's 'La Rencontre imprévue' (K. 455, 1784), on "Come un agnello" (K. 460, 1784) and on Schack's "Ein Weib ist das herrlichste Ding" (K. 613, 1791), deserve to be rescued from the neglect into which they have fallen. Of the Sonatas for 4 hands that in F (K. 497, 1786) is unquestionably the most important: it is indeed one of the composer's finest works. That in C (K. 521, 1787) is slighter, though extremely effective in performance. Two pieces for a musical clock (K. 594, 608), ordered by Count Deym for his so-called "Art Gallery", are known only in the arrangement for four hands; they belong to the close of Mozart's life, and the earnestness of purpose and thoroughness of technique which they exhibit show how conscientiously he executed such works to order. For two pianofortes there are two important works: the lively Sonata in D (K. 448, 1781) and the vigorous — and, in parts exhilaratingly cacophonous — Fugue in C minor (K. 426, 1783), afterwards arranged by the composer himself for string quartet, with the addition of a moving Adagio (K. 546) by way of introduction. It should be added that to do justice to Mozart's pianoforte compositions something more is required than the fastidious and rather finicking elegance with which it was long the custom to perform them. The mature works, at any rate, admit of the employment of the full range of tone at the modern pianist's command, and their rapid alternations of mood and frequent imitation of orchestral effects call for a quick brain and a responsive touch for their proper rendering.

¹ More space has been devoted to the discussion of works which, in the writer's opinion, are unduly neglected or often misinterpreted, than to criticism of the acknowledged masterpieces.

Of the sonatas for pianoforte and violin the earliest sets (K. 6-9, 10-15, 26-31) are really sonatas for the keyboard instrument with violin accompaniment. The Sonatas K. 55-60, however, which were long classed with them as juvenile works and consequently omitted from the ordinary editions of Mozart's violin sonatas¹, are of an entirely different character, and indeed of far greater importance than many of his later works in this form. They really belong, as recent research² has shown, to the composer's Italian tour of 1772-73 and betray the influence of the older suite-form of Corelli and Sammartini. Especially interesting is the Sonata in E minor (K. 60), the allegro of which contains a passage strongly prophetic of a theme in the last movement of Beethoven's Sonata in C# minor. Even in these works, however, the violin part is mainly of an accompanying character, and Mozart's first sonatas in the modern style, in which both instruments are of equal importance, were those written partly at Mannheim and partly at Paris in 1778 (K. 296, 301-6), probably on the model of the 'Duetti' of Josef Schuster (1748-1812), which Mozart took with him on the journey.

¹ Both Breitkopf and Peters eventually published editions of them.

² To the French scholars Wyzewa and Saint-Foix belongs the credit for rehabilitating these delightful works. It should, however, be stated that Schiedermair ('Mozart, sein Leben und seine Werke', 1922, p. 452), while reserving his evidence, hints that he expects to be able to prove that these sonatas are not original compositions by Mozart. See also Köchel, 3rd ed., p. 861.

Of this group the tragic Sonata in E minor (K. 304) is perhaps the finest. But Mozart's most important contributions to this form date from his Viennese period and include the works in E♭ (K. 380, 1781), in B♭ (K. 454) written in 1784 for the brilliant young violinist Regina Strinasacchi from Mantua, in E♭ (K. 481, 1785) and in A (K. 526, 1787). In all four the slow movements are of especial beauty. Two Sonatas which date from the period of Mozart's absorption in the works of Bach and Handel (K. 402 in A minor, K. 403 in C) were unfortunately left unfinished by the composer and were subsequently completed by the Abbé Stadler. The Sonata in F (K. 547), written for beginners, has as its final movement a spirited set of variations that is often printed in editions of the composer's variations for pianoforte solo. It was in fact Mozart's own work in that form and was intended to become part, with App. 135, of a complete pianoforte Sonata (now K. 547a).³

The pianoforte trios were mainly written for performance at private music meetings, and two at least (K. 496 and 564) were hastily adapted from works originally written for pianoforte solo. In all of them the pianoforte (at which in all probability Mozart himself presided) has the lion's share of the work, but modest as the function of the strings often is (particularly that of the cello) they are handled so skilfully that they often produce an effect quite out of proportion to the technical demands made upon them, as, to give but one example, at their entry in the andante of the Trio in E (K. 542). This, which Mozart wrote in 1788 for his friend Puchberg, is the most important of the set, but those in B♭ (K. 502, 1786) and in C (K. 548, 1788) are very little inferior. On a far higher level, however, than any of the trios with strings is the clarinet Trio in E♭ (K. 498, 1786), which Mozart wrote for performance with his friends the Jacquins. The distinctive timbres of the clarinet and viola give the work a peculiarly "romantic" colouring that at times takes on an almost sombre tinge, particularly in the minuet which, somewhat unexpectedly, is the most serious of the three movements. Of the two Quartets for strings and pianoforte, in G minor (K. 478, 1785) and in E♭ (K. 493, 1786), the former is unquestionably the finer, though the latter is unjustifiably neglected. The passionate first movement, the gentle melancholy of the andante, and the exuberant finale, with its long chain of exquisite melodies, make it a veritable epitome of Mozart's art. The Quintet in E♭, for pianoforte, oboe, clarinet, horn and bassoon (K. 452, 1784), is another characteristic work. Nowhere are Mozart's skill in writing for wind instruments and his marvellous sense of tonal balance better exemplified. He himself was particularly proud of it. He played it before Paisiello when the latter was in Vienna in 1784 and described it in a letter to his father as the best work that he had so far written.

³ See Köchel, 3rd ed., p. 697.

STRINGS, &C.—We now pass to the chamber compositions in which the pianoforte plays no part. The violin duets written for Michael Haydn in 1783 (K. 423 and 424) have already been mentioned. The only string Trio, apart from the early work for 2 violins and bass (K. 266), is the great E♭ 'Divertimento' (K. 563) for violin, viola and cello, composed in 1788. With the composer's other divertimenti it has little in common beyond the number of its movements (there are six in all) and the "folksong" character of some of its themes; its breadth of design and careful workmanship make it more akin to the quartets and quintets. Mozart's first seven string Quartets (K. 80, 155-60) were written in Italy, the first in 1770, the remaining six in 1772-73, and the influence of Italian models, of Sammartini in particular, is unmistakable.¹ In 1773, as we have already related, Mozart, during a brief visit to Vienna, fell completely under the spell of Joseph Haydn and wrote six contrapuntal Quartets (K. 168-173) in imitation of a similar set by the older master. Henceforward Haydn is the predominant influence in the formation of Mozart's instrumental style, and it is significant that it was the publication by Haydn of a further series of Quartets (Op. 33) in 1781 that stimulated Mozart to take up again a form that he had in the meantime neglected. The first of the new group of six was written in Dec. 1782, the last in Jan. 1785, and in Sept. of the latter year Mozart dedicated them to Haydn as "the fruit of prolonged and laborious toil", with a generous admission of his indebtedness to him. They are too well known to call for detailed discussion; it is enough that they are now universally recognized as among the supreme examples of their kind. Such, however, was not the general verdict at the time. A critic of the day found them "much too highly spiced"; Prince Grassalkowics tore up the parts in a rage on finding that they really contained the "hideous stuff" that was being played before him; and they were returned from Italy to the publisher Artaria as so full of mistakes that it was impossible to play from them. Even Attwood in sending them to his friend Ferrari at Naples advised him to hear them played through several times before passing an opinion on them. The chief stumbling-block was the much-discussed introduction to the Quartet in C.² It may have been due to an attempt to meet such criticisms that Mozart's next Quartet, that in D (K. 499, 1786), is lighter in style and content, though technically in no way inferior to its predecessors. The last three (K. 575, 589, 590) were written for the King of Prussia in 1789-1790, and, fine as they are (particularly the first, in D), the prominence given to the king's favourite instrument, the cello, undoubtedly disturbs at times the balance of the ensemble. The Quartets for flute and strings (K. 285, 1777; K. 285a, 1778; K. 298, 1778) and for oboe (K. 370, 1781) are delightful but unpretentious works in Mozart's lightest style.³

Of the quintets, in which Mozart invariably doubled the viola instead of the cello as Boccherini had done, the earliest (K. 174, 1773) is of interest chiefly on account of the preservation of two versions of the trio of the second minuet and of the finale (the second in each case being probably only some few months later than the earlier), comparison of which affords striking evidence of the rapidity with which the composer's genius developed. The Quintet in C minor (K. 406, 1782) is, again, merely an arrangement by Mozart himself of the fine Serenade for wind instruments (K. 388). On the other hand, of the last four Quintets (K. 515 in C, K. 516 in G minor, 1787; K. 593 in D, 1790; K. 614 in E♭, 1791), three at least may be reckoned as masterpieces. The greatest is that in G minor, in which a mood of spiritual anguish has by the magic of genius been crystallized into a work of immortal beauty. Very little inferior, however, are the vigorous and highly contrapuntal works in C and D, entirely different as they are in mood. That in E♭ is a sunny and genial composition which does not quite reach the same level. Four other quintets remain to be mentioned. Both the delightful clarinet Quintet (K. 581, 1789) written for Anton Stadler, and the less-known horn Quintet (K. 407, 1782) written for Leutgeb, are rather solos with string accompaniment than quintets properly so called. In the latter work two violas are employed and only one violin. The Quintet for glass harmonica, flute, oboe, viola and cello (K. 617), composed in May 1791 for Marianne Kirchgässner, seems doomed to neglect unless the harmonica should one day become fashionable again. Mozart obviously selected his accompanying instruments with a view to its peculiar timbre, and the effect of the whole is spoilt by the use of the pianoforte in its place. Possibly the celesta would be a more satisfactory substitute. Last, but by no means least, comes the delicious 'Nacht-musik' (K. 525, 1787) for 2 violins, viola, cello and bass, which was possibly designed not for solo instruments but for a small orchestra, and so occupies a position midway between Mozart's chamber music proper and the group of compositions we shall have next to consider.

¹ The 4 Quartets K. App. 210-13 were discovered in a transcript in the Berlin Library by G. de Saint-Foix, who unhesitatingly accepts them as genuine works by Mozart and assigns them to the Italian period of 1772-1773. (See Bull. de la Soc. Union Musicol., III, ii, 1923); but in the 3rd edition of Köchel (p. 865) they are still treated as of doubtful authenticity.

² Sarti's objections are admirably summarized and sympathetically discussed in E. Newman's 'A Musical Critic's Holiday' (1925), pp. 131-50.

³ The poignant little Adagio of the oboe quartet is nevertheless a remarkable example of Mozart's genius for saying as much as possible in the smallest possible space.

THE ORCHESTRA.—The serenades, nocturnes, cassations and divertimenti all conform to the same main type, widely as they differ in detail, particularly as regards their instrumentation. They are essentially what the Germans call Unterhaltungsmusik, and their individual characteristics were determined in the main by the occasion of their performance. The fact that many were intended to be played in the open air accounts, for instance, for the important part played by the wind instruments. The staple number of movements was six, but a sort of miniature concerto was often interpolated in which some of the players were given the opportunity of showing their skill as soloists. The main composition was, moreover, frequently introduced and concluded with a march. A good example of the full form is provided by the Cassation in G (K. 63). Mozart's compositions in this kind range from unpretentious works like the Cassation just mentioned to others like the Serenades for wind in B♭ (K. 361), E♭ (K. 375) and C minor (K. 388), which pass far beyond the sphere of conventional fête-music. Indeed the Adagio of the first-named work, written for 13 wind-instruments, is one of the sublimest slow movements that Mozart ever wrote. A Divertimento for strings and horns (K. 522, 1787), entitled 'Ein musikalischer Spass' (a musical joke), deserves special mention as one of the few successful examples of satire in music. Although it does not exempt the performer from ridicule, it is essentially a hit at the unskilful composer who can think of nothing but musical clichés and when he has an idea does not know what to do with it. In these compositions the most unusual combinations of instruments are sometimes employed; for example, two Divertimenti written between 1773 and 1776 (K. 187, 188) are scored for 2 flutes, 5 trumpets and 4 drums, and one of the Nocturnes (K. 286, 1777) for four orchestras, each consisting of 2 violins, viola, bass and 2 horns, by means of which a triple echo is produced.

Quite as remarkable is the orchestration of many of the dances for orchestra which Mozart wrote in such numbers during his Viennese period for performance at the court balls. A striking example is the trio of the last of the three 'Deutsche Tänze' (K. 605), entitled 'Die Schlittenfahrt', where post-horns and sleigh-bells are used with piquant effect.

Nearly all of them, however, deserve careful study from this point of view.

Mozart's 40 or more symphonies¹ are evenly distributed over practically the whole of his career and thus afford excellent material for studying the development of his style. We can see him first making sure of his materials and technique, and then observe how the separate parts gradually acquire more freedom and independence, how melody and invention grow, the subjects gain in character and details are better worked out, how the wind instruments, no longer used merely to strengthen the strings, attain an independent existence and materially contribute to the effects of light and shade, until at length the various component parts of the orchestra become one animated whole. We can see him passing from one model to another, John Christian Bach and Abel giving place to the Italian masters, and they in turn to the Viennese school represented by Wagenseil, Monn, Starzer and above all Haydn, whose influence, after a brief period during which the Mannheim composers were paramount, ultimately predominated. More than twenty of the symphonies were written at Salzburg. Of these the first in which Mozart shows something approaching real mastery over the symphonic form are the two works in A (K. 114, 1771; K. 134, 1772) and that in F (K. 130, 1772), written on the composer's return from his first Italian tour. Of far higher importance, however, are the symphonies written after the second tour, particularly the impassioned work in G minor (K. 183, 1773-74), a not unworthy precursor of the later work in the same key, and the bright and genial work in A (K. 201, 1774). The brilliant "Paris" Symphony in D (K. 297, 1778) was written with the object of humouring the taste of the French public, but is much more than a mere pièce d'occasion, and is specially noteworthy for the large orchestra employed (there are, in addition to the strings, 2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 clarinets, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets and drums). Three further symphonies written at Salzburg in 1779 and 1780 include one in G (K. 318) in one movement, performed, according to tradition, as an overture to Bianchi's 'La villanella rapita', and a vigorous and broadly designed work in C (K. 338). With the exception of one in C (K. 425) composed at Linz in 1783 and showing visible traces of Haydn's influence, all the rest were written at Vienna. The earliest of these was the bright and energetic Symphony in D major (K. 385), composed in 1782 for his friends the Haffner family of Salzburg; four years later followed the "Prague" Symphony (K. 504), also in D major, the orchestration of which reminds us that it had recently been preceded by 'Figaro'. The last three, in E \flat , G minor, and C with the fugal finale ("Jupiter") (K. 543, 550, 551), were composed in 1788 between 26 June and 10 Aug., in a space of just over six weeks! Like most of Mozart's works which can be treated as a group, these three Symphonies are in strong contrast to one another. None of the attempts, however, to sum up their respective characteristics in a brief phrase or epithet has been very successful. Even the title "Jupiter" is not altogether happy, and still less satisfactory are the descriptions of the E \flat Symphony as Mozart's "swan song" (E. T. A. Hoffmann) or his "Eroica" (Kretzschmar), or Schumann's phrase about the "swaying Grecian grace" of the G minor. It is rather just because each work comprises within it such a wealth and variety of moods that these Symphonies represent the very pinnacle of Mozart's achievement as an instrumental composer.

¹ Mozart's development as a symphonic composer is cursorily treated in D. Schultz's 'Mozarts Jugendsymphonien' (1900).

THE CONCERTO FORM.—Equal in historical interest is Mozart's treatment of the concerto, which may justly be regarded as his chief contribution to the growth of the instrumental forms. Up to the middle of the century the concerto was not distinguished in essential structure from the current types of orchestral or chamber music, and indeed only differed from the overture and the concerted sonata in the opportunity which it afforded for contrasted masses or timbres. Even in the concertos of Handel and J. S. Bach the solo instruments are only primi inter pares; the distinction of protagonist and chorus is not as yet fully felt. The first to perceive the real aesthetic value of this contrast was C. P. E. Bach, whose clavier concertos definitely modify the symphonic texture, and his tentative suggestions were developed by Mozart with a richer invention, a wider melodic range and a far greater command of orchestral effect.

He composed in all twenty-five concertos for clavier, solo, the first four (K. 37, 39-41), which were merely adaptations from works by other composers, at Salzburg in 1767, the next four (K. 175, 238, 246, 271) there between 1773 and 1777, the last seventeen (from K. 412) at Vienna between 1782 and 1791. To these should be added a Concerto for three claviers (K. 242), written in 1776, and one for two claviers (K. 365) in 1779. During the years 1775-77 he wrote six¹ for violin (K. 207, 211, 216, 218, 219, 271a), mainly, it would appear, as studies for his own practice², and followed them in 1779 with a 'Sinfonia concertante' (K. 364) for violin and viola. His other works in this form are a Concertone for two violins and a Concerto for bassoon (K. 190, 191) written at Salzburg in 1773 and 1774 respectively, a Concerto for oboe (K. 293?) written in 1777³, one for flute and harp (K. 299) written at Paris in 1778, two for flute solo (K. 313, 314) both written at Mannheim, four for horn (K. 412, 417, 447, 495), written for Leutgeb in Vienna, and the clarinet Concerto (K. 622) composed for Stadler in 1791.

These works fall naturally into two groups which respectively precede and follow the beginning of his residence in Vienna. Those of the earlier group are, comparatively speaking, of less importance, and though they exhibit all his delicacy of touch and daintiness of invention, are mainly interesting as stages in his treatment of the form. The most noticeable among them are those in D major (K. 175), F major (K. 242) and E \flat major (K. 365) for one clavier or more, together with the six for violin, which make charming use of a medium that has been somewhat neglected by the great masters. The Concerto for flute and harp (K. 298), written apparently with some reluctance on the commission of the Duc de Guines, is a brilliant virtuoso-piece⁴ with a graceful and tender andante. The Viennese clavier concertos⁵ are all masterly, especially those in D minor (K. 466), C major (K. 467), C minor (K. 491) and C major (K. 503); perfect in style, melody and balance, and often showing a freedom of structural organization which is not to be found in Mozart's other instrumental works. It is well known that they were carefully studied by Beethoven, in whose early compositions their influence can clearly be traced. The horn concertos were evidently intended as a jest; they are written at break-neck speed, and the rondo of the first (K. 412) is scrawled over with extravagant mock-directions; the Concerto for clarinet (K. 622) is, on the other hand, a careful study of one of Mozart's favourite instruments and may be regarded as the basis of modern clarinet-playing.

VOCAL COMPOSITIONS.—Songs Mozart wrote

¹ Mozart appears to have written two concertos for oboe, one of which was not completed. It seems probable that the work written for Ferlendis in 1777 has disappeared, and that the fragment K. 293 is part of a fresh concerto undertaken later (possibly in 1783). Einstein (Köchel, 3rd ed., p. 358) hazards the suggestion that the "flute Concerto" (K. 314) is really an oboe concerto in disguise.

² The finest virtuoso, however, can make little of some of the passages for the harp. Here, for once, Mozart does not seem to have taken his usual pains to understand the possibilities of an unfamiliar instrument.

³ Brilliantly analysed by Abert, II, 202-41. Cf. F. Blume, 'Die formgeschichtliche Stellung der Klavierkonzerte Mozarts' (Mozart Jahrb., 1924). The question whether the pf. parts as printed were elaborated by Mozart in performance, and should be similarly treated by the present-day soloist, is fully discussed in C. Reinecke's 'Zur Wiederbelebung der Mozart'schen Clavier-Concerte' (1891).

¹ The Concerto in E \flat (K. 268) is, as has already been stated, of doubtful authenticity in its present form. The Mozartian material which it embodies is probably of a later date than the rest of the concertos. See Köchel, 3rd ed., p. 435.

² The violin Concerto known as the "Adelaide", first published in 1933, is almost certainly not by Mozart.

only casually; and unfortunately for the most part to very insignificant words. The greater number are in stanza-form, but some few are continuously composed (durchkomponiert), such as 'An Chloe' (K. 524), which is in the style of an Italian canzonet, 'Abendempfindung' (K. 523), fine both in form and expression, 'Unglückliche Liebe' and 'Trennung und Wiedervereinigung' (K. 520, 519), almost passionate in tone, and the sportive 'Zu meiner Zeit' (K. 517). Of three children's songs (K. 529, 596, 598) the second, 'Komm lieber Mai', has passed into a traditional song. But the finest of Mozart's songs is undoubtedly the exquisite setting of Goethe's 'Das Veilchen', which shows what he might have accomplished if he had devoted himself more seriously to this form.

The canons require sifting; even the English 'Non nobis Domine' has been set to German words and ascribed to him. Several are composed to words in the Viennese dialect, and their effect is completely ruined by the modern drawing-room text which is often substituted.

As we have seen already, Mozart was frequently called upon to write airs for concert performance and for insertion in operas by other composers: many of these are noteworthy examples of his skill in writing for the voice; for instance, the soprano airs 'Misera, dove son' (K. 369), 'Non temer amato bene' with pf. obbligato (K. 505), 'Un moto di gioia' (K. 579), 'Bella mia fiamma' (K. 528), one of his finest airs, the tenor air 'Per pietà' (K. 420) and the bass airs 'Non so d'onde viene' (K. 512), 'Mentre ti lascio' (K. 513), and 'Per questa bella mano' with double-bass obbligato (K. 612).

We will now pass to the consideration of Mozart's religious music, and before discussing his Masses, will deal briefly with his other compositions for the church. First and foremost come the Litanies and Vespers, each of which consists, like the Mass, of a number of distinct sections. There are two main types of litany: the "Litania de venerabili (altaris sacramento)" and the "Litania Lauretana" (of Loreto) or "Marienlitanei". The chief characteristic of the former is solemnity and of the latter tenderness, and these Mozart has succeeded in preserving in his settings. Of his works in the latter kind, the first, in B \flat , composed in 1771 (K. 109), already shows fluency in part-writing and mastery of form and modulation; but the second, in D (K. 195), composed in 1774, is far more important, the voices being treated contrapuntally against an independent orchestra. There are also two 'Litanie de venerabili' in B \flat and E \flat (K. 125, 243), composed in 1772 and 1776, the lapse of time between the two being clearly marked in the compositions themselves. The fine choruses in Nos. 3 and 5 of the latter point to the Requiem, and, like the fugue "Pignus futuræ", almost startle by their power, as does also the opening of the "Panis vivus", identical with the "Tuba mirum" in the Requiem. A still stronger sense of the dignity of church music is shown in two Vespers in C (K. 321, 339) composed in 1779 and 1780, the greater part of both thoroughly deserving a place among the composer's most important works. The "Confitebor" in the first, and "Laudate pueri" and "Laudate Dominum" in the latter, are real gems. The motet 'Misericordias Domine' (K. 222), which Mozart wrote as an exercise in 1775 and sent to Bologna for Padre Martini's approval in 1776, is in strict counterpoint throughout. In 1776 he composed a 'Venite populi' for double chorus (K. 260); the parts are in imitation, strict or free, and the whole work is full of force and freshness. A list of innumerable small pieces of church music closes with the beautiful motet 'Ave, verum corpus' (K. 618), composed on 17 June 1791, at Baden near Vienna.

Mozart's first Masses (K. 49, 65, 66), written while he was still a mere boy, show how thoroughly he had mastered the forms then in use for that style of music. But there is a tremendous gulf between these early works and the 6th Mass, in F \sharp (K. 192), written only five years later. This Mass, in which the master-hand is clearly discernible, recalls the finest models of the old Neapolitan school; the Credo is based on the subject so well known in the finale to the "Jupiter" Symphony. It is written in counterpoint throughout with only two violins, bass and organ as accompaniment. The next, in D \sharp (K. 194, 1774), is also next in order of merit; it has perhaps more grace, but less earnestness and ideality. These two masses show what Mozart could do when his genius was unfettered; but in the five which followed in 1775 and 1776¹ (K. 220, 257-59, 262) he was forced to suit his patron's taste by aiming at display, and the result is less fortunate. Unhappily these, being his best-known masses, are generally taken as his standard church works. Hardly more important are the next three² (K. 275, 1777; K. 317, 1779; K. 337, 1780), although Mozart himself seems to have had a preference for the first, in B \flat , since he chose it to conduct himself in 1791; the second, in C, composed in 1779, is called the "Coronation" Mass—why, nobody ¹ Mozart's Masses, arranged by V. Novello, No. 3. The so-called 'Twelfth Mass' in that edition is spurious.

² Novello, No. 6.

³ The second, in B \flat (K. 257; Novello 2), is called the "Credo" Mass from the peculiar treatment of the Credo. Novello printed it in a very mutilated form, even the characteristic subject in the Credo itself being left out whenever possible. The much-used subject from the "Jupiter" Symphony is introduced again in the Sanctus.

⁴ Novello, 10, 1, 14.

knows¹; the third, also in C, was composed in 1780; and all three fulfil the conventional requirements, but seldom show a glimpse of the true Mozart, and then only in court uniform. We have already mentioned the last Mass, in C minor (K. 427), and the circumstances under which it was written. It is broadly designed, each section being treated as a separate movement, and the whole bears clear traces of his studies at the time (1783) with van Swieten. It is to be regretted that it was never finished; the Kyrie, Gloria, Sanctus and Benedictus alone are complete; of the Credo only half was written.² Very remarkable are the varying lengths of the different movements, the large dimensions of the choruses and fugues, and the bravura style of the solos. The Kyrie, Gloria and Sanctus are excellent; the five-part Gratias and the eight-part Qui tollis of incomparable beauty.

We now come to the Requiem, that work of pain, which the composer was not permitted to finish. The following pieces are in his own handwriting: (1) Requiem and Kyrie, complete; (2) voice-parts, organ and notes of the accompaniment of Nos. 2 to 9, as follows: Dies irae, 68 bars; Tuba mirum, 62; Rex tremendae, 22; Recordare, 130; Confutatis, 40; Lacrymosa, 8; Domine, 78; Hostias, 54; the last eight bars, containing voice-parts, organ and first violin, go to the words "Fac eas Domine de morte transire ad vitam", followed by the direction "Quam olim Da Capo": that is to say, repeat the last 35 bars of the Domine. His widow, in her anxiety to have the score completed, and thus to satisfy the person who had ordered it, first applied to Eybler, but after a few attempts he threw up the task, and she then entrusted it to Süssmayr, who not only had more courage, but was able to imitate Mozart's hand. He copied what Mozart had sketched in, filled up the gaps, wrote a Sanctus, Benedictus and Agnus Dei, possibly utilizing rough sketches left by the master, and, to give unity to the work, wound it up by repeating the fugue of the Kyrie to the words "Cum sanctis tuis". The score thus completed was handed to the messenger, who afterwards proved to have been Leutgeb, steward to Count Franz von Walsegg, of Ruppach. The count, who had lost his wife on 14 Feb. 1791 and wished to perform a Requiem to her memory, copied out the score, inscribed it "Requiem composto dal Conte Walsegg" and actually had it performed as his own work on 14 Dec. 1793.³ After wanderings almost as complicated as those of Ulysses, the various portions in the original handwriting at length found their way safely to the Court Library of Vienna. They consist of: (1) the autograph Requiem⁴ and Kyrie, with the remainder complete in Süssmayr's hand, bought by the Court Library in 1839 for fifty ducats; (2) Nos. 2 to 9 just as they were left by Mozart; (3) twelve sheets presented by the Abbé Stadler; (4) thirteen bequeathed by Eybler in 1846.⁵ Mozart, it is well known, imagined that he was writing the Requiem for himself, and traces of the agony of spirit in which he wrote it have passed into the music. For this reason, in spite of all its beauties, it is a work which many lovers of Mozart can never hear without pain.⁶

We have seen Mozart, when a mere boy, turning from childish play to serious occupations: a striking instance of this is his 'Grabmusik' or German cantata (K. 42), written in 1767, which is anything but a boyish composition. About five years later he wrote, apparently in consequence of his visit to Padua, an oratorio by Metastasio called 'Betulia liberata' (K. 118), which in style is not unlike an opera seria of the period. The refrain in the last number but one, alternately sung by solo and chorus, is an ancient canto fermo harmonized in four parts, in fact the same which is introduced in the Requiem to the words "Te decet hymnus". This is the only independent work of the kind, the cantata 'Davidde penitente' (K. 469) being made up from the Kyrie and Gloria of the unfinished Mass in C minor (K. 427) set to Italian words, with two interpolated airs in concert style, which are not altogether

¹ This, Mozart's last work, was the first of his vocal works (including his operas) to be performed in England. John Ashley introduced it at Covent Garden Theatre on the first oratorio evening during Lent, 20 Feb. 1801. The piece which preceded it was a Dead March with basset horns, double bassoons and two pairs of double drums; after it came a pf. concerto played by John Field and Handel's 'L' Allegro ed il Penseroso'. Books of the words, with a translation of the Requiem and a biographical sketch of Mozart, were sold at 6d. each. Of the Requiem Parke says: "It is a composition of infinite science and dulness, from the effects of which the audience was happily relieved by Incledon's song in 'L' Allegro', 'Haste thee, Nymph'". The 'Morning Post' said: "The talents which have celebrated the name of Mozart can scarcely be justly appreciated by such a composition as the Requiem"; and wound up with: "It is upon the whole a composition which could only have come from the hand of a master. From the performers it received ample justice." According to the 'Porcupine' "the performance was far from being well managed". It was repeated on 4 Mar. (Pohl, 'Mozart in London', p. 144.)

² The whole story of the history of the MSS and of the long controversy as to the work's authenticity is told with admirable lucidity in W. Pole's 'The Story of Mozart's Requiem' (1879). The best analysis of the music is that by Abert ('W. A. Mozart', II, 851-87). The heading "Requiem di me, W. A. Mozart mp 792" is touching, as showing how he looked forward to its completion.

³ A facsimile of Mozart's contributions was published at Vienna in 1914, under the editorship of A. Schnerich.

⁴ Cf. Dent ('Mozart's Operas', p. 380), where, however, too much stress is laid upon these traces of morbidity.

¹ It was possibly written for some feast in honour of the Virgin Mary, at which her effigy was crowned, certainly not for any secular coronation.

² The Credo was completed by the adaptation of other church compositions by the master; for the Agnus Dei, the opening Kyrie was repeated, and the Mass, as thus made fit for public performance, was given by the Mozartverein at Dresden, 3 Apr. 1901, and at the Bristol Festival of 1903, for the first time in England.

in keeping with the severity of the rest of the piece.

Of smaller cantatas three written for masonic use (K. 429, 471, 623) are the only specimens. All show much earnestness and depth of feeling. The first was composed in 1783, the second in 1785; the last, consisting of six numbers, written on 15 Nov. 1791, Mozart conducted in person only two days before his last illness.

DRAMATIC COMPOSITIONS.—The long list of Mozart's dramatic compositions¹ is headed by a sacred Singspiel, 'Die Schuldigkeit des ersten Gebotes', in three parts, the first being composed by him at Salzburg during the winter of 1766-67 and the others added by Michael Haydn and Adlgasser, the court organist. Mozart's work occupies 208 pages, and is in the style of the Italian oratorios of the period, the conventions of which are handled with extraordinary precocity. Mingled with the boy's unsteady writing there are occasional passages, mostly florid, in his father's hand, and the words to the recitatives are by a third person. The third tenor air is interesting, and Mozart himself evidently thought well of it, for he introduced it with slight variations into his first opera. Immediately afterwards followed the music to a Latin comedy, 'Apollo et Hyacinthus', given in the University on 13 May 1767, a dull piece of work on the whole, though it contains a few premonitions of the later Mozart. In Vienna in 1768 he composed a German operetta or pastorate in one act, 'Bastien und Bastienne', and an opera buffa in three acts, 'La finta semplice'. With the simple emotions of his shepherd and shepherdess Mozart succeeded well enough, and his little piece still makes pleasant hearing, but to the complicated network of emotions—often sordid enough—of the stock Italian opera buffa he was as yet quite unequal. The three works composed and performed at Milan—'Mitridate' (opera seria, 1770), 'Ascanio in Alba' (theatrical serenade, 1771) and 'Lucio Silla' (opera seria, 1772)—are scarcely more important, except as marking stages in the composer's development and as providing him with experience that was to prove invaluable later. The serenade 'Il sogno di Scipione', written at Salzburg in 1772, was, as has been already described, an uninspired piece written hastily to order. The first version of the incidental music which Mozart wrote to Gebler's masonic drama 'Thamos' dates from the end of 1773, but the two choruses (Nos. 6 and 7b), which are the finest features in the score as we now know it, were written in 1779, when the composer, anxious to come before the public once more as a writer of dramatic music, subjected it to a fairly drastic revision. It is also necessary to distinguish the original score from later accretions in the case of the opera buffa 'La finta giardiniera', which was first produced in its Italian form at Munich on 13 Jan. 1775, but later, when a German text was substituted, underwent two successive revisions (the first in 1779 or 1780 and the second in 1789). The early score, so far as it can be reconstituted, shows a considerable advance upon Mozart's first attempt at opera buffa. Though largely modelled upon Antossi's setting of the same text, produced about a year before, and owing much to other masters of opera buffa, such as Piccinni, Traetta and Maio, it is characterized by a gentle poetic charm that is all Mozart's own. As yet, however, there is little attempt at musical characterization, and it shows only traces of the wit and verve of its Italian models. The treatment of the voice is interesting: it holds no paramount position, but is treated as only one of several strands in the symphonic ensemble. The same general features characterize the serenata 'Il rè pastore', produced at Salzburg on 23 Apr. 1775, now remembered only by the song "L'amerò", which still finds a place in concert programmes. Mozart's hopes of writing an opera in Paris in 1778 were disappointed, and he had to console himself with the composition of some of the numbers for Noverre's ballet 'Les Petits Riens'. The most important of these is the spirited overture, containing a theme which afterwards played a part in 'Figaro'. The remaining pieces are graceful and dainty enough, but of no special importance. The unfinished opera 'Zaide', to a wretched text by Schachtner, which busied Mozart for some months at Salzburg in 1779, exhibits that curious mixture of styles which was a feature of the Viennese Singspiel. Italian arias and German song-forms are found side by side, and there are even traces of French influences. To this medley Mozart added interludes of "melodrama"—spoken recitative to an orchestral accompaniment—on the model of Benda's experiments. The work contains much fine music, especially in the concerted pieces, but is chiefly of interest for certain numbers in which Mozart seems to have been striving to evolve a specifically German style and for its anticipation of the subject of 'Die Entführung'.

But Mozart's first great opportunity was to be provided not by a German but by an Italian opera. This was 'Idomeneo', first performed at Munich on 29 Jan. 1781. The original text for the opera, as written by the Abbate Varesco, the court chaplain of Salzburg, was far from satisfying the composer, and it was only by the exertion of constant pressure that he finally got it altered to suit his wishes. His correspondence with his father about the libretto affords instructive evidence of his remarkable instinct for the dramatically effective. In accordance with the taste of the moment the conventional form of opera seria was, in 'Idomeneo', modified by the introduction of choruses and ballets after the model of Gluck's French operas, and Mozart's music also pays allegiance to these diverse schools, the influence of Gluck predominating. The whole work is conceived on a grand scale, and its tragic force, the majesty of the choruses and the brilliance of the orchestration give it a unique place among the composer's works. He himself thought very highly of it and, when he was at Vienna in 1781, hoped to get it performed in a German version, for which he proposed recasting the music "more in the French style". He had, however, to wait till 1786, and even then had to be content with a private performance by distinguished amateurs, for which he made several alterations and additions (see e.g. K. 489, 490).

¹ Special literature: E. J. Dent, 'Mozart's Operas' (1913; new ed. 1947); E. Lert, 'Mozart auf dem Theater' (3rd ed. 1921).

In the year following the production of 'Idomeneo' Mozart's desire to write a German opera was at length gratified. The text of 'Die Entführung aus dem Serail' was adapted by the younger Stephanie from a play by Bretzner, and it is again interesting to observe that Mozart's practical acquaintance with the stage dictated many alterations — much, it may be said, to Bretzner's disgust. Osmin, one of the most original characters in the opera, was largely the composer's own creation. There remained, however, certain structural weaknesses which even the beauty of Mozart's music could not quite conceal. The general effect is of a series of detached numbers, often developed to a disproportionate length, rather than of a unified whole. What makes the opera so perennially attractive in spite of its defects is that spirit of freshness and youthful exuberance which led Weber to say that "Of such operas as 'Figaro' and 'Don Juan' we might have had many more; but with all the good will in the world Mozart could never have written another 'Entführung'".

The unfinished scores of 'L'oca del Cairo' and 'Lo sposo deluso', which date from 1783, need not detain us, although Mozart completed several numbers of each before the poverty of the libretti compelled him to give them up; nor is the amusing skit on theatrical and operatic life 'Der Schauspieldirektor', which was performed at Schönbrunn on 7 Feb. 1786 of sufficient importance to call for discussion here, in spite of the exquisite finish of the music. We must pass at once to a brief consideration of the five works on which Mozart's operatic fame chiefly rests: 'Le nozze di Figaro' (1786), 'Don Giovanni' (1787), 'Così fan tutte' (1790), 'La clemenza di Tito' (1791) and 'Die Zauberflöte' (1791).

The unity that was lacking in 'Die Ent-führung' is one of the most marked features of 'Figaro', in some respects the most perfect of Mozart's operas. In no work is his power of dramatic characterization more brilliantly exemplified. In the concerted numbers, which form so large a proportion of the whole, it is amazing to see the skill with which the voices, while forming part of a complex musical tissue, are made to express the personalities of the various characters. Perhaps they are not the personages of Beaumarchais's satirical comedy; but what does it matter? Mozart, with the help of the witty da Ponte, created them afresh, and they are unmistakable flesh and blood.

If 'Figaro' is not Mozart's finest opera, it is because it deals after all with a somewhat narrow range of emotions. In 'Don Giovanni', on the other hand, less homogeneous as it is in style, there is scarcely a feeling known to humanity that is not expressed in some one of the situations or characters. It must not be forgotten, however, that Mozart himself described it as dramma giocoso, and even its most serious moments are tempered with that spirit of irony which gives such a characteristic flavour to so much of his music.

This spirit is given full rein in 'Così fan tutte', where da Ponte's amusing comedy of intrigue gave him full opportunity for its exercise. It seems incredible that anyone should ever have imagined that this was a work which Mozart undertook with reluctance, and that he regarded the libretto as so much beneath contempt that he was satisfied to compose a string of beautiful airs which had nothing to do with it.

'La clemenza di Tito' he certainly was reluctant to undertake, busied as he was already with 'Die Zauberflöte', to say nothing of the Requiem. 'La clemenza' carries us back to the old opera seria which Mozart had not touched since 'Idomeneo'. Metastasio's libretto, written in 1734, required considerable modifications to adapt it to the altered taste of the day, the most important being the introduction of ensembles wherever the situations allowed and the curtailment of the original three acts to two. Nothing availed, however, to make the plot or the characters interesting. Throughout it was evident that the characteristics which had most attracted in Metastasio's day were now only so many obstacles and hindrances to the composer. The most important thing in Mozart's score is the first-act finale, noteworthy as the first instance in which he employs solo voices in a choral ensemble and for the important dramatic function which the chorus performs.

In 'Figaro', 'Don Giovanni' and 'Così fan tutte' Mozart's task had been considerably lightened by da Ponte's excellent libretti. At first sight it would not seem that Schikaneder deserved much credit for his text to 'Die

Zauberflöte'. On the surface it appears to be a tissue of improbabilities and absurdities. Its main characteristics are explicable only in relation to contemporary theatrical history. Spectacular operas, of a highly romantic cast, were the fashion in Vienna at the time, and numbers of them were produced not only at Schikaneder's theatre but on other stages also. For this particular production Schikaneder drew in the main upon a fairy-tale 'Lulu, oder die Zauberflöte' from Wieland's 'Dschinnistan'. Its peculiar weakness as it is now printed is due to the fact that at the last moment — when, indeed, Mozart had already composed a good deal of the music — it was suddenly decided to alter the whole character of the story by introducing allusions to freemasonry and giving the whole an ideal and symbolical character. This sudden change has generally been attributed to the influence of a certain Karl Ludwig Giesecke, who in fact afterwards laid claim to the authorship of the libretto, but it may have been largely at the instance of Mozart himself. Its immediate occasion may have been the death of the prominent freemason Ignaz von Bern on 24 July 1791. In any case there is no evidence that Mozart was at all dissatisfied with the libretto in its final form, and there is certainly no sign of that in his music. As a matter of fact, with all its contradictions and occasional fatuities, it is undoubtedly suited to the stage. Goethe, while acknowledging its weaknesses, claimed that "the author had a perfect knowledge of the art of contrast and a wonderful knack of introducing stage effects". It is well known that the poet himself began a continuation to the libretto and entered into an agreement with Wranitzky on the subject in 1796. The deeper signification of the text undoubtedly appealed strongly to Mozart's imagination and called forth some of his sublimest music. Beethoven declared 'Die Zauberflöte' to be Mozart's greatest work. Unfortunately Schindler adds that his reason for estimating it so highly was that in it were to be found specimens of nearly every species of music from the song to the chorale and fugue. It is a composer's explanation: the layman, if he is not content simply to drink in its beauty, will prefer to think of it as the perfect expression of the two complementary — though apparently contradictory — sides of Mozart's character, his ideality and his realism. As Schurig has well remarked, he was himself both Tamino and Papageno.

THE SPURIOUS AND DOUBTFUL WORKS.—No discussion of Mozart's music would be complete without at least a brief mention of some of the spurious works that have been attributed to him. Of these, various masses are the most important. In the early part of the 19th century Vincent Novello searched the Continent for unpublished masses by Mozart. Unfortunately he does not seem always to have investigated the authenticity of the works that were offered him, with the result that, of the 17 masses ultimately published by him, five (Nos. 7, 8, 9, 12, 18) have since proved to be spurious, and three (Nos. 13, 16 and 17) must be regarded as of doubtful genuineness. The best known of these is the so-called Twelfth Mass (K. Anh. 232), which gained its English title simply from the fact that it formed No. 12 in Novello's collection. This Mass was first published under Mozart's name by Simrock of Bonn in 1821 from a manuscript obtained from Carl Zulehner; but the violinist Leopold Jansa subsequently identified it as a work which he used to sing as a boy in a musical school in his native country of Bohemia, where it was known as "Müller's Mass". On purely internal grounds it certainly seems difficult to accept it as a work by Mozart.¹ Of other religious works formerly ascribed to Mozart the Mass K. 140 is by Süssmayr, the Hymn K. 327 by Gasparini, and the Offertory K. 177 probably by Leopold Mozart. Numerous spurious songs were published as Mozart's during the early part of the 19th century: Köchel (Anh. 245) mentions in particular a collection of 33 published by Rellstab of Berlin, of which only 5 were genuine! The most important of them is the 'Wiegenlied' (K. Anh. 284*f*), which is still frequently sung as a work of Mozart, but has been shown by Max Friedlander to be by the Berlin composer Bernhard Flies. Almost equally well known is the song 'Vergiss mein nicht' (K. Anh. 246), which as 'Forget me not' long enjoyed a considerable vogue in this country. Its real composer was Ludwig Schneider of Coburg. A number of instrumental works have also been erroneously attributed to Mozart. The three symphonies K. 18, K. 444 and K. Anh. 293 are respectively by Abel, Michael Haydn² and Leopold Mozart, while the Minuet and Trio for orchestra (K. 25*a*), preserved in a MS at the British Museum, is probably a youthful work by Beethoven. Of the large number of spurious pianoforte pieces the best known is the set of variations (really by Förster) on a theme from Sarti's "I finti eredi" (K. Anh. 289) that has frequently been printed in editions of Mozart's pianoforte works. The 'Pastorale variée' (K. Anh. 209*b*) is also still published under Mozart's name. The grandiose Sonata in C minor (K. 284*a*), which was printed by Pleyel as 'Mozart's last Grand Sonata', was composed by Anton Eberl. A spurious work still current as Mozart's is a Romance in A♭ (K. App. 205).

¹ For further details of the controversy regarding the authenticity of this Mass the second edition of this Dictionary should be consulted. See also TWELFTH MASS.

² The slow introduction in this work, however, was added by Mozart.

Finally, the Rondo for pianoforte (K. 511a), which is bound with the Minuet and Trio for orchestra mentioned above, is probably, like that, an early work by Beethoven. C. B. O.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

This bibliography does not aim at completeness, but it includes, in addition to the works indispensable to the specialist, a liberal selection of works intended for the ordinary music-lover. Some of the omissions are deliberate.

O. KELLER, 'W. A. Mozart, Bibliographie und Ikonographie' (Berlin, 1927) provides a classified list of over 4000 books and articles, but is quite uncritical. For this reason, in spite of many inaccuracies, H. DE CURZON, 'Essai de bibliographie mozartine: revue critique des ouvrages relatifs à W. A. Mozart et à ses œuvres' (Paris, 1906) is still of value. See also C. B. OLDMAN, 'Representative Books about Mozart' (M. & L., Apr. 1925) and A. HYATT KING, 'A Survey of Recent Mozart Literature' (M. Rev., Nov. 1942). The chief sources are fully discussed in the prefaces to the biographies by Jahn, Abert, Schurig and Schiedermair, and in the appendix 'Literatur und Quellen' to the second edition of Paumgartner's 'Mozart'.

I. CHIEF SOURCES

- 'Die Briefe Mozarts und seiner Familie', edited by L. Schiedermair, 5 vols. (Munich & Leipzig, 1914). (Vol. V is a collection of portraits and other illustrations.)
- 'Briefe Wolfgang Amadeus Mozarts.' Edited, with facsimiles of the originals, by E. H. Mueller von Asow, 2 vols. and 3 portfolios (Berlin, 1942).
- 'W. A. Mozart: Briefwechsel und Aufzeichnungen', edited by Hedwig and E. H. Mueller von Asow (Lindau, 1949-). (A collected edition, to be completed in 4 vols.)
- 'The Letters of Mozart and his Family', translated by Emily Anderson, 3 vols. (London, 1938). (An admirable translation, including a number of letters not to be found in Schiedermair. Vol. 3 contains a selection from the letters of Constanze Mozart to J. A. André, translated by C. B. Oldman.)
- 'Leopold Mozarts Briefe an seine Tochter', edited by O. E. Deutsch and B. Paumgartner (Salzburg & Leipzig, 1936).
- NOTTEBOHM, G., 'Mozartiana' (Leipzig, 1880). (Contains a number of letters and other documents previously unpublished.)
- 'Leopold Mozart, Reise-Aufzeichnungen, 1763-1771', edited by A. Schurig (Dresden, 1920).
- 'Mozarts Werkverzeichnis, 1784-1791' (Vienna, 1938). (A facsimile of Mozart's own thematic catalogue, edited with explanatory text by O. E. Deutsch. Another ed., by F. H. Mueller von Asow, not in facsimile, was published in Vienna in 1943.)
- KÜCHEL, L. VON, 'Chronologisch-thematisches Verzeichnis sämtlicher Tonwerke W. A. Mozarts' (Leipzig, 1862; 2nd ed., 1905; 3rd ed., thoroughly revised by Alfred Einstein, 1937, and reissued in a photolithographic reproduction, with corrections and additions, Ann Arbor, 1947). (Indispensable for the identification and description of the works.)
- SCHIEDERMAIR, L., 'W. A. Mozarts Handschrift in zeitlich geordneten Nachbildungen' (Leipzig, 1919).
- NISSEN, G. N. VON, 'Biographie W. A. Mozarts' (Leipzig, 1828; reissue 1849; French adaptation by A. Sowinski, Paris, 1869.) (Nissen, who married Mozart's widow, had access to a number of documents that have since disappeared, and his book is still of value.)
- JAHN, OTTO, 'Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart', 4 vols. (Leipzig, 1856-59; 4th ed. 1905-7; Eng. trans. by Pauline D. Townsend, 3 vols. London, 1882). (Still the fullest of all the biographies, although as a survey of the music it no longer holds pride of place.)
- ABERT, HERMANN, 'W. A. Mozart', 2 vols. (Leipzig, 1919-21, revised ed., 1923-24). (Issued as a revised edition of Jahn, but practically a new book. An excellent guide to the music.)
- WYZEWA, T. DE and SAINT-FOIX, G. DE, 'W. A. Mozart, sa vie musicale et son œuvre de l'enfance à la pleine maturité, 1756-77', 2 vols. (Paris, 1912). (An epoch-making book, the first to investigate with any thoroughness the sources and development of Mozart's style.)

- SAINT-FOIX, G. DE, 'W. A. Mozart, sa vie musicale et son œuvre'. III. 'Le Grand Voyage. L'Installation à Vienne.' IV. 'L'Épanouissement: Figaro, Don Juan, et les grandes symphonies.' V. 'Les Dernières Années.' 3 vols. (Paris, 1936, '39, '46). (Continuing and completing the great work begun in collaboration with T. de Wyzewa.)
- BORY, R., 'La Vie et l'œuvre de Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart par l'image' (Paris, 1948).

II. SUPPLEMENTARY LITERATURE

- BARRINGTON, HON. DAINES, 'Account of a very remarkable young musician' in Vol. LX of the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society, 1770. (Reprinted in Barrington's 'Miscellanies', 1781.)
- BELLAIGUE, C., 'Mozart' (Paris, 1906).
- BENN, CHRISTOPHER, 'Mozart on the Stage' (London, 1946).
- 'Bericht über die musikwissenschaftliche Tagung der Internationalen Stiftung Mozarteum in Salzburg . . . 1931', ed. by Erich Schenk (Leipzig, 1932).
- BLOOM, ERIC, 'The Limitations of Music, a Study in Aesthetics' (London, 1928). (Deals largely with Mozart.)
- 'Mozart' (London, 1935).
- BLÜMML, E. K., 'Aus Mozarts Freundes- und Familienkreis' (Vienna, 1923).
- BOSCHOT, A., 'La Lumière de Mozart' (Paris, 1928).
- 'Mozart' (Paris, 1935).
- BRUKNER, F., 'Die Zaubergeflöte. Unbekannte Handschriften und seltene Drucke aus der Frühzeit von Mozarts Oper' (Vienna, 1935).
- BRUNNER, H., 'Das Klavierklangeideal Mozarts und die Klaviere seiner Zeit' (Augsburg, Brunn, 1935).
- BUENZOD, E., 'Mozart' (Paris, 1930).
- CHANTAVOINE, JEAN, 'Mozart' (Paris, 1949).
- 'Mozart dans Mozart' (Paris, 1948). (A study of Mozart's repetitions and self-imitations.)
- COLLES, H. C., 'Mozart in Music Life To-Day', with a Postscript, 'Mozart's Tunes', in 'Essays and Lectures' (Oxford, 1945), pp. 168-96.
- CONRAD, LEOPOLD, 'Mozarts Dramaturgie der Oper' (Wurzburg, 1943).
- CURZON, H. DE, 'Mozart' (Paris, 1914; 2nd ed. 1938). (Chiefly critical.)
- DAVENPORT, MARCIA, 'Mozart' (New York, 1932).
- DENNERLEIN, HANS, 'Der unbekannte Mozart: die Welt seiner Klavierwerke' (Leipzig, 1951).
- DENT, EDWARD J., 'Mozart's Operas: a Critical Study' (London, 1913; 2nd ed. revised, 1947).
- DEUTSCH, O. E., 'Mozart und die Wiener Logen: zur Geschichte seiner Freimaurer-Kompositionen' (Vienna, 1932).
- DICKINSON, A. E. F., 'A Study of Mozart's Last Three Symphonies' (London, 1927).
- DUNHILL, THOMAS F., 'Mozart's String Quartets', 2 bks. (London, 1927).
- EINSTEIN, ALFRED, 'Mozart: his Character, his Work' (New York, 1945; London, 1947; German ed., Stockholm, 1950).
- 'Mozart's Ten Celebrated String Quartets' (M. Rev., III, 1942, p. 157).
- ENGEL, H., 'Die Entwicklung des deutschen Klavierkonzertes von Mozart bis Liszt' (Leipzig, 1927).
- FARMER, H. G. and SMITH, H., 'New Mozartiana: the Mozart relics in the Zaverl collection at the University of Glasgow' (Glasgow, 1935).
- GHEON, H., 'Promenades avec Mozart' (Paris, 1932). (Eng. trans. as 'In Search of Mozart', London, 1934.)
- GIRDLESTONE, C. M., 'Mozart et ses concertos pour piano' (Paris, 1939). In English as 'Mozart's Piano Concertos' (London, 1948).
- GOERGES, H., 'Das Klangsymbol des Todes im dramatischen Werk Mozarts' (Wolfenbüttel-Berlin, 1937).
- GOUNOD, C., 'Le Don Juan de Mozart' (Paris, 1890). (Eng. trans. as 'Mozart's Don Giovanni', London, 1895.)
- GROAG-BELMONTE, CAROLA, 'Die Frauen im Leben Mozarts' (Vienna & Leipzig, 1923).
- HAAS, R., 'Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart' (Potsdam, 1933; revised ed., without the illustrations, Potsdam, 1950).
- HAMMERLE, A., 'Mozart und einige Zeitgenossen. Neue Beiträge zur Salzburger Geschichte, Literatur und Musik' (Salzburg, 1877).
- HAUSSWALD, GÜNTER, 'Mozarts Serenaden' (Leipzig, 1951).

- HIRSCH, PAUL, 'Katalog einer Mozart-Bibliothek' (Frankfurt, 1906).
- HIRSCH, R., 'Mozarts Schauspieldirector' (Leipzig, 1859).
- HOLMES, EDWARD, 'The Life of Mozart' (London, 1845; new ed. by Ebenezer Prout, London, 1878; with introduction by Ernest Newman, in 'Everyman's Library', 1912).
- HUSSEY, DYNELEY, 'Mozart' (London, 1928).
- HUTCHINGS, ARTHUR, 'A Companion to Mozart's Piano Concertos' (London, 1948; 2nd ed. 1950).
- JOUBE, P. J., 'Le Don Juan de Mozart' (Fribourg, 1942; 2nd ed., revised, 1944).
- JUNGK, K., 'Tonbildliches und Tonsymbolisches in Mozarts Opern' (Berlin, 1938).
- KAESINER, E., 'Das Opernproblem und seine Lösung bei Mozart' (Jena, 1932).
- KING, A. HYATT, 'A Census of Mozart's Musical Autographs in England' (M.Q., Vol. XXXVIII, 1952, p. 566).
- 'Mozart's Piano Music' (M. Rev., V, 1944, p. 161).
- KLEIN, HERMAN, 'The Bel Canto, with special reference to the singing of Mozart' (London, 1923).
- KOMORCZYNSKI, E. VON, 'Emanuel Schikaneder' (Berlin, 1901).
- 'Der Vater der Zauberflöte, Emanuel Schikaneder' (Vienna, 1948).
- KREITMAIER, J., 'W. A. Mozart. Eine Charakterzeichnung des grossen Meisters nach den literarischen Quellen' (Düsseldorf, 1919). (Especially good on Leopold Mozart.)
- KUFFERATH, M., 'La Flûte enchantée de Mozart' (Paris, 1914-19).
- LACH, R., 'W. A. Mozart als Theoretiker' (Vienna, 1918).
- LEITZMANN, A., 'Mozarts Persönlichkeit' (Leipzig, 1914).
- LERT, ERNST, 'Mozart auf dem Theater' (Berlin, 1918; revised ed., 1921).
- LÜTHY, W., 'Mozart und die Tonartencharakteristik' (Strassburg, 1931).
- MATTLINGER, K. H., 'Mozarts Bekenntnisse und Lehren über seine Kunst' (St. Ludwig, 1918).
- MERIAN, HANS, 'Mozarts Meisteropern' (Leipzig, 1905; new ed. 1916).
- MERSMANN, H., 'Mozart' (Berlin, 1925).
- MILA, MASSIMO, 'Saggi mozartiani' (Milan, 1945).
- 'Mitteilungen für die Mozart-Gemeinde in Berlin' (Berlin, 1895-1925).
- 'Mozart-Jahrbuch', edited by Herman Abert. 3 vols. (Munich & Leipzig, 1923, '24, '29).
- 'Mozarteums-Mitteilungen' (Salzburg, 1918-21).
- NETIL, P., 'Mozart und die königliche Kunst. Die freimaurerische Grundlage der Zauberflöte' (Berlin, 1932).
- 'Neues Mozart-Jahrbuch', edited by Erich Valentin. 3 vols. (Regensburg, 1941-43).
- NIEMI-SCHILK, F., 'Leben des K. K. Kapellmeisters Wolfgang Gottlieb Mozart, nach Originalquellen beschrieben' (Prague, 1798; revised ed. 1808; facsimile of 1st ed., with additions from 2nd ed. by E. Rychnovský, Prague, 1905).
- NOTTEBOHM, G., 'Mozartiana' (Leipzig, 1880).
- OLDMAN, C. B., 'Mozart and Modern Research' (Proc. Mus. Ass., 1932).
- OULIBICHEFF [ULIBISHEV], A., 'Nouvelle Biographie de Mozart', 3 vols. (Moscow, 1843; German trans. by A. Shraishuon, 1847, 2nd ed. 1859). (Still valuable for its musical criticism.)
- PAUMGARTNER, B., 'Mozart' (Berlin, 1927; revised ed., Zurich, 1940).
- PIRCKMAYR, F., 'Zur Lebensgeschichte Mozarts' ('Mitteilungen der Gesellschaft für Salzburgerische Landeskunde', Bd. 16, Salzburg, 1876).
- PIRKER, MAX, 'Rund um die Zauberflöte' (Vienna, 1920).
- PITROT, R., 'La Vie de Mozart' (Paris, 1936).
- POHL, C. F., 'Mozart und Haydn in London' (Vienna, 1867).
- POLE, WILLIAM, 'The Story of Mozart's Requiem' (London, 1879).
- PRIEGER, KARL, 'Urtheile berühmter Dichter, Philosophen und Musiker über Mozart' (Wiesbaden, 1885; 2nd ed. 1886).
- PROD'HOMME, J.-G., 'Mozart raconté par ceux qui l'ont vu' (Paris, 1928).
- 'W. A. Mozart, sa vie et ses œuvres' (Paris, 1925). (A free adaptation of the biography by A. Schurig).
- REINECKE, C., 'Zur Wiederbelebung der Mozartschen Klavierkonzerte' (Leipzig, 1891).
- ROUCHE, J., 'La Mise en scène de Don Juan' (Paris, 1934).
- SAINI-FOIX, G. DE, 'Les Symphonies de Mozart' (Paris, 1932; Eng. trans. by Leslie Orrey, London, 1947).
- SCHFURLER, D. F., 'Mozart's Verbliff in Nederland en het muziekleven aldaar in de laatste helft der achttiende eeuw'. (The Hague, 1883; greatly enlarged as 'Het muziekleven in Nederland in de tweede helft der 18e eeuw, in verband met Mozarts verbliff aldaar'. The Hague, 1909.)
- SCHIEDERMAIR, L., 'Mozart, sein Leben und seine Werke' (Munich, 1922; 2nd augmented ed. Bonn, 1948).
- SCHMID, E. F., 'Ein schwabisches Mozart-Buch' (Stuttgart, 1948). (A detailed study of Mozart's ancestry.)
- SCHULIZ, D., 'Mozarts Jugendsinfonien' (Leipzig, 1900).
- SCHURIG, A., 'Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart', 2 vols. (Leipzig, 1913; 2nd ed., 1923). (Useful for biographical details. The illustrations are excellent. The French adaptation by J.-G. Prod'homme omits them as well as many other distinctive features of the original.)
- SIDERHOLM, C. G., 'Mozart's Death' (M. & L., XXXII, 1951, p. 315). (A medical study.)
- SITWELL, SACHREVILL, 'Mozart' (London, 1932).
- STEFAN, P., 'Don Giovanni' (Vienna, 1936).
- 'Die Zauberflöte' (Vienna, 1937).
- TALBOT, J. E., 'Mozart' (London, 1934).
- TENSCHERT, R., 'Mozart' (Leipzig, 1930).
- 'Mozart. Ein Künstlerleben in Bildern und Dokumenten' (Amsterdam, 1931).
- 'Mozart: ein Leben für die Oper' (Vienna, 1941).
- 'Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart', trans. by Emily Anderson (London, 1952).
- THIEME, G., 'Der Klangstil des Mozartorchesters' (Borna-Leipzig, 1936).
- TIERNOT, J., 'Don Juan de Mozart. Étude historique et critique, analyse musical' (Paris, 1929).
- TORRIFRANCA, F., 'Le origini italiane del romanticismo musicale' (Turin, 1930). (Contains over 200 pages on the origins of the "Mozartian" style.)
- TURNER, W. J., 'Mozart: the Man and his Works' (London, 1938).
- VALENTIN, ERICH, 'Wege zu Mozart' (Ratisbon, 1941).
- 'Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart: Leben und Werk' (Leipzig, 1944).
- WALTERSHAUSEN, H. W. VON, 'Die Zauberflöte. Eine opern-dramatische Studie' (Munich, 1920).
- WARD, MARTHA KINGDON, 'Mozart and the Clarinet' (M. & L., XXVIII, 1947, p. 126).
- 'Mozart and the Bassoon' (ibid., XXX, 1949, p. 8).
- 'Mozart and the Horn' (ibid., XXXI, 1950, p. 318).
- WATSON, J. ARTHUR, 'Mozart and the Vi^ola' (M. & L., XXII, 1941, p. 26).
- WATSON, WILLIAM, 'An Astounding Forgery' (Requiem), (M. & L., VIII, 1927, p. 61).
- WELLSZ, EGON, '"Don Giovanni" and the "dramma giocoso"' (M. Rev., IV, 1943, p. 121).
- WILDER, V., 'Mozart, l'homme et l'artiste', 2 vols. (Paris, 1880; new ed. in one vol., 1922).
- WURZBACH, C. VON, 'Mozart-Buch' (Vienna, 1869). (A comprehensive reference-book for the student of Mozart. Still of value.)
- ZSCHORLICH, P., 'Mozart-Heuchelei. Ein Beitrag zur Kunstgeschichte des 20. Jahrhunderts' (Leipzig, 1906). (One of the few attempts to make out a case against Mozart.)

¹ The English transliteration of the name should be Ulibishev: it appears so in the entry devoted to this author in the present edition of this Dictionary.

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

The following list of Mozart's works (excluding sketches and doubtful compositions) is based on Köchel's Catalogue as revised by Alfred Einstein (Leipzig, 1937, and later corrections). The order in which each section is arranged accords with Dr. Einstein's new numbers, which are more reliably chronological than Köchel's; but as the old K. numbers are still in general use, and will necessarily remain so since they appear in all modern editions, they are shown here side by side with the new numeration.

(a) VOCAL

DRAMATIC WORKS

Einstein No.	Köchel No.	Title	Words by	Composed at	Finished	Written for
35	35	'Die Schuldigkeit des ersten Gebotes.' Sacred play with music.	Jacobus Antonius Wimmer.	Salzburg.	Mar. 1767.	Archiepiscopal Court of Salzburg; perf. 12 Mar. 1767.
38	38	'Apollo et Hyacinthus seu Hyacinthi Metamorphosis.' Latin comedy. Intermezzo to 'Clementia Croesi'.	Rufinus Widl.	Salzburg.	May 1767.	Salzburg University; perf. 13 May 1767.
46a	51	'La finta semplice.' Opera buffa.	Goldoni, arr. by Marco Coltellini.	Vienna.	July 1768.	Vienna (not prod.); perf. Salzburg, 1 May 1769.
46b	50	'Bastien und Bastienne.' German operetta.	Friedrich Wilhelm Weiskern, after Favart.	Vienna.	Summer 1768.	Dr. Anton Mesmer's garden theatre; perf. ? Oct. 1768.
74a	87	'Mitridate, re di Ponto.' Opera seria.	Vittorio Amadeo Cigna-Santi, after Racine.	Milan.	Dec. 1770.	Teatro Regio Ducal, Milan; prod. 26 Dec. 1770.
111	111	'Ascanio in Alba.' Serenata.	Giuseppe Parini. ¹	Milan.	23 Sept. 1771.	Wedding of Archduke Ferdinand of Austria and Princess Maria Ricciarda of Modena; prod. Teatro Regio Ducal, Milan, 17 Oct. 1771.
126	126	'Il sogno di Scipione.' Serenata.	Metastasio.	Salzburg.	Mar. 1772.	Count Hieronymus Colloredo, Archbishop of Salzburg; perf. Salzburg, 29 Apr. 1772.
135	135	'Lucio Silla.' Dramma per musica.	Giovanni da Gamerra, with alterations by Metastasio.	Salzburg and Milan.	Dec. 1772.	Teatro Regio Ducal, Milan; prod. 26 Dec. 1772.
196	196	'La finta giardiniera.' Opera buffa.	? Ranieri Calzabigi.	Salzburg and Munich.	Jan. 1775.	Court Theatre, Munich; prod. 13 Jan. 1775.
208	208	'Il re pastore.' Dramatic festival play.	Metastasio.	Salzburg.	Apr. 1775.	Archiepiscopal Court of Salzburg; prod. 23 Apr. 1775.
299b	App. 10	Ballet for the pantomime 'Les Petits Riens'.	Choreography by Jean Noverre.	Paris.	June 1778.	Opéra, Paris; prod. 11 June 1778.

336a	345	'Thamos, König in Aegypten.' Incidental music.	Tobias Philipp von Gebler.	Salzburg.	1779 (some of the music as early as 1773). (un- finished). Jan. 1781.	Court Theatre, Munich; prod. 29 Jan. 1781.
336b	344	'Zaide.' German opera.	Johann Andreas Schacht- ner.	Salzburg.	1779. (un- finished). Jan. 1781.	Burg Theatre, Vienna; prod. 16 July 1782.
366	366	'Idomeneo, rè di Creta.' Opera seria.	Giambattista Varesco, after Dauchet.	Salzburg and Munich. Vienna.	29 May 1782.
384	384	'Die Entführung aus dem Serail.' German musical play.	Gottlieb Stephanie, jun., after Bretzner.	Salzburg.	Oct. 1783 (unfinished). Oct. 1783 (unfinished).	Austrian Court; perf. Schönbrunn Palace, 7 Feb. 1786.
422	422	'L'oca del Cairo.' Opera buffa.	Giambattista Varesco.	Salzburg.	29 Apr. 1786.	Burg Theatre, Vienna; prod. 1 May 1786.
424a	430	'Lo sposo deluso, ossia La rivalità di tre donne per un solo amante.' Opera buffa.	? Lorenzo da Ponte.	Salzburg.	28 Oct. 1787.	Prague Opera; prod. 29 Oct. 1787.
486	486	'Der Schauspieldirektor.' Comedy in one act.	Gottlieb Stephanie, jun.	Vienna.	Jan. 1790.	Burg Theatre, Vienna; prod. 26 Jan. 1790.
492	492	'Le nozze di Figaro.' Commedia in musica.	Lorenzo da Ponte, after Beaumarchais.	Vienna.	July 1791.	Theater auf der Wieden, Vienna; prod. 30 Sept. 1791.
527	527	'Il dissoluto punito, ossia Il Don Giovanni.' Dramma giocoso.	Lorenzo da Ponte.	Vienna and Prague. Vienna.	5 Sept. 1791.	Coronation of Emperor Leopold II as King of Bohemia; prod. Prague, 6 Sept. 1791.
588	588	'Così fan tutte, ossia La scuola degli amanti.' Opera buffa.	Emanuel Schikaneder & ? Giesecke.	Vienna and Prague.
620	620	'Die Zauberflöte,' German opera.	Caterino Mazzola, after Metastasio.	Vienna and Prague.
621	621	'La clemenza di Tito.' Opera seria.

See also Various Orchestral Works K. 206; K. 362; E. & K. 367; E. 461d & K. 446.

CHURCH MUSIC

Einstein No.	Köchel No.	Title	Scored for	Composed at	Finished
33	33	'Kyrie', F ma.	4 voices & sigs.	Paris.	12 June 1766.
34	34	'Offertorium in Festo St. Benedicti.'	4 voices, 2 trumpets, drums, sigs. & org.	? Secon Monas- tery, Bavaria.	21 Mar. 1767.
47	47	'Veni sancte spiritus.'	4 voices, 2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums, sigs. & org.	Vienna.	Autumn 1768.
47d	49	'Missa brevis', G ma.	4 voices, sigs. & org.	Vienna.	Nov. 1768.
61a	65	'Missa brevis', D mi.	4 voices, sigs. & org.	Salzburg.	14 Jan. 1769.
66	66	Mass, C ma. ('Dominicus' Mass).	4 voices, 2 trumpets, drums, sigs. & org. (2 oboes, 2 horns & 2 more trumpets added later).	Salzburg.	Oct. 1769.

¹ It is generally believed that Giuseppe Parini wrote the text for Mozart, and it is interesting to note that according to the express statement in the Lisbon libretto he had merely altered it from an earlier work by Count Claudio Nicolo Stampa, a Milanese dramatist of the 1720-30s.

Einstein No.	Kochel No.	Title	Scored for	Composed at	Finished
66a	117	'Offertorium pro omni tempore.'	4 voices, 2 flutes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	Sept. or Oct. 1769.
66b	141	'Te Deum', C ma.	4 voices, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	End of 1769.
67	89	'Kyrie', G ma.	5 sopranos unaccompanied.	Rome.	May 1770.
73a	85	'Misereatur', A mi.	Alto, tenor, bass & org.	Bologna.	July or Aug. 1770.
73a	44	Antiphon, "Cibavit eos".	4 voices and org.	Bologna.	Sept. or Oct. 1770.
73v	86	Antiphon, "Quaerite primum regnum Dei".	4 voices unaccompanied.	Bologna.	9 Oct. 1770.
74d	108	'Regina Coeli', C ma.	4 voices, 2 oboes (or flutes), 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	May 1771.
74e	109	'Litaniae de B.M.V. (Laurentinae).'	4 voices, 3 trombones, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	May 1771.
74 f	72	'Offertorium pro Festo S Joannis Baptistae.'	4 voices, stgs. and org.	Salzburg.	May or June 1771.
90	90	'Kyrie', D mi.	4 voices & org.	Salzburg.	Summer 1771.
90a	116	'Missa brevis', F ma.	4 voices, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	Summer 1771.
93	93	Psaln, "De profundis", C mi.	4 voices, vns. & org.	Salzburg.	Summer 1771.
93b	221	'Kyrie', C ma.	4 voices & inst. bass.	Salzburg.	Summer 1771.
93d	326	Hymn, "Iustum deduxit Dominus".	4 voices, stg. bass & org.	Salzburg.	Summer 1771.
114a	139	Mass, C mi.-ma.	4 voices, 2 oboes, 4 trumpets, 3 trombones, drums, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	Early 1772.
125	125	'Litaniae de venerabili altaris sacramento.'	4 voices, 2 oboes (or flutes), 2 horns, 2 trumpets, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	March 1772.
127	127	'Regina Coeli', B \flat ma.	4 voices, 2 oboes (or flutes), 2 horns, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	May 1772.
138a	165	Motet, "Exsultate, jubilate".	Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 horns, stgs. & org.	Milan.	16 Jan. 1773.
138b	198	Offertory, "Sub tuum praesidium".	Soprano or tenor, stgs. & org.	Milan.	Early 1773.
166d	115	'Missa brevis', C ma.	4 voices & org.	Salzburg.	Spring 1773.
166e	223	'Oeanna.'	4 voices, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	? Summer 1773.
167	167	'Missa in honorem SS ^{mae} Trinitatis', C ma.	4 voices, 2 oboes, 4 trumpets, drums, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	June 1773.
186d	195	'Litaniae Laurentinae', D ma.	4 voices, 2 oboes, 2 horns, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	Before May 1774.
186f	192	'Missa brevis', F ma.	4 voices, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	24 June 1774.
186g	193	'Dixit' and 'Magnificat', C ma.	4 voices, 2 trumpets, drums, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	July 1774.
186h	194	'Missa brevis', D ma.	4 voices, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	8 Aug. 1774.
186i	91	'Kyrie', D ma.	4 voices, stgs. & org.	? Salzburg.	? 1774.
196b	220	'Missa brevis', C ma.	4 voices, 2 trumpets, drums, stgs. & org.	Munich.	Jan. 1775.
205a	222	'Offertorium de tempore', "Misericordias Domini".	4 voices, 2 oboes, 2 horns, stgs. & org.	Munich.	Jan. or Feb. 1775.
243	243	'Litaniae de venerabili altaris sacramento', E \flat ma.	4 voices, 2 oboes (or flutes), 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 3 trombones, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	Mar. 1776.
246a	262	'Missa longa', C ma.	4 voices, 2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	1776 (c. May).

248a	260	'Offertorium de venerabili sacramento', "Veuite, populi", Mass, C ma. ("Credo Mass").	Double chorus, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	June 1776.
257	257	'Missa brevis', C ma. ("Spaur Mass").	4 voices, 2 oboes, 2 trumpets, 2 trombones, drums, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	Nov. 1776.
258	258	'Missa brevis', C ma. ("Organ solo Mass").	4 voices, 2 trumpets, drums, stgs. & org. (2 oboes added later).	Salzburg.	Dec. 1776.
259	259	'Offertorium de B.M. Maria', F ma.	4 voices, 2 trumpets, drums, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	Dec. 1776.
272a	277	'Missa brevis', B♭ ma.	4 voices, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	Summer or autumn 1776.
272b	275	'Graduale ad festum B.M.V.', F ma.	4 voices, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	Summer or autumn 1776.
273	273	'Kyrie', E♭ ma. (completed by Stadler).	4 voices, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	9 Sept. 1777.
296a	322	Mass, C ma. ("Coronation Mass").	4 voices, 2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, 3 trombones, drums, stgs. & org.	Mannheim.	Jan. or Feb. 1778.
317	317	'Vesperae de Dominica', C ma.	4 voices, 2 trumpets, drums stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	23 Mar. 1779.
321	321	'Regina Coeli', C ma.	4 voices, 2 oboes, 2 trumpets, drums, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	1779.
321b	276	'Kyrie', C ma.	4 voices, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 trumpets, drums, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	1779.
323	323	'Zwei deutsche Kirchenlieder', "O Gottes Lamm", and "Als aus Ägypten Israel", C ma.	1 voice with inst. bass.	Salz.	1779.
336c	343	'Vesperae solennes de confessore', 'Kyrie', D mi.	4 voices, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 trumpets, 3 trombones, drums, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	1779.
337	337	Mass, C ma. (unfinished).	4 voices, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 trumpets, 3 trombones, drums, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	Mar. 1780.
339	339	Motet, "Ave, verum corpus".	4 voices, bassoon, 2 trumpets, 3 trombones, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	1780.
368a	341	'Requiem', D mi. (completed by Susman).	4 voices, 2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 clar., 2 bassoons, 4 horns, 2 trumpets, drums, stgs. & org.	Munich.	Between Jan.-Mar. 1781.
417a	427	'Kyrie', D mi.	Solo voices, chorus, flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, 4 trombones, drums, stgs. & org.	Vienna.	Summer 1782 May 1783.
618	618	Motet, "Ave, verum corpus".	4 voices, stgs. & org.	Baden, nr. Vienna.	17 June 1791.
626	626	'Requiem', D mi. (completed by Susman).	4 solo voices, chor., 2 bassi horns, 2 bassoons, 2 trumpets, 3 trombones, drums, stgs. & org.	Vienna.	Comp. until Dec. 1791 (unfinished).

SOLO ARIAS WITH ORCHESTRA

Einzel No.	Kitel No.	Title	Scored for	Composed at	Finished	Written for
19c	21	"Va, dal furor portata" (Metastasio).	Tenor, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	London.	1765.	Ciprandi, tenor.
23	23	"Conservati fedele" (Metastasio).	Soprano & stgs.	The Hague.	Oct. 1765.	Princess of Orange.

Enstein No.	Köchel No.	Title	Scored for	Composed at	Finished	Written for
33i	36	Recit., "Or che il dover"; Aria, "Tali e cotanti sono";	Tenor, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Salzburg.	21 Dec. 1766.	? Maria Magdalena Haydn.
61c	70	Recit., "A Berenice"; Aria, "Sol nascente";	Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Prob. 28 Feb. 1769.
71	71	"Ah, più tremar non voglio" (Metastasio).	Tenor, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg or Italy.	End of 1769 or early 1770.
73a	143	Recit., "Ergo interest"; Aria, "Quare superna";	Soprano, stgs. & org.	Milan.	Feb. 1770.
73b	78	"Per pietà, bell' idol mio" (Metastasio).	Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Milan.	Feb. or Mar. 1770.
73c	88	"Fra cento affanni" (Metastasio).	Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Milan.	Feb. or Mar. 1770.
73d	79	Recit., "O temerario Arbace"; Aria, "Per quel paterno ampleso" (Metastasio).	Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Milan.	Feb. or Mar. 1770.
73e	77	Recit., "Misero me"; Aria, "Misero pargoletto" (Metastasio).	Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Milan.	Mar. 1770.
73o	82	"Se ardire, e speranza" (Metastasio).	Soprano, 2 flutes, 2 horns & stgs.	Rome.	Apr. 1770.
73p	83	"Se tutti i mali miei" (Metastasio).	Soprano, 2 stgs. oboes, 2 trumpets & stgs. (2 horns added later).	Rome.	Apr. or May 1770.
74b	74b	"Non curo l'affetto" (Metastasio).	Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Milan or Pavia.	Early 1771.
209	209	"Si mostra la sorte."	Tenor, 2 flutes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	19 May 1775.
209a	—	"Un dente guasto e gelato" (fragment).	Bass, vn., horn & bass stgs.	Salzburg.	Spring 1775.	Francesco Fortuni.
210	210	"Con ossequio, con rispetto."	Tenor, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	May 1775.
217	217	"Voi avete un cor fedele" (after Goldoni).	Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	26 Oct. 1775.
255	255	Recit., "Ombra felice"; Aria, "Io ti lascio";	Contralto, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Sept. 1776.
256	256	"Clarice cara sposa" (? G. Pietrosellini).	Tenor, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Sept. 1776.	Palmini, tenor.
272	272	Recit., "Ah, lo previdi"; Aria, "Ah, t'invola agl'occhi miei";	Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Aug. 1777.	Josefa Dušek.
294	294	Recit., "Alcandro, lo confesso"; Aria, "Non so d'onde viene" (Metastasio).	Soprano, 2 flutes, 2 clars., 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Mannheim.	24 Feb. 1778.	Aloysia Weber.
295	295	Recit., "Se al labbro mio"; Aria, "Il cor dolente" (Metastasio).	Tenor, 2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Mannheim.	27 Feb. 1778.	Anton Raaff.
295a	486a	Recit., "Basta, vincisti"; Aria, "Ah, non lasciarmi" (Metastasio).	Soprano, 2 flutes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Mannheim.	27 Feb. 1778.	Dorothea Wendling.

300b	316	Recit., "Popoli di Tesaglia"; Aria, "Io non chiedi, eterni"; (Calzabigi).	Soprano, oboe, bassoon, 2 horns & stgs.	Paris and Munich.	8 Jan. 1779.	Aloysia Weber.
317b	146	"Kommet her, ihr frechen Sunder."	Soprano, stgs. & org.	Salzburg.	Mar. or Apr. 1779.
368	368	Recit., "Ma che vi fece"; Aria, "Sperai vicino al lido" (Metastasio).	Soprano, 2 flutes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Munich.	Jan. 1781.	? Elisabeth Wendling.
369	369	Scena, "Misera, dove son io?"; Aria, "Ah, non son' io che parlo" (Metastasio).	Soprano, 2 flutes, 2 horns & stgs.	Munich.	8 Mar. 1781.	Countess von Faun-garten.
374	374	Recit., "A questo seno deh vieni"; Aria, "Or che il cielo a me ti rende"; "Der Liebe himmlisches Gefühl."	Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	Apr. 1781.	Ceccarelli, male soprano.
382h	119		Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	1782.
383	383	"Nehmt meinen Dank, ihr holden Götter."	Soprano, flute, oboe, bassoon & stgs.	Vienna.	10 Apr. 1782.	Aloysia Lange.
416	416	Scena, "Mia speranza adorata"; Aria, "Ah, non sai qual pena" (Gaetano Sertor).	Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	8 Jan. 1783.	Aloysia Lange.
416b	435	"Muss ich auch durch tausend Drachen."	Tenor, flute, oboe, clar., 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Vienna.	1783.
416c	433	"Männer suchen stets zu naschen."	Bass, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	1783.
417a	178	"Ah, spiegiarti."	Soprano & pf. (Sketch for 418).	Vienna.	1783.	Aloysia Lange.
418	418	"Vorrei spiegarvi, oh Dio", for Anfossi's "Il curioso indiscreto"; "No, no, che non sei capace", for the same.	Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	20 June 1783.	Aloysia Lange.
419	419		Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Vienna.	June 1783.	Aloysia Lange.
420	420	"Per pietà, non ricercate", for the same.	Tenor, 2 clar., 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	21 June 1783.	Valentin Adamberger.
421a	432	Recit., "Così dunque tradisci"; Aria, "Aspri rimorsi atroci" (Metastasio).	Bass, 2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	1783.	? Ludwig Fischer.
423b	431	Recit., "Misero! o sogno!"; Aria, "Aura, che intorno spiri"; "Non più, tutto ascoltai"; Rondo, "Non temer, amato bene" (Varesco). Extra number for "Idomeneo" (E. & K. 366).	Tenor, 2 flutes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	Der 1783.	? Valentin Adamberger
490	490	Scena, "Ch'io mi scordi di te"; Rondo, "Non temer, amato bene" (Varesco).	Soprano, vn. obbligato, 2 clar., 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	10 Mar. 1786.	? Baroness Pulini and Count Hatzfeldt (vn.).
505	505	Recit., "Alcandro, lo confesso"; Aria, "Non so d'onde viene" (Metastasio).	Soprano, pf. obbligato, 2 clar., 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	27 Dec. 1786.	Ann Selina Storace and himself.
512	512		Bass, flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	18 Mar. 1787.	Ludwig Fischer.
513	513	"Io ti lascio, o figlia" (Duca Sant'Angioli Morbelli).	Bass, flute, 2 clar., 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	23 Mar. 1787.	Gottfried von Jacquin.
528	528	Scena, "Bella mia fiamma"; Aria, "Resta, o caro".	Soprano, flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Prague.	3 Nov. 1787.	Josefa Dutek.

Einstein No.	Köchel No.	Title	Scored for	Composed at	Finished	Written for
538	538	"Ah, se in ciel, benigne stelle" (Metastasio).	Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	4 Mar. 1788.	Aloysia Lange.
539	539	"Ein deutsches Krieglied", "Ich möchte wohl der Kaiser sein" (J. H. L. Gleim).	Baritone, piccolo, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, perc. & stgs.	Vienna.	5 Mar. 1788.	Baummann, jun., actor.
541	541	Arietta, "Un bacio di mano" (? da Ponte).	Bass, flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	May 1788.	Francesco Albertarelli.
569	569	"Ohne Zwang, aus eignem Triebe." (3 bars only known from Mozart's own catalogue.)	?; 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	Jan. 1789.
577	577	Rondo, "Al desio di chi t'adora", Extra number for Susanna in 'Le nozze di Figaro' (? da Ponte).	Soprano, 2 basset horns, 2 horns, 2 bassoons & stgs.	Vienna.	July 1789.	Adriana Gabrieli (Ferrarese del Bene).
578	578	"Alma grande e nobil core" (Giuseppe Palombini). For Cimarosa's 'I due baroni'.	Soprano, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	Aug. 1789.	Louise Villeneuve.
579	579	"Un moto di gioia." Extra number for Susanna in 'Le nozze di Figaro' (? da Ponte).	Soprano, flute, oboe, bassoon, 2 Eng. horns & stgs.	Vienna.	Aug. 1789.	Adriana Gabrieli (Ferrarese del Bene).
580	580	"Schon lacht der holde Frühling", for Paisiello's 'Il barbiere di Siviglia'.	Soprano, 2 clars., 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	17 Sept. 1789.	Josefa Hofer.
582	582	"Chi sa, chi sa, qual sia" (da Ponte), for Martin's 'Il burbero di buon core'.	Soprano, 2 clars., 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	Oct. 1789.	Louise Villeneuve.
583	583	"Vado, ma dove?" (da Ponte), for the same.	Soprano, 2 clars., 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	Oct. 1789.	Louise Villeneuve.
584	584	"Rivolgete a lui lo sguardo" (da Ponte), originally for 'Così fan tutte'.	Bass, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs. (2 horns cancelled).	Vienna.	Dec. 1789.	Francesco Benucci.
612	612	"Per questa bella mano."	Bass, double bass obbligato , flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	8 Mar. 1791.	Franz Gerl and Fischberger (double bass).
621a	App. 245	"Io ti lascio."	Bass & stgs.	Prague.	Sept. 1791.

CHORAL WORKS WITH ORCHESTRA

Einstein No.	Köchel No.	Title	Words by	Composed at	Finished
334	42	'Grabmusik.' Passion Cantata.	? a local Salzburg poet.	Salzburg.	Holy Week 1767; final chor. with recit. c. 1773-76.
74c	118	'La Betulia liberata.' Oratorio. Solo voices, chor. & orch.	Metastasio.	Journey home from Italy or Salzburg.	Mar. or Apr. 1771.

420d	429	Cantata, "Dir, Seele des Weltalls". Male voices & orch.; also for soprano, mixed chor. & orch.	?	Vienna.	1783 (? spring).
469	469	Cantata, 'Davidde penitente', 3 solo voices, chor. & orch. Mainly based on the Mass in G m., E. 417a, K. 427.	Lorenzo da Ponte.	Vienna.	1785.
471	471	Cantata, 'Die Maurensfreude'. Tenor, male chor. & orch.	Franz Petran.	Vienna.	20 Apr. 1785.
615	615	Final chorus, "Viviamo felici", for Sarti's 'Le gelosie villane'. (5 bars only known from Mozart's own catalogue).	Tommaso Grandi.	Vienna.	20 Apr. 1791.
623	623	'Eine kleine Freimaurer-Kantate'. Male chor. & orch.	Emanuel Schikaneder.	Vienna.	15 Nov. 1791.

MUSIC FOR SEVERAL VOICES UNACCOMPANIED

Einstein No.	Köchel No.	Title	Words by or from	Composed at	Finished
20	20	Sacred Madrigal (chorus), "God is our refuge".	46th Psalm.	London.	July 1765.
73i & r	89a	5 Riddle Canons.	Latin texts from the vignettes in Martini's Storia della musica .	Rome; Bologna.	1770; July & Aug. 1770.
382a	229	Canon, "Sie ist dahin".	Holty, 'Auf den Foder einer Nachgall'.	Vienna.	c. 1782.
382b	230	Canon, "Selig, selig alle".	Holty, 'Elegie beim Grabe meines Vaters'.	Vienna.	1782.
382c	231	Canon, "Leck mich".	Mozart.	Vienna.	1782.
382d	233	Canon, "Leck mir".	Mozart.	Vienna.	1782.
382e	234	Canon, "Bei der Hitz im Sommer".	Mozart.	Vienna.	1782.
382f	347	Canon, "Lass uns ziehn".	Added by Köchel.	Vienna.	1782.
382g	348	Canon, "V' amo di core teneramente".	Added by Köchel.	Vienna.	1782.
507	507	Canon, "Heiterkeit und leichtes Blut".	Added by Hartel.	Vienna.	3 June 1786.
508	508	Canon, "Auf das Wohl aller Freunde".	Added by Hartel.	Vienna.	3 June 1786.
508a	508a	8 Canons.	None.	Vienna.	3 June 1786.
509a	232	Canon, "Lieber Freitsidler".	Mozart.	Vienna.	Spring 1787.
515b	228	Double Canon, "Al., zu kurz ist unsers Lebens Lauf".	Added by Hartel.	Vienna.	24 Apr. 1787.
553	553	Canon, "Alleluia".	Liturgical.	Vienna.	2 Sept. 1788.
554	554	Canon, "Ave Maria".	Liturgical.	Vienna.	2 Sept. 1788.
555	555	Canon, "Lacrimoso son io".	Mozart.	Vienna.	2 Sept. 1788.
556	556	Canon, "G'rechtelt's enk".	Mozart.	Vienna.	2 Sept. 1788.
557	557	Canon, "Nascoso è il mio sol".	Mozart?	Vienna.	2 Sept. 1788.
558	558	Canon, "Gehn ma in 'n Prada".	Mozart.	Vienna.	2 Sept. 1788.
559	559	Canon, "Difficile lectu mihi".	Mozart.	Vienna.	c. 1785; entered into catalogue 2 Sept. 1788.

Einstein No.	Köchel No.	Title	Words by or from	Composed at	Finished
560a	560a	Canon, "O du eselhafter Peierl".	Mozart.	Vienna.	c. 1785; entered into catalogue 2 Sept. 1788.
560b	560b	Canon, "O du eselhafter Martin".	Mozart.	Vienna.	c. 1785; entered into catalogue 2 Sept. 1788.
561	561	Canon, "Bona Nox, bist a rechta Ox".	Mozart.	Vienna.	2 Sept. 1788.
562	562	Canon, "Caro bell' idol mio".	Mozart.	Vienna.	2 Sept. 1788.
MISCELLANEOUS VOCAL PIECES
383d	440	Aria, "In te spero, o sposo".	Metastasio (from 'Demofonte').	Vienna.	Spring 1782.
384 App.	389	Soprano & inst. bass. Fragment. Duet, "Welch ängstliches Beben", 2 tenors & orch., originally in 'Die Entführung aus dem Serail', E. & K. 384.	Stephanie, jun.	Vienna.	Apr. or May 1782.
385b 424b	393 434	Solfeggi for voice. Trio, "Del gran regno delle Amazoni". Tenor, 2 basses & orch.	None. ? G. Petrosellini (for a comic opera).	Vienna. Salzburg.	Aug. 1782. End of 1785 (previously listed Summer 1783).
436	436	Trio, "Ecco quel fiero istante". 2 sopranos, bass & 3 basset horns.	Metastasio (from the 'Canzonette').	Vienna.	1783.
437	437	Trio, "Mi lagnerò tacendo". 2 sopranos, bass, 2 clars. & basset horn.	Metastasio (from 'Siroe').	Vienna.	1783.
438	438	Trio, "Se lontan, ben mio, tu sei". 3 voices, 2 clars. & basset horn.	Metastasio (from 'Strofe per musica').	Vienna.	1783.
439	439	Trio, "Due pupille amabili". 2 sopranos, bass & 3 basset horns.	?	Vienna.	1783.
439a	346	Trio, "Luci care, luci belle". 3 voices & 3 basset horns.	Mozart.	Vienna.	1783.
441	441	Trio, "Liebes Mandel, wo is's Bändel". Soprano, tenor, bass & sgs.	Giovanni Bertati.	Vienna.	5 Nov. 1785.
479	479	Quartet with orch. "Dite almeno", for Bianchi's 'L'avvillanella rapita', Trio with orch., "Mandina amabile", for the same.	Giovanni Bertati.	Vienna.	21 Nov. 1785.
480	480	Song, "Zerfließet heut', geliebte Brüder". Tenor, chor. & org.	Augustin Veith, Edler von Schittersberg.	Vienna.	Dec. 1785.
483	483	Chorus, "Ihr unsre neuen Leiter". 3 voices & org.	?	Vienna.	Dec. 1785.
484	484	Duet, "Spiegarti, oh Dio, non posso". 3 voices & org.	?	Vienna.	10 Mar. 1786.
489	489	Extra number for 'Idomeneo' (E. & K. 366).	? Giambattista Varesco.	Vienna.	1787.
532	532	Trio, "Grazie agl' inganni tuoi". Soprano, tenor, bass & orch.	Metastasio (Canzonetta 'La Libertà a Nice').	Vienna.	16 July 1788.
549	549	Canzonetta, "Più non si trovano". 2 sopranos, bass & 3 basset horns.	Metastasio (from 'L' Olimpiade').	Vienna.

	App. 5		Mozart.		Vienna.
571a		Comic Quartet, "Caro mio, Druck und Schluck", Soprano, 2 tenors, bass & pf.	Mozart.		Vienna.	Early 1789.
592a	625	Comic Duets, "Nun liebes Weibchen", Soprano, bass & orch. For Schikaneder's 'Stein der Weisen' (Doubtful, probably by B. Schack.)	Emanuel Schikaneder.		Vienna.	Aug. 1790.
SONGS WITH PIANOFORTE
436	53	"An die Freude."	Johann Peter Uz.		Olomouc.	Dec. 1767.
46c	52	"Daphne, deine Rosenwangen."	Johann Christian Gunther.		Vienna.	Summer 1768.
125d	149	"Die grossmuthige Gelassenheit."	Johann Christian Gunther.		Salzburg.	1772.
125e	150	"Geheime Liebe."	Friedrich Rudolf Ludwig von Canitz.		Salzburg.	1772.
125f	151	"Die Zufriedenheit im niedrigen Stande."	?		Salzburg.	1772.
125g	147	"Wie unglücklich bin ich."	?		Salzburg.	1772.
125h	148	"O heiliges Band."	?		Salzburg.	1772.
210a	152	Canzonetta, "Rudente la calma."	Antoine Ferrand.		? Salzburg.	1775.
284d	307	Arietta, "Oiseaux, si tous les ans."	Antoine Houdar de la Motte.		Mannheim.	Nov. 1777.
293b	308	Arietta, "Dans un bos solitaire"			Mannheim.	Feb. or Mar. 1778.
340a	392	"Verdankt sei es dem Glanz."	Johann Timotheus Hermes.		Salzburg.	1780.
340b	391	"An die Einsamkeit."	Johann Timotheus Hermes.		Salzburg.	1780.
340c	390	"An die Hoffnung."	Johann Timotheus Hermes.		Salzburg.	1780.
367a	349	"Die Zufriedenheit."	Johann Martin Miller.		Munich.	End of 1780 or early 1781.
367b	351	"Komm, liebe Zither", with mandoline.	?		Munich.	End of 1780 or early 1781.
417a	178	Aria, "Ah, spieglearti, oh Dio."	?		Vienna.	June 1783.
468	468	"Gesellenreise."	Franz Joseph von Ratschik.		Vienna.	26 Mar. 1785.
472	472	"Der Zauberer."	Christian Felix Weisse.		Vienna.	7 May 1785.
473	473	"Die Zufriedenheit."	Christian Felix Weisse.		Vienna.	7 May 1785.
474	474	"Die betrogene Welt."	Christian Felix Weisse.		Vienna.	8 May 1785.
476	476	"Das Veilchen."	Goethe.		Vienna.	8 June 1785.
506	506	"Lied der Freiheit."	Alvise Blumauer.		Vienna.	? 1786.
517	517	"Die Alte."	Friedrich von Hagedorn.		Vienna.	18 May 1787.
518	518	"Die Verschweigung."	Christian Felix Weisse.		Vienna.	20 May 1787.
519	519	"Das Lied der Trennung."	Käuner Eberhard Karl Schmidt.		Vienna.	23 May 1792.
520	520	"Als Luise die Briefe ihres ungetreuen Liebhabers verbrannte."	Gabriele von Baumberg.		Vienna.	28 May 1787.
523	523	"Abendempfindung."			Vienna.
524	524	"An Chloë."	Joachim Heinrich Campe		Vienna.	24 June 1787.
529	529	"Des Menca Friedrich's Geburtstag."	Joachim Georg Jacobi.		Prague.	24 June 1787.
530	530	"Das Traumbild."	?		Prague.	6 Nov. 1787.
531	531	"Die kleine Spinnerin."	Ludwig Holty.		Prague.	11 Dec. 1787.
532	532	"Beim Auszug in das Feld."	1st verse ? 2nd & 3rd by D. Jauer.		Vienna.	11 Aug. 1788.
535	535	"Schmacht nach dem Frühlinge."	?		Vienna.	14 Jan. 1791.
556	396	"Komm, lieber Mann."	Christian Adolf Overbeck.		Vienna.
597	397	"Im Frühlingsanfang."	Christian Christoph Sturm.		Vienna.	14 Jan. 1791.
598	598	"Das Kinderspiel."	Christian Adolf Overbeck.		Vienna.	14 Jan. 1791.
619	619	"Eine kleine deutsche Kantate" "Die ihr des unermesslichen Weltalls"	Franz Heinrich Ziegenhagen.		Vienna.	July 1791.

(b) INSTRUMENTAL

SYMPHONIES

Einstein No.	Köchel No.	B. & H. No.	Key	Noted for	Composed at	Finished
16	16	(1)	E \flat ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	London.	Late 1764 or early 1765.
19	19	(4)	D ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	London.	Early 1765.
22	22	(5)	B \flat ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	The Hague.	Dec. 1765.
42a	76	(43)	F ma.	2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	Autumn 1767.
43	43	(6)	F ma.	2 oboes (or flutes), 2 horns & stgs.	? Olomouc and Vienna.	Autumn or Dec. 1767.
45	45	(7)	D ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Vienna.	16 Jan. 1768.
45a	App. 221		G ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	Early 1768.
45b	App. 214		B \flat ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	Early 1768.
43	48	(8)	D ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	13 Dec. 1768.
73l	81	(44)	D ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Rome.	25 Apr. 1770.
73m	79	(47)	D ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Rome.	Apr. 1770.
73n	95	(45)	D ma.	2 flutes (or oboes), 2 trumpets & stgs.	Rome.	25 Apr. 1770.
73q	84	(11)	D ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Milan and Bologna.	July 1770.
74	74	(10)	G ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Milan.	Dec. 1770.
74g	App. 216		B \flat ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Early summer 1771.
75	75	(42)	F ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Early summer 1771.
75a	73	(9)	G ma.	2 oboes (or flutes), 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Salzburg.	Summer 1771.
75b	110	(12)	G ma.	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	July 1771.
111a	120	(50)	D ma. (finale only, added to the overture of 'Ascanio in Alba', E. & K. 111).	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Milan.	Oct. or Nov. 1771.
111b	96	(46)	C ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Milan.	Oct. or Nov. 1771.
112	112	(13)	F ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Milan.	22 Nov. 1771.
114	114	(14)	A ma.	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	30 Dec. 1771.
124	124	(15)	G ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	21 Feb. 1772.
128	128	(16)	G ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	May 1772.
129	129	(17)	G ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	May 1772.
130	130	(18)	F ma.	2 flutes, 4 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	End of May 1772.
132	132	(19)	E \flat ma.	2 oboes, 4 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	July 1772.
133	133	(20)	D ma.	Flute, 2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg.	July 1772.
134	134	(21)	A ma.	2 flutes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Aug. 1772.

141a	163	(31)	D ma. (finale only, added to the overture of 'Il sogno di Scipione', L. & K. 126; the first 2 movements are treated as a separate Symphony by Kochel, K. 161).	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Salzburg and Milan.	End of 1772 (1st 2 mva. Mar.).
162	162	(22)	C ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg	Spring 1773.
162a	199	(27)	G ma.	2 flutes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	April 1773.
162b	181	(33)	D ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg.	May 1773.
166a	184	(26)	E♭ ma.	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg.	Spring 1773.
166c	182	(24)	B♭ ma.	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	May or June 1773.
173e	200	(28)	C ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Salzburg.	Nov. 1773.
183	183	(25)	G mi.	2 oboes, 4 horns, 2 bassoons & stgs.	Salzburg.	End of 1773.
186a	201	(29)	A ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Early 1774.
186b	202	(30)	D ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg.	5 May 1774.
207a	121		D ma. (finale only, ? added to the overture of 'La finta giardiniera', E. & K. 196). C ma. (finale only, added to the overture of 'Il rè pastore', E. & K. 208). D ma. ("Paris").	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Spring 1775.
213c	102	(49)		2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg.	Aug. 1775.
300a	297	(31)		2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 clars., 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Paris.	June 1778.
318	318	(32)	(? ma. (? overture to 'Zaide', L. 336b, K. 344.	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 4 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Salzburg.	26 Apr. 1779.
319	319	(33)	B♭ ma.	2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	9 July 1779.
338	338	(34)	C ma.	2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Salzburg.	29 Aug. 1780.
385	385	(35)	D ma. ("Haffner").	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 clars., 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Vienna.	Early Aug. 1782.
425	425	(36)	C ma. ("Linz").	2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Linz.	3 Nov. 1783.
425a	444	(37)	G ma. (Introduction only; the rest by Michael Haydn).	Flute, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Linz.	Early Nov. 1783.
504	504	(38)	D ma. ("Prague").	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Vienna.	6 Dec. 1786.
543	543	(39)	E♭ ma.	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Vienna.	26 June 1788.
550	550	(40)	G mi.	Flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs. (2 clars. added later).	Vienna.	25 July 1788.
551	551	(41)	C ma. ("Jupiter").	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Vienna.	10 Aug. 1788.

VARIOUS ORCHESTRAL WORKS

Einsteim No.	Köchel No.	Title	Scored for	Composed at	Finished
32	32	'Galimathias musicum' (Quodlibet).	Pf., 2 oboes, 2 horns, bassoon & stgs.	The Hague.	Mar. 1766.
61b	65a	7 Minuets.	Stgs. (without vas.).	Salzburg.	26 Jan. 1769.
61d	103	19 Minuets.	2 oboes, 2 horns (or 2 flutes, 2 trumpets) & stgs. (without vas.).	Salzburg.	Carnival 1769.
61e	104	6 Minuets.	Piccolo, 2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs. (without vas.).	Salzburg.	Carnival 1769.
61f	105	6 Minuets.	Flute, 2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs. (without vas.).	Salzburg.	Carnival 1769.
61g	61g	2 Minuets.	2 flutes & stgs.	Salzburg.	Carnival 1769.
61h	61h	6 Minuets.	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs. (without vas.).	Salzburg.	Carnival 1769.
62	62	March for a Cassation, D ma.	4 insts. (3 stgs.).	Salzburg.	Summer 1769.
62a	100	Serenade, D ma.	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg.	Summer 1769.
63	63	Serenade, G ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Spring 1769.
63a	99	Cassation, B♭ ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Summer 1769.
64	64	Minuet, D ma.	2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	? early 1769.
73g	123	Country Dance, B♭ ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs. (without vas.).	Rome.	13 or 14 Apr. 1770.
73f	122	Minuet, E♭ ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs. (without vas.).	Bologna.	Early Aug. 1770.
113	113	Divertimento, E♭ ma.	2 clars., 2 horns & stgs., 2 oboes, 2 Eng. horns & 2 bassoons added later).	Milan.	Nov. 1771.
125a	136	Divertimento, D ma.	Stgs.	Salzburg.	Early 1772.
125b	137	Divertimento, B♭ ma.	Stgs.	Salzburg.	Early 1772.
125c	138	Divertimento, F ma.	Stgs.	Salzburg.	Early 1772.
130a	164	6 Minuets.	Flute, 2 oboes, 2 trumpets (or horns) & stgs. (without vas.).	Salzburg.	June 1772.
131	131	Divertimento, D ma.	Flute, oboe, bassoon, 4 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	June 1772.
159b	186	Divertimento, B♭ ma.	2 oboes, 2 clars., 2 Eng. horns, 2 bassoons & 2 horns.	Milan.	Mar. 1773.
159c	187	Divertimento (for a cavalry display), C ma.	2 flutes, 5 trumpets & 4 drums.	Salzburg.	Mar. (?) 1773.
159d	166	Divertimento, E♭ ma.	2 oboes, 2 clars., 2 Eng. horns, 2 bassoons & 2 horns.	Salzburg.	24 Mar. 1773.
167a	185	Serenade, D ma.	2 oboes (or flutes), 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Vienna.	Aug. 1773.
167b	189	March, D ma.	2 flutes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	Early Aug. 1773.
173a	203	Divertimento, D ma.	Bassoon, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	Autumn 1773.
173b	290	March, D ma.	2 oboes (or flutes), 2 horns (or trumpets), bassoon & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	Autumn 1773.
176	176	16 Minuets.	2 oboes (or flutes), bassoon, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg.	Dec. 1773.
189b	203	Serenade, D ma.	2 oboes (or flutes), bassoon, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg.	Aug. 1774.

189c	237	March, D ma.	2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs. (without vas.).	Salzburg.	Summer 1774.
196e	App. 226	Divertimento, E♭ ma.	2 oboes, 2 clars., 2 bassoons & 2 horns.	Munich.	Early 1775.
196f	App. 227	Divertimento, B♭ ma.	2 oboes, 2 clars., 2 bassoons & 2 horns.	Munich.	Early 1775.
—	206	March (afterwards used in 'Idomeneo', E. & K. 366).	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Salzburg.	1774.
213	213	Divertimento, F ma.	2 oboes, 2 bassoons & 2 horns.	Salzburg.	July 1775.
213a	204	Serenade, D ma.	2 oboes (or flutes), bassoon, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg.	5 Aug. 1775.
213b	215	March, D ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg.	Aug. 1775.
214	214	March, C ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg.	20 Aug. 1775.
239	239	'Serenata notturna', D ma., for 2 orchs.	2 small orchs.: (1) 2 vns., va. & bass; (2) str. 4tet & drums.	Salzburg.	Jan. 1776.
240	240	Divertimento, B♭ ma.	2 oboes, 2 bassoons & 2 horns.	Salzburg.	Jan. 1776.
240a	252	Divertimento, E♭ ma.	2 oboes, 2 bassoons & 2 horns.	Salzburg.	Jan. 1776.
240b	188	Divertimento, C ma.	2 flutes, 6 trumpets & 4 drums.	Salzburg.	Early 1776.
247	247	Divertimento, F ma.	2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	June 1776.
248	248	March, F ma.	2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	June 1776.
248b	250	Serenade, D ma. ('Hafner').	2 oboes (or flutes), 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg.	July 1776.
249	249	March, D ma.	2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Salzburg.	20 July 1776.
250a	101	Serenade ('Contredanse'), F ma.	Flute, 2 oboes, bassoon, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Carnival 1776.
251	251	Divertimento, D ma.	Oboe, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	July 1776.
253	253	Divertimento, F ma.	2 oboes, 2 bassoons & 2 horns.	Salzburg.	Aug. 1776.
269a	286	'Notturno', D ma.	4 orchs. of 2 horns & stgs. each.	Salzburg.	Dec. 1776 or Jan. 1777.
270	270	Divertimento, B♭ ma.	2 oboes, 2 bassoons & 2 horns.	Salzburg.	Jan. 1777.
271b	287	Divertimento, B♭ ma.	2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	1 Feb. 1777.
271c	267	4 Country Dances.	Flute, 2 oboes, bassoon, 2 horns & stgs. (without vas.).	Salzburg.	Carnival 1777.
271g	289	Divertimento, E♭ ma.	2 oboes, 2 bassoons & 2 horns.	Salzburg.	Early summer 1777.
271h	288	Divertimento, F ma. (incomplete).	2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	June 1777.
300	300	Gavotte, B♭ ma.	2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Paris.	May or June 1778.
320	320	Serenade, D ma.	Piccolo, 2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, post-horn, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Salzburg.	3 Aug. 1779.
320a	335	2 Marches.	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg.	Early Aug. 1779.
320b	334	Divertimento, D ma.	2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Summer 1779.
320c	445	March, D ma.	2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Summer 1779.
—	362	March (afterwards used in 'Idomeneo', E. & K. 366).	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 clars., 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Salzburg.	1780.
363	363	3 Minuets.	2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Salzburg.	1780.

See also Dramatic Works, E. 299b & K. App. 10.

Einstein No.	Köchel No.	Title	Scored for	Composed at	Finished
367	367	Ballet Music for 'Idomeno' (L. & K. 366).	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 clars., 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & sgts.	Munich.	Jan. 1781.
370a	361	Serenade, B♭ ma.	2 oboes, 2 clars., 2 basset horns, 2 bassoons, 4 horns & double bass (or double bassoon).	Munich and Vienna.	1781.
375	375	Serenade, E♭ ma.	2 clars., 2 horns & 2 bassoons, 2 oboes added later).	Vienna.	Oct. 1781.
383a	408	3 Marches, Nos. 1 & 3.	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & sgts.	Vienna.	1782.
383f	409	Minuet for a Symphony, C ma.	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & sgts.	Vienna.	May 1782.
384a	388	Serenade, C mi.	2 oboes, 2 clars., 2 bassoons & 2 horns.	Vienna.	End of July 1782.
385a	408	3 Marches, No. 2.	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & sgts.	Vienna.	Early 1782.
416d	446	Music for a pantomime (incomplete).	Sgts.	Vienna.	Feb. 1783.
448a	461	5 Minuets.	2 oboes (or flutes), 2 bassoons, 2 horns & sgts. (without vas.).	Vienna.	Jan. 1784.
448b	462	6 Country Dances.	Sgts. (without vas.) (2 oboes & 2 horns added later).	Vienna.	Jan. 1784.
448c	463	2 Minuets and 2 Country Dances.	2 oboes, bassoon, 2 horns & sgts. (without vas.).	Vienna.	Jan. 1784.
479a	477	'Maurerische Trauermusik.'	2 oboes, clar., basset horn, double bassoon & 2 horns or basset horns).	Vienna.	Nov. 1785.
509	509	6 German Dances ('Teutsche'). ¹	Piccolo, 2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 clars., 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & sgts.	Prague.	6 Feb. 1787.
522	522	'Ein musikalischer Spass.'	2 horns & sgts.	Vienna.	14 June 1787.
525	525	'Eine kleine Nachtmusik.'	Sgts.	Vienna.	10 Aug. 1787.
534	534	Country Dance ('Das Donnerwetter').	Piccolo, 2 oboes, 2 horns, side-drum & sgts. (without vas.).	Vienna.	14 Jan. 1788.
535	535	Country Dance ('La Bataille').	Piccolo, 2 clars., bassoon, trumpet, side-drum & sgts. (without vas.). ²	Vienna.	23 Jan. 1788.
535a	535a	3 Country Dances.	Piccolo, 2 flutes, 2 oboes (or clars.), 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & sgts.	Vienna.	Early 1788.
536	536	6 German Dances.	Flute, horn, violin, viola & cello. 2 oboes, bassoon, 2 horns & sgts. (without vas.).	Vienna.	27 Jan. 1788.
544	544	'Ein kleiner Marsch', D ma.	Piccolo, 2 flutes, 2 oboes (or clars.), 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & side-drum.	Vienna.	June 1788.
565	565	2 Country Dances.	Piccolo, 2 flutes, 2 oboes (or clars.), 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & side-drum.	Vienna.	30 Oct. 1788.
567	567	6 German Dances.	2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & side-drum.	Vienna.	6 Dec. 1788.
568	568	12 Minuets.	Piccolo, 2 flutes, 2 oboes (or clars.), 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & side-drum.	Vienna.	24 Dec. 1788.

571	571	6 German Dances.	Piccolo, 2 flutes, 2 oboes (or clars.), 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums, cymbals, tambourine & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	21 Feb. 1789.
585	585	12 Minuets.	Piccolo, 2 flutes, 2 oboes (or clars.), 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	Dec. 1789.
586	586	12 German Dances.	Piccolo, 2 flutes, 2 oboes (or clars.), 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums, tambourine & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	Dec. 1789.
587	587	Country Dance ('Der Sieg vom Helden Koburg').	Flute, oboe, bassoon, trumpet & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	Dec. 1789.
588a	106	Overture and 3 Country Dances.	2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	Jan. 1790.
599	599	6 Minuets.	Piccolo, 2 flutes, 2 oboes (or clars.), 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	23 Jan. 1791.
600	600	6 German Dances.	Piccolo, 2 flutes, 2 oboes (or clars.), 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	29 Jan. 1791.
601	601	4 Minuets.	Piccolo, 2 flutes, 2 oboes (or clars.), 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	5 Feb. 1791.
602	602	4 German Dances.	Piccolo, 2 flutes, 2 oboes (or clars.), 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums, hurdy-gurdy & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	5 Feb. 1791.
603	603	2 Country Dances.	Piccolo, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	5 Feb. 1791.
604	604	2 Minuets.	2 flutes, 2 clars., 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	12 Feb. 1791.
605	605	3 German Dances ('Die Schlittenfahrt').	Piccolo, 2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	12 Feb. 1791.
606	606	'Sechs landlerische Tänze.'	Stgs. (orig. orchestration lost).	Vienna.	23 Feb. 1791.
607	607	Country Dance, E♭ ma.	Flute, oboe, bassoon, 2 horns & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	28 Feb. 1791.
609	609	3 Country Dances.	Flute, side-drum & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	1791.
610	610	Country Dance, G ma.	2 flutes, 2 horns & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	6 Mar. 1791.
611	611	Country Dance, C ma.	2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 trumpets, drums, hurdy-gurdy & stgs. (without vas.).	Vienna.	6 Mar. 1791.

¹ Also preserved in a pf. version.

459	F ma.	• Flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs. (? trumpet & drum parts lost).	Vienna.	11 Dec. 1784.	Himself.
466	D mi.	Flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Vienna.	10 Feb. 1785.	Himself.
467	C ma.	Flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Vienna.	9 Mar. 1785.	Himself.
482	E♭ ma.	Flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Vienna.	16 Dec. 1785.	Himself.
488	A ma.	Flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	2 Mar. 1786.	Himself.
491	C mi.	Flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Vienna.	24 Mar. 1786.	Himself.
503	C ma.	Flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Vienna.	4 Dec. 1786.	Himself.
537	D ma. ("Coronation").	Flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Vienna.	24 Feb. 1788.	Himself.
595	B♭ ma.	Flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	5 Jan. 1791.	Himself.
624	Cadenzas for his Concertos.		Salzburg and Vienna	1768-91.
CONCERTOS FOR VIOLIN AND ORCHESTRA
166b	1 Concertone ¹ , C ma., for 2 vns.	2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg.	3 May 1773.	Himself for Gaetano Brunetti.
207	B♭ ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	14 Apr. 1775.	Himself or Brunetti.
211	D ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	14 June 1775.	Himself or Brunetti.
216	G ma.	2 oboes (or flutes), 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	12 Sept. 1775.	Himself or Brunetti.
218	D ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Oct. 1775.	Himself or Brunetti.
219	A ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	20 Dec. 1775.	Himself or Brunetti.
261	Adagio, E ma., to replace that in E. & K. 219.	2 flutes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	End of 1776.	Brunetti.
269	'Rondo concertante', B♭ ma., to replace that in E. & K. 207.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	End of 1776.	Brunetti.
271a	D ma. (? authentic).	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	16 July 1777.	Brunetti.
268	E♭ ma. (? authentic).	Flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg or Munich.	End of 1780.	Brunetti.
373	Rondo, C ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	2 Apr. 1781.	Brunetti.
470	Andante for a Concerto. A ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	1 Apr. 1785.	? Heinrich Marchand or Anton Janiewicz.

VARIOUS CONCERTOS

Einstein No.	Köchel No.	Key and Instruments	Scored for	Composed at	Finished	Written for
186e	191	E♭ ma., for bassoon.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	4 June 1774.	Baron Thaddaeus von Durnitz.
285c	313	G ma., for flute.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Mannheim.	Jan. or Feb. 1778.	De Jean.
285d	314	D ma., for flute.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	? Mannheim.	? Jan. or Feb. 1778.	De Jean ? arr. from an oboe Concerto for Ferlendis).
285e	315	Andante, C ma., for flute.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Mannheim.	Early 1778.	? De Jean.
297b	App. 9	'Sinfonia concertante', E♭ ma., for oboe, clar., horn & bassoon (originally for flute, oboe, horn & bassoon).	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Paris.	April 1778.	Orig. version for Wendling, Ramm, Punto & Ritter.
297c	299	C ma. for flute & harp.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Paris.	April 1778.	Duc and Mlle de Guines.
320d	364	'Sinfonia concertante', E♭ ma., for vn. & va.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Salzburg.	Summer 1779.	? Ignaz L.
371	371	Concert Rondo, E♭ ma., for horn.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	21 Mar. 1781.	Ignaz Leutgeb.
386b	412	D ma., for horn.	2 oboes, 2 bassoons & stgs.	Vienna.	End of 1782.	Giuseppe Ferlendis.
416f	293	F ma., for oboe (fragment).	2 clar., 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	Feb. or Mar. 1783.	Ignaz Leutgeb.
417	417	E♭ ma., for horn.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	27 May 1783.	Ignaz Leutgeb.
447	447	E♭ ma., for horn.	2 clar., 2 bassoons & stgs.	Vienna.	1783.	Ignaz Leutgeb.
495	495	E♭ ma., for horn.	2 oboes, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	26 June 1786.	Ignaz Leutgeb.
—	514	Rondo, D ma., for horn (identical with that of the Concerto E. 386b, K. 412).	2 oboes, 2 bassoons & stgs.	Vienna.	End of 1782.	Ignaz Leutgeb.
622	622	A ma., for clar.	2 flutes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns & stgs.	Vienna.	Oct. 1791.	Anton Stadler.

SONATAS FOR ORGAN AND ORCHESTRA

Einstein No.	Köchel No.	Key	Scored for	Composed at	Finished
263	263	C ma.	2 trumpets & stgs.	Salzburg.	Dec. 1776.
271e	278	C ma.	2 oboes, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Salzburg.	Mar. or Apr. 1779.
317a	329	C ma.	2 oboes, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, drums & stgs.	Salzburg.	Early 1779.

SONATAS FOR ORGAN AND STRINGS

Einstein No.	Köchel No.	Key	Composed at	Finished
41 h	67	E♭ ma.	Salzburg.	Early 1767.
41 i	68	B♭ ma.	Salzburg.	Early 1767.
41 k	69	D ma.	Salzburg.	1767.
124 a	144	D ma.	Salzburg.	Early 1772.
124 b	145	F ma.	Salzburg.	Early 1772.
212	212	B♭ ma.	Salzburg.	Early 1775.
241	241	G ma.	Salzburg.	Jan. 1776.
241 a	224	F ma.	Salzburg.	Early 1776.
241 b	225	A ma.	Salzburg.	Early 1776.
244	244	F ma.	Salzburg.	Apr. 1776.
245	245	D ma.	Salzburg.	Apr. 1776.
271 d	274	G ma.	Salzburg.	Lent 1777.
317 c	328	C ma.	Salzburg.	1779.
336 d	336	C ma.	Salzburg.	Mar. 1780.
STRING QUINTETS
174	174	B♭ ma.	Salzburg.	Dec. 1773.
515	515	C ma.	Vienna.	19 Apr. 1787.
516	516	G mi.	Vienna.	16 May 1787.
516 b	406	C mi. (arrangement of the Serenade for wind insts., E. 384 a , K. 388).	Vienna.	Spring 1787.
593	593	D ma.	Vienna.	Dec. 1790.
614	614	E♭ ma.	Vienna.	12 Apr. 1791 finale 1773-74 i .
STRING QUARTETS
73 f	80	G ma.	Lodi.	15 Mar. 1770.
134 a	153	D ma.	Bozen ? and Verona.	Oct.-Nov. 1772.
134 b	156	G ma.	Milan.	End of 1772.
157	157	C ma.	Milan.	End of 1772 c'-early 1773.
158	158	F ma.	Milan.	End of 1772 or early 1773.
159	159	B♭ ma.	Milan.	Early 1773.
159 a	160	E♭ ma.	Milan and Salzburg.	Early 1773.
168	168	F ma.	Vienna.	Aug. 1773.
169	169	A ma.	Vienna.	Aug. 1773.
170	170	C ma.	Vienna.	Aug. 1773.
171	171	E♭ ma.	Vienna.	Aug. 1773.
172	172	B♭ ma.	Vienna.	Sept. 1773.
173	173	D mi.	Vienna.	Sept. 1773.
387	387	G ma. (Haydn set No. 1).	Vienna.	31 Dec. 1782.
405	405	5 Fugues from Bach's 'Well-tempered Clavier'.	Vienna.	1782-83.

Einstein No.	Kochel No.	Key	Composed at	Finished
417b	421	D mi. (Haydn set No. 2).	Vienna.	June 1783.
421b	428	E♭ ma. (Haydn set No. 3).	Vienna.	June or July 1783.
438	438	B♭ ma. (Haydn set No. 4) ("The Hunt").	Vienna.	9 Nov. 1784.
464	464	A ma. (Haydn set No. 5).	Vienna.	10 Jan. 1785.
465	465	C ma. (Haydn set No. 6).	Vienna.	14 Jan. 1785.
499	499	D ma.	Vienna.	19 Aug. 1786.
546	546	Adagio and Fugue, C mi. (Fugue identical with E. & K. 426) for 2 pls.	Vienna.	26 June 1788.
575	575	D ma. (King of Prussia set No. 1).	Vienna.	June 1789.
589	589	B♭ ma. (King of Prussia set No. 2).	Vienna.	May 1790.
590	590	F ma. (King of Prussia set No. 3).	Vienna.	June 1790.

STRING TRIOS AND DUETS

Einstein No.	Kochel No.	Title and Key	Composed at	Finished
271f	266	Trio, B♭ ma., for 2 vns. & bass.	Salzburg. Vienna.	Spring 1777. 1782.
404a	404a	Introductions to Fugues by J. S. Bach and others, with the Fugues arranged for vn., va. & cello by Mozart.
423	423	Duet, G ma., for vn. & va.	Salzburg.	July 1783.
424	424	Duet, B♭ ma., for vn. & va.	Salzburg.	Oct. 1783.
563	563	Divertimento, E♭ ma., for vn., va. & cello.	Vienna.	27 Sept. 1788.

PIANOFORTE QUARTETS

Einstein No.	Kochel No.	Key	Composed at	Finished
478	478	G mi.	Vienna. Vienna.	16 Oct. 1785. 3 June 1786.
493	493	E♭ ma.

PIANOFORTE TRIOS

254	254	B♭ ma.	Salzburg. Vienna. Vienna. Vienna. Vienna. Vienna. Vienna.	Aug. 1776. 1783. 8 July 1786. 5 Aug. 1786. 18 Nov. 1786. 22 June 1788. 14 July 1788. 27 Oct. 1788.
442	442	D mi.-ma. (completed by M. Stadler).
496	496	G ma.
498	498	E♭ ma. for clar., va. & pf.
502	502	B♭ ma.
542	542	E ma.
548	548	C ma.
564	564	G ma.

VARIOUS CHAMBER MUSIC

196c	292	Sonata, B♭ ma., for bassoon & cello.	Munich.	Early 1775.
285	285	Quartet, D ma., for flute & stgs.	Mannheim.	25 Dec. 1777.
285b	App. 171	Quartet, C ma., for flute & stgs.	Mannheim.	Jan or Feb. 1778.
298	298	Quartet, A ma., for flute & stgs.	Paris.	Spring or Summer 1778.
368b	370	Quartet, F ma., for oboe & stgs.	Munich.	Early 1781.
386c	407	Quintet, E♭ ma., for vn., 2 vas., horn & cello.	Vienna.	End of 1782.
439b	App. 229	5 Divertimenti for 2 clars. & bassoon.	Vienna.	1783.
440a	411	Adagio, F ma., for 2 clars. & 3 basse horns.	Vienna.	1783.
440d	410	Adagio in Canon, F ma., for 2 basset horns & bassoon.	Vienna.
452	452	Quintet, E♭ ma., for oboe, clar., horn, bassoon & pf.	Vienna.	30 Mar. 1784.
496a	487	12 Duets for 2 wind insts.	Vienna.	27 July 1786.
581	581	Quintet, A ma., for clar. & stgs.	Vienna.	29 Sept. 1789.
617	617	Adagio and Rondo, C mi.-ma., for har- monica, flute, oboe, va. & cello.	Vienna.	23 May 1791.

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

6	6	Sonata, C ma.	Salzburg, Brussels and Paris.	1762-64.
7	7	Sonata, D ma.	Paris.	1763-64.
8	8	Sonata, B♭ ma.	Paris.	Jan. 1764.
9	9	Sonata, G ma.	Paris.	Early 1764.
10	10	Sonata, B♭ ma.	London.	1764.
11	11	Sonata, G ma.	London.	Autumn 1764.
12	12	Sonata, A ma.	London.	Autumn 1764.
13	13	Sonata, F ma.	London.	1764.
14	14	Sonata, C ma.	Paris and London.	Autumn 1764.
15	15	Sonata, B♭ ma.	London.	Autumn 1764.
16	26	Sonata, E♭ ma.	The Hague.	Feb. 1766.
27	27	Sonata, G ma.	The Hague.	Feb. 1766.
28	28	Sonata, C ma.	The Hague.	Feb. 1766.
29	29	Sonata, D ma.	The Hague.	Feb. 1766.
30	30	Sonata, F ma.	The Hague.	Feb. 1766.
31	31	Sonata, B♭ ma.	Vienna.	1 Sept. 1768.
46d	46d	Sonata, F ma.	Vienna.	1 Sept. 1768.
46e	46e	Sonata, C ma.	Vienna.	1 Sept. 1768.
293a	301	Sonata, F ma.	Mannheim.	Feb. 1778.
293b	302	Sonata, G ma.	Mannheim.	Jan. or Feb. 1778.
293c	303	Sonata, E♭ ma.	Mannheim.	Feb. 1778.
293d	305	Sonata, C ma.	Mannheim.	1778.
296	296	Sonata, A ma.	Mannheim.	11 Mar. 1778.
300c	304	Sonata, C mi.	Paris.	Early summer 1778.
300d	306	Sonata, D ma.	Paris.	Summer 1778.
317d	378	Sonata, B♭ ma.	Salzburg.	Early 1779.
372	372	Allegro of a Sonata, B♭ ma.	Vienna.	24 Mar. 1781.
373a	379	Sonata, G ma.-mi.	Vienna.	7 Apr. 1781.
374a	359	12 Variations on 'La Bergère Célimène'.	Vienna.	June 1781.

Einstein No.	Köchel No.	Title	Composed at	Finished
374b	360	6 Variations on 'Hélas, j'ai perdu mon amant', Sonata, F ma.	Vienna.	June 1781.
374d	376	Sonata, F ma.	Vienna.	Summer 1781.
374f	377	Sonata, F ma.	Vienna.	Summer 1781.
384c	380	Sonata, E♭ ma.	Vienna.	Summer 1781.
385d	403	Sonata, C ma. (unfinished.)	Vienna.	Aug. or Sept. 1782.
385e	404	Sonata, C ma. (unfinished.)	Vienna.	1782.
454	402	Sonata, A ma-mi. (finished by M. Stadler).	Vienna.	Aug. or Sept. 1782.
	454	Sonata, B♭ ma.	Vienna.	21 Apr. 1784 (for Regina Strinasacchi).
481	481	Sonata, E♭ ma.	Vienna.	12 Dec. 1785.
526	526	Sonata, A ma.	Vienna.	44 Aug. 1787.
547	547	Sonata, F ma.	Vienna.	10 July 1788.
—	570	(See Pianoforte Solo.)
PIANOFORTE SOLO
1	1	Minuet and Trio, G ma.	Salzburg.	1761-62.
2	2	Minuet, F ma.	Salzburg.	Jan. 1762.
3	3	Allegro, B♭ ma.	Salzburg.	4 Mar. 1762.
4	4	Minuet, F ma.	Salzburg.	11 May 1762.
5	5	Minuet, F ma.	Salzburg.	5 July 1762.
5a	5a	Allegro, C ma.	Salzburg.	Summer 1763.
5b	5b	Andante, B♭ ma.	Salzburg.	1763.
15a-35	App. 109b	43 Pieces (mostly for pf.)	London.	1763-65.
24	24	8 Variations on 'Laat ons juchen' (air by C. E. Graf), G ma.	The Hague.	Jan. 1766.
25	25	7 Variations on 'Wilhelmus van Nassouwe', Minuet, D ma.	Amsterdam.	Feb. 1766.
73h	94	6 Variations on "Mio caro Adone" from Sallieri's 'La fiera di Venezia', 12 Variations on a Minuet by J. C. Fischer.	Bologna or Rome. Vienna.	Apr. 1770. Autumn 1773.
173c	180
189a	179	Sonata, C ma.	Salzburg.	1774.
189d	279	Sonata, F ma.	Salzburg.	Summer 1774.
189f	280	Sonata, B♭ ma.	Salzburg.	Autumn 1774.
189g	281	Sonata, E♭ ma.	Salzburg.	Autumn 1774.
189h	282	Sonata, G ma.	Salzburg.	End of 1774.
189i	283	Allegro of a Sonata, G mi.	Salzburg.	End of 1774.
205b	312	Sonata, D ma.	Munich.	Feb. or Mar. 1775.
284b	284	Sonata, C ma.	Mannheim.	8 Nov. 1777.
284c	309	Sonata, D ma.	Mannheim.	Earlv Nov. 1777.
299a	354	12 Variations on "Je suis Lindor" in Beaumarchais's 'Le Barbier de Séville', Sonata, A mi.	Paris.	Spring or Summer 1778.
300d	310	12 Variations on "Ah, vous dirai-je, maman", 12 Variations on "La Belle Française", Little Fantasy (Capriccio), C ma.	Paris.	Early summer 1778.
300e	265	Sonata, A ma.	Paris.	Summer 1778.
300f	353		Paris.	Summer 1778.
300g	395		Paris.	July 1778.
300h	330		Paris.	Summer 1778.
300i	331		Paris.	Summer 1778.

300k	Sonata, F ma.	Paris.	Summer 1778.
315c	Sonata, B \flat ma.	Paris.	Late summer 1778.
315d	9 Variations on "Lison dormait" from Dezède's 'Julie'.	Paris.	Late summer 1778.
315e	8 Minuets and Trios.	Salzburg.	Early 1779.
372e	First movement of a Sonata, B \flat ma.	Vienna.	1781.
374c	8 Variations on a March in Grétry's 'Les Mariages samnites'.	Vienna.	June 1781.
375f	Fugue, E \flat ma. (completed by Simon Sechter).	Vienna.	Spring 1782.
383e	Fantasy and Fugue, C ma.	Vienna.	Apr. 1782.
385f	Fantasy, C mi. (originally for pf. & vn.).	Vienna.	Aug. or Sept. 1782.
385g	Fantasy, D mi.	Vienna.	1782.
385i	Overture (Suite) in the style of Handel (unfinished).	Vienna.	1782.
385k	Fugue, G mi. (unfinished).	Vienna.	? 1782.
416e	6 Variations on "Salvé tu, Domine" from Paisiello's 'I filosofi immaginari'.	Vienna.	Mar. 1783.
453e	'Kleiner Truermarsch', C mi.	Vienna.	1784.
454e	8 Variations on "Come un agnello" from Sarti's 'Fra due litiganti'.	Vienna.	June 1784.
455	10 Variations on "Unser dummer Pöbel meint", from Gluck's 'Pilgrimage von Mecca' (orig. 'La Rencontre imprevue').	Vienna.	25 Aug. 1784.
457	Sonata, C mi.	Vienna.	14 Oct. 1784.
475	Fantasy, C mi.	Vienna.	20 May 1785.
485	Rondo, D ma.	Vienna.	10 Jan. 1786.
494	Rondo, F ma. (used by Mozart and later as finale for E. & K. 533).	Vienna.	10 June 1786.
498a	Allegro and Minuet of a Sonata, B \flat ma.	Vienna.	Aug. 1786.
500	12 Variations on an Allegretto, B \flat ma.	Vienna.	12 Sept. 1786.
511	Rondo, A mi.	Vienna.	11 Mar. 1787.
533	Allegro and Andante (Sonata, F ma., with Rondo, E. & K. 494).	Vienna.	3 Jan. 1788.
540	Adagio, B mi.	Vienna.	19 Mar. 1788.
545	Sonata, F ma. (The second movement is identical with the finale of the pf. Sonata E. & K. 545; the finale, 6 Variations on an Allegretto, previously K. 54, is identical with the theme used in the violin Sonata E. & K. 547.)	Vienna.	26 June 1788.
547a	Sonata, B \flat ma. (better known as a vn. Sonata, but the accompanying vn. part is not by Mozart).	Vienna.	June 1788.
570	9 Variations on a Minuet by J. P. Duport.	Vienna.	Feb. 1789.
573	'Eine kleine Gigue', G ma.	Potsdam.	29 Apr. 1789.
574	Sonata, D ma.	Leipzig.	May 1789.
588b	Andantino, E \flat ma.	Vienna.	July 1789.
594a	Minuet, D ma.	Vienna.	1790.
613	8 Variations on B. Schack's "Ein Weib ist das herrlichste Ding".	Vienna.	Mar. 1791

¹ The music of this song has been supposed to be by Beaumarchais himself, but L. Mueller von Asow ('Wiener Figaro', Aug. 1942) attributes it to Antoine Laurent Baudron.

PIANOFORTE DUET

Einstein No.	Kochel No.	Title	Composed at	Finished
19d	—	Sonata, C ma.	London.	July 1765.
123a	381	Sonata, D ma.	? Salzburg.	Early 1772.
186c	358	Sonata, B♭ ma.	Salzburg.	Apr. or May 1774.
375e	401	Fugue, C mi.	Vienna.	Spring 1782.
497	497	Sonata, F ma.	Vienna.	1 Aug. 1786.
497a	357	Sonata, G ma. (unfinished).	Vienna.	Late summer 1786.
501	501	Andante and Variations, G ma.	Vienna.	4 Nov. 1786.
521	521	Sonata, C ma.	Vienna.	29 May 1787.
594	594	Adagio and Allegro, F mi. (orig. for a mechanical org.).	Journey to Frankfurt, and Vienna.	Dec. 1790.
608	608	Fantasy, F mi. (orig. for a mechanical org.).	Vienna.	3 Mar. 1791.
375a	448	Sonata, D ma.	Vienna.	Nov. 1781.
426	426	Fugue, C mi.	Vienna.	29 Dec. 1783.
385f	443	Fugue, D ma. in 3 unspecified parts.	Vienna.	? 1782.
594	594	Adagio and Allegro, F mi. for a mechanical org.	Vienna.	? 1782.
608	608	Fantasy, F mi., for a mechanical org.	Vienna.	? 1782.
616	616	Andante, F ma., for a mechanical org.	Vienna.	4 May 1791.
617a	356	Adagio, C ma., for harmonica.	Vienna.	1st half of 1791.

TWO PIANOFORTES

MISCELLANEOUS INSTRUMENTAL WORKS

DISCARDED KOCHEL NUMBERS

- 17 Symphony No. 2. Spurious.
 18 Symphony No. 3. By C. F. Abel.
 25a Minuet and Trio, C ma., for orch. ? by Beethoven.
 46 Sig. Quintet arrangement of Serenade. E. 370a, K. 361, not made by Mozart.
 55 }
 56 } Sonatas for vn. & pf. Spurious.
 57 }
 58 }
 59 }
 60 } Sonata for vn. & pf. By H. F. Raupach.
 92 Salve Regina, F ma. Doubtful.
 98 Symphony No. 48. Spurious.
 140 Missa brevis. Spurious.
 142 Tantum ergo, B♭ ma. Doubtful.
- 154a 2 Little Fugues for pf. Spurious.
 177 Offertorium sub exposito venerabili. By Leopold Mozart.
 197 Tantum ergo, D ma. Doubtful.
 226 Canon, "O Schwestern". Spurious.
 227 Canon, "O wunderschön". Spurious.
 235 Canon for pf. By C. P. E. Bach.
 231 Fugue, D ma., for orch. By Michael Haydn, finished by Simon Sechter.
 324 Hymn, "Salus infirmorum". Doubtful.
 325 Hymn, "Sancta Maria". Doubtful.
 327 Hymn, "Adoramus te". By Quirino Gasparini.
 340 Kyrie, C ma. Spurious.
 342 Offertorium = last movement of 177 above.
 350 Song, "Wiegenlied", "Schlafe, mein Prinzchen". By Bernhard Flies.
 510 9 Country Dances and Quadrilles. Spurious.
 511a Rondo, B♭ ma., for pf. ? by Beethoven.

KOCHEL NUMBERS FOR MOZART'S ADDITIONAL ACCOMPANIMENTS TO WORKS BY HANDEL

- 566 'Acis and Galatea' (1788).
 572 'Messiah' (1789).
 The vn. Concerto in D ma., orig. in E ma., edited by Marius Casadeus and said to have been written at Versailles in 1766 for Princess Adélaïde of France, has not been conclusively authenticated.
 The so-called "Twelfth Mass" is not by Mozart.

E. B.

See also Accompaniment ('Veilchen'). Ach Gott, vom Himmel (use in 'Magic Flute'). Acis and Galatea (Handel, add. accomp.). Adamberger. Additional Accompaniments. Adlgasser (collab.). Aguiari (meeting with). Alexander's Feast (Handel, add. accomps.). Alkan ('Don Giovanni' vars., Op. 26). Allegri (G., 'Miserere'). Amicis ('Lucio Silla'). Anfossi (interpolations). Armonica (comp. for). Attwood (pupil). Auric ('Petits Riens', arr. for film). Bach (C. P. E., 34, infl. by). Bach (J. C., 38, teacher). Bachmann (Sixtus, contest with). Balfe (appearance in 'Magic Flute'). Barrington (account of M. as a child). Beethoven (visit; vars., chamber m. for vn. & pf. and cello & pf.). Benda (J. A., opinion of). Bishop (H., opera adapts.). Braunfels (vars. on 'Fin ch' han del vino'). Busch (2, vars. for orch.). Cannabich (3, mus. portrait of; 4, memorial cantata). Carnicer (influence on). Chromatic (mus. ex. from 'Prague' Symphony). Clementi (use of theme by). Compass (arias for Queen of Night). Concerto (use of). Dalberg (songs attrib. to M.). Dezède (vars. for pf.). Dieter (rival opera to 'Entführung'). Dittersdorf ('Figaro', opera). Divertimento. Doles (visit to). Duport (vars. on minuet). Dusek (F. X., friendship). Dusek (J., arias for). Eberl (works publ. as M.'s). Eberlin (appreciation of). Eckardt (use of sonata). Eybler (completion of Requiem begun by). False Relation (mus. ex.). Fandango (in 'Figaro'). Ferrandini (visit to). Fiala (J., friendship). Fischer (J. C., vars. on minuet). Fischer (L., friendship & ded.). Flies (vars. on minuet; song attrib. to M.). Form, pp. 437-38. Forster (A., vars. attrib. to M.). Fra due litiganti (Sarti, quotation in 'Don Giovanni'). Frederici (pupil). Gabrieli (Adriana, extra arias in 'Figaro'). Galimatis (K. 32). Gasparini (Q., earlier setting of 'Mitridate'). Gluka (Vars. on theme from 'Don Giovanni' for f.). Gochler (Vars. on theme for pf. trio). Goepfert ('Sarastro' opera, sequel to 'Magic Flute'). Gyrowetz (symphony perf. by M.). Haibel (husband of sister-in-law). Haydn (M., duets of vn. & viola written for H.). Hoffmann (E. T. A., novel on 'Don Giovanni'). Holzbauer (adds. to 'Miserere'). Honauer (use of sonata movements by M.). Hummel (praised by M.). Hummel (J. N., pupil; Vars. on 'Figaro' for pf.). Imitation (mus. ex. of). Janissary Music (use of). Jelyotte (Olivier's picture with J. & M.). Kalkbrenner (C., mutilated version of 'Don Giovanni'). Kelly (M., friendship). 1st Basilio in 'Figaro'. Kirchgessner (2 works written for her). Kuchař (new recitatives for operas). Lachnith (adapt. of 'Zauberflöte'). Leitmotiv (early use of). Leutgeb (works for). Lickl (1, imitation of 'Magic Flute'). Linley (3, friendship). Lortzing (play with m. by M.). Mandoline (use of in 'Don Giovanni'). Martín y Soler (quot. in 'Don Giovanni'). Modulation (exx.). Mojsisovics ('Liebesprobe', spurious ballet). Moreira (resetting of 'Ascanio', lib.). Müller (W., parody of 'Zauberflöte'). Mystères d'Isis (Fr. adapt. of do.). National Anthems (Austria). Nissen (widow's 2nd husband & biographer). Opera. Overture (thematic connections with operas). Paradies (concerto for). Post Horn (use of in K. 320). Quodlibet (ex. in 'Don Giovanni'). Raupach (H. F., pf. concertos based on m. by R.). Rauzzini (V., singing in 'Lucio Silla'; ded. of motet K. 165). Reger (Vars. for orch.). Rheinberger (pf. improv. on 'Zauberflöte'). Riotte (supposed opera 'Mozart's Zauberflöte'). Romance (ex. in D m. Concerto). Rondo (use of form). Schack (1st Tamino in 'Magic Flute'; Vars. on S.'s 'Ein Weib' [K. 613]). Seyfried ('Ahasverus' with m. by M.). Sonata, p. 931. Song, p. 935 (mus. ex., p. 936). Spohr (3 potpourris, chamber m.; 1 for vn. & pf.). Stadler (A., friendship & works written for). Stadler (M., controversy about Requiem). Stegmann (Ger. version of 'Cosi'). Stegmeyer (arr. of 'Schauspieldirektor' as quodlibet). Stora (A., 1st Susanna in 'Figaro'). Stuntz (version of 'Clemenza di Tito'). Sussmayr (completion of Requiem). Swieten (Handel arrs. for S.). Symphony, pp. 214-19. Tchaikovsky (recits. for 'Figaro'). Variations, pp. 681-82. Villalobos ('Sinfonietta' on theme). Weber (burlesque on 'Zauberflöte'). Wessely (B., mourning cantata). Woelfl (use of air from 'Cosi' in harp sonata).

(4) Constanze Mozart (born Weber), (b. Zell, Lower Austria, 6 Jan. 1763; d. Salzburg, 6 Mar. 1842), wife of the preceding.¹ She was not herself gifted with any great musical talent, although she had a pleasing, well-trained voice and was possessed of some skill on the pianoforte. She sang the soprano part in her husband's Mass in C minor (K. 427) on its performance at Salzburg in 1783, and after his death appeared in public at one or two of the concerts of his works that she directed. In 1800 she helped to improve her penurious position by selling all her husband's remaining manuscripts to André, the composer and music publisher of Offenbach. In 1809 she married Georg Nikolaus Nissen, an official in the Danish diplomatic service, whose acquaintance she had made at Vienna in 1797. There were no children of this second marriage. On Nissen's retirement from office in 1820, he and Constanze retired to Salzburg, where Nissen collected the materials for his Mozart biography. He died in 1826, however, before its publication, and Constanze had the task of seeing it through the press. The rest of her life was uneventful. Her character is an interesting study. After Mozart's death she seems to have lost all traces of the slovenliness and improvidence that helped to wreck his affairs, and, as her diary and correspondence² show, became a capable business woman and a devoted mother to his children.

¹ For her pedigree see WEBER (Family).

See also André (2). Eberl (tour with).

(5) Franz Xaver Wolfgang Mozart, (later known as Wolfgang Amadeus) (b. Vienna, 26 July 1791; d. Carlsbad, 29 July 1844), son of the preceding. He was the younger of W. A. Mozart's two surviving sons.³ He was intended from the first for a musical career. He studied in Vienna under Hummel, Salieri, the Abbé Vogler and perhaps Albrechtsberger, and gave his first public concert in 1804. From 1808 to 1814 he held posts as music master to two noble families at Lwów. In 1819 he set out on a long musical tour, finally settling again at Lwów in 1822, where he remained for the rest of his life composing, conducting and teaching music. Both as pianist and composer he was held in high esteem, but his name alone was sufficient to preclude his rising to eminence. It is only fair to add, however, that his music has never yet been subjected to a thorough-going examination. C. B. O.

² See the collection of 'Briefe, Aufzeichnungen, Dokumente', 1782-1842, published by A. Schurig in 1922. This is supplemented by letters of Constanze translated in Emily Anderson's 'The Letters of Mozart and his Family' (1938). Her diary was published in full in the 'Mozarteums Mitteilungen' for 1920.

³ The elder son, Karl (Thomas) Mozart (b. Vienna, 21 Sept. 1784; d. Milan, 31 Oct. 1858), did not become a professional musician, though during his early life in Prague he enjoyed Dusek's instruction and became a gifted pianist. In 1798 he was apprenticed to a merchant at Leghorn. For a long time he still debated the advisability of turning to music as a career, but finally entered the service of the Austrian government and became an official at Milan, where he died unmarried in 1858.

MOZART AND SALIERI ('Моцартъ и Салѣри'). Opera in 2 acts by Rimsky-Korsakov. Setting of Pushkin's dramatic poem. Produced Moscow, 7 Dec. 1898. 1st perf. abroad, Ljubljana (in Slovenian), 9 Jan. 1924. 1st in England, London, Albert Hall (stage perf., in Russian), 11 Oct. 1927. 1st in U.S.A., Forest Park, Pa., 6 Aug. 1933.

MOZART OPERA COMPANY. A company formed in London for the production of operas by Mozart and other composers, mainly modern. It originated in discussions in the autumn of 1952 between Anthony Besch, Robin Chichester-Clark (assistant producer and press officer respectively in the Glyndebourne Opera Company) and Colin Davis. The company probably owes its inception to the self-sponsored productions of the Kalmar Chamber orchestra on 21 Nov. 1949, when Mozart's 'Impresario' was conducted by Colin Davis, and on 2 Nov. 1951, when Imogen Holst conducted Gustav Holst's 'Sävitri'. Privately financed, two experimental performances, conducted by Colin Davis and produced by Anthony Besch, were given in London, at the St. Pancras Town Hall, on 10 and 11 Nov. 1952, with 'The Impresario' and 'Sävitri' sharing a triple bill with Menotti's 'The Telephone'. The enthusiastic reception of this initial venture encouraged the sponsors to plan more ambitious work and to organize the Mozart Opera Company, then informally constituted, on a permanent basis. Though it is not formally connected with the Glyndebourne Opera Company, it acknowledges that organization's friendly and co-operative interest. J. R.

MOZART PIANOFORTE. See CHALLIS.

MOZARTEUM OF SALZBURG, THE.

An educational institution for musicians, housed since 1914 in a handsome building which also serves as the headquarters of the Mozart-Gemeinde, an international society which collects funds for the upkeep of Mozart's birthplace and other places associated with the composer, and for the acquisition of Mozart relics.

MOZARTSTIFTUNG. See FRANKFORT o/M.

MR. WU ('Mister Wu') (Opera). See ALBERT (E. D').

MRAČZEK (Mraček), Joseph Gustav (b. Brno, 12 Mar. 1878; d. Dresden, 24 Dec. 1944).

Moravian violinist, conductor and composer. He studied at Brno and Vienna. From 1897 to 1902 he was leader of the theatre orchestra, and from 1898 to 1918 violin teacher at Brno. In 1919 he settled at Dresden, where he was professor of composition at the Conservatory and (until 1924) conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra. Mraček's works include 6 operas: 'The Glass Slipper' (Brno, 1902); 'The Dream' (Brno, 1909; Berlin, 1912); symphonic interlude 'Rustans Traum' published separately in 1907); 'Aebelö' (Breslau, 1915); 'Ikdar' (Dresden, 1921); 'Herrn Dürers Bild' (Hanover, 1927); 'Der Liebesrat' (not performed). His works for orchestra include a symphonic burlesque, 'Max und Moritz', from Wilhelm Busch's nursery stories (1912), a brilliantly orchestrated piece of the Strauss school; 'Oriental Sketches' for chamber orchestra (1918); symphonic poem 'Eva' (1922); 'Variété' (1928); 'Oriental Dance Rhapsody' (1931), etc. He has also composed a pianoforte Quintet, a string Quartet, pianoforte pieces, songs, etc. A. L.

BIBL.—MÜLLER, E. H., 'Joseph Gustav Mraček' (Dresden, 1918).

MRAVINA, Evgenia Konstantinovna (b. ?, 1864; d. ?, 1914).

Russian 19th–20th-century soprano singer. The daughter of General Mraivinsky, she studied under Prianichnikov — one of the foremost teachers of singing in St. Petersburg towards the close of the 19th century, who had himself appeared with outstanding success on the boards of the Maryinsky Theatre. From her master Mravina learned not only to sing superbly but how to comport herself artistically on the operatic stage. She is the first feminine operatic artist accorded mention by a Russian historian of that art as belonging to the ranks of those singers who firmly discountenanced the idea of opera as a mere "concert in costume". Her voice was notable for its absolute purity and her production of fioriture in the high notes of her register was said to have resembled the sound of silver bells. Despite her fortunate possession of this crystal beauty of vocal utterance she never sought to exploit that gift, which was rightly treated by her as a means to the end of appropriate embellishment. Her enunciation is said to have been impeccable. She was a woman of outstanding personal beauty and it was once remarked of her that when as Oxana in Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Christmas Eve Revels' she is seated before a mirror and asks herself, "Am I not fair to look upon?" Mravina was able to avoid any difficulty in maintaining dramatic verity.

Apart from Russian operatic parts such as Antonida in 'A Life for the Tsar', Ludmila in Glinka's second opera, Tatiana in 'Eugene Onegin' and the Snowmaiden, she appeared as Gounod's Juliet, Wagner's Elsa and Marguerite of Valois in Meyerbeer's 'Huguenots'. It is recorded that in every part she undertook Mravina created an atmosphere which contained the essential character in which she appeared, and it has been observed that while she did not need to rely upon costume as an aid she certainly knew how to wear it. M. M.-N.

Mrštik, brothers. See Novák ('Maryša', overture).
Mrštik, V. See Kvapil ('Romance in May', opera).

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING. Opera in 4 acts by Stanford. Libretto by Julian Russell Sturgis, based on Shakespeare's comedy. Produced London, Covent Garden Theatre, 30 May 1901. 1st perf. abroad, Leipzig, Municipal Theatre (trans. by J. Bernhoff), 25 Apr. 1902.

Mucháček, S. K. See Kovačovic ('Bridegrooms', opera).

Müchler, Carl. See Weber (12, 3 songs).

MUCK, Karl (b. Darmstadt, 22 Oct. 1859; d. Stuttgart, 3 Mar. 1940).

German conductor. His father was a Bavarian magistrate (Ministerialrat). He studied at Heidelberg and Leipzig and at the latter place visited both University and Conservatory, graduating as Ph.D. The same year (1880) he made his début as a pianist at the Leipzig Gewandhaus. Shortly afterwards he became Kapellmeister at Salzburg, then at Brno and Graz, and in 1886 first Kapellmeister in Prague. As director of Angelo Neumann's travelling opera company he appeared in Berlin and was appointed in 1892 Kapellmeister at the Royal Opera in that capital, where he became General Music Director in 1908. Meantime, in 1899, he had conducted Wagner at Covent Garden in London, and through the winter seasons 1903-6, in conjunction with Mottl, he conducted Philharmonic concerts in Vienna. His performances of 'Parsifal' at Bayreuth became famous in 1901. In 1906 he went to the U.S.A. to take charge of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His second term of office there was abruptly terminated by the first world war, after which he conducted at Munich, Hamburg and Amsterdam.

H. v. H., adds.

MUDARRA, Alonso de (b. ?; d. ?).

Spanish 16th-century lutenist. He is said to have been a canon of Seville and published a book of lute tablature entitled:

'Tres libros de música en cifras para vihuela . . . 1546' (Bibl. Nac., Madrid; Escorial).

It includes sets of variations (diferencias) on popular tunes of the day and settings of Spanish ballads, e.g. on the siege of Antequera (1410) and on the death of Absalom, together with passages from Virgil and Ovid and sonnets by Petrarch and Sannazzaro, also by the Spanish poets Jorge Manrique, Boscán and Garcí-Lasso. There are also pavans, a galliard and a fantasy, and fragments of psalms and motets by Josquin des Prés (see Morphy, 'Les Luthistes espagnols', and P. Villalba, 'Canciones españolas de los siglos XV y XVI').

J. B. T.

MUDD, John (b. ?; d. ? Peterborough, ? 1631);

MUDD, Thomas (b. London, c. 1560; d. ? Peterborough, ? 1632).

English organists and composers.¹ Thomas attended St. Paul's School in London and went to Cambridge in 1578 with one of the sizarships for the sons of London mercers. He became a Fellow of Pembroke Hall and continued to be so until as late as 1590. John Mudd was organist of Peterborough Cathedral from 1583 until 1631. A Thomas Mudd succeeded John at Peterborough for about a year until 1632.

A service and 4 anthems at Ely Cathedral are by John, but the nine dances for 3 viols (3 Airs, Allemande, Courante, 2 Sarabandes, Courante and 'Eccho') (B.M. Add. MSS 18,940-41-43-44) are by "Tho. Mudde". A 5-part 'In Nomine', arranged for viols in a manuscript of about 1578 (B.M. Add. MSS 31,390/177), is described simply as by "Mudd". The anthem 'God which has prepared' is put down in the manuscript (written in 1717) as by "John or Thomas", which shows that a certain amount of confusion between them was prevalent even then. An 'In Nomine, De Profundis', described as by Mudd in Batten's Organ Book at St. Michael's College, Tenbury, is probably by Mundy. The words of an anthem by "Mudd" are included in Clifford's collection (1663). Below is a list of anthems by Mudd (any designation as to authorship is given as it stands in the manuscripts):

God which has prepared ("Thomas or John Mudd"). Durh.; Harl. 7340/436. Score; B.M. Add. MSS 30,478-79. Tenor cantoris part only.

I will always give thanks ("Mudd", "Mudes"). PH.; B.M. Add. MSS 30,478-79. Tenor cantoris part only.

Let Thy merciful ears ("Mudd", "Muds"). Durh.; B.M. Add. MSS 30,478-79. Tenor cantoris part only.

Lift up your heads. Durh.; incomp.

Lord hear my voice when I cry ("Tho. Mudde"). Harl. 6347/78. Words only.

O clap your hands. PH.

O God Thou art my God ("Mudd"). B.M. Add. MSS 30,478. Tenor cantoris part only.

There was also a third Mudd living in the 17th century, organist of Lincoln Cathedral in 1662 (described only as "Mr. Mudd"). As, however, he lived much later than John or Thomas, it is unlikely that he wrote any of the above anthems. Certain extracts from letters written by the precentor to the Dean of Lincoln in 1662, complaining about Mudd's drinking-habits, will no doubt confirm this assumption.

J. M. (ii), rev.

MUDGE, ? (b. ?; d. ?).

English 18th-century composer. Nothing is known of him for certain, not even his Christian name. In the subscription lists to 18th-century music there are two instances of a Rev. Mr. Mudge, who in 1750 lived at Birmingham. There is also a Mr. Mudge, a surgeon, who lived at Plymouth, and yet another who gives his residence as Truro. Mudge's sole publication appeared in the 1750s, so that identification with the Birmingham clergyman would seem the most probable; the names of the west-country Mudges appear in subscription lists of the 1770s.

¹ They are so difficult to distinguish that they are best dealt with together. The name also appears as Mudde, Mudes and Muds.

The only work published under the name of Mudge consists of six concertos for two solo violins and strings ripieno. In the first of these a solo trumpet is added to the orchestra and in the sixth a solo harpsichord or organ. To this is added a short adagio for five-part string orchestra (2 violins, 2 violas and bass) at the climax of which three voices sing Byrd's canon 'Non nobis Domine', around which the strings, with the exception of the basses, provide a counterpoint. This work is without parallel in English music of the period. The six concerts show Mudge to have been a composer of considerable skill, and the first allegro of No. 2, with its chromatic fugue subject, suggests that he was never thoroughly conventional. R. G.

MUDIE, Michael (Winfield) (b. Manchester, 3 Dec. 1914).

English conductor. He was educated at Tonbridge School and studied music at the R.C.M. in London. From 1935 to 1939 he was conductor of the Carl Rosa Opera Company and in 1939-40 he conducted the Glyndebourne production of 'The Beggar's Opera' at the Haymarket Theatre in London. After six years' war service he became conductor of the Sadler's Wells Opera in 1946, and two years later he was made a co-director. He conducted there the first performance in England of Verdi's 'Simone Boccanegra'.

Among other vocal and orchestral records Mudie has conducted the recordings of 'Simone Boccanegra' and 'The Beggar's Opera'. He has also been guest conductor of the London Symphony and Royal Philharmonic Orchestras, the Philharmonia, B.B.C. Opera and B.B.C. Northern Orchestras.

M. K. W.

MUDIE, Thomas (Mollison) (b. London [Chelsea], 30 Nov. 1809; d. London, 24 July 1876).

English composer. He was one of the ten successful candidates for entry into the R.A.M. in the severe first examination of 1823. He became a pupil of Crotch for composition, of Cipriani Potter for the pianoforte — who also gave him useful advice as to his writings — and of Willman for the clarinet. His song 'Lungi dal caro bene' was so esteemed that the Committee of Management paid the cost of its publication, an act repeated in the case of Sterndale Bennett's first Concerto, but in no other. Several vocal pieces with orchestral accompaniment, a Symphony in C major and one in B \flat major were also works of his student time.

Mudie's pupilage terminated in 1832 by his appointment as a professor of the pianoforte in the Academy, which post he held till 1844. The Society of British Musicians, founded in 1834, furnished an arena for the performance of several of his works. The Symphony in B \flat already mentioned was played at the concert of 9 Feb. 1835; a Symphony in F major, remarkable for a movement in F minor, 10 Nov. 1835; a Symphony in D major, 10 Mar. 1837; a Quintet in E \flat major for strings and pianoforte, 5 Jan. 1843 and 7 Mar. 1844; a Trio in D major for strings and pianoforte, 6 Oct. 1843; and several songs and concerted vocal pieces on many occasions.

On the death of Alfred Devaux, in 1844, Mudie went to succeed him as teacher in Edinburgh. While there he published several pianoforte pieces and songs, and wrote accompaniments to many in Wood's collection of the 'Songs of Scotland'; he also occasionally gave pianoforte recitals. In 1863 he returned permanently to London, but from that time, except with an Overture at one of the Crystal Palace concerts, came little before the public. The existing scores of his symphonies and the whole of his printed works are deposited in the library of the R.A.M. G. A. M.

MUELLER VON ASOW, Erich (b. Dresden, 31 Aug. 1892).

German musicologist. He studied under Riemann and Schering at Leipzig University, where he took the Ph.D. degree in 1915. He was artistic director of the Modern Music Festival at Dresden in 1917, secretary (1922-1925) and president (1925-35) of the Heinrich Schütz Association, director of the Dresden Pedagogium of Music in 1927-33, founder and director of the International Archives of Musicians' Letters from 1946 and editor of a Bibliography of Musicians' Letters begun in 1947. On his 50th birthday he was created a Knight of the Order of the Crown of Rumania and presented with a 'Festschrift' contributed to by many eminent musicians and musicologists, but not allowed to be published by the Nazi authorities owing to his "unreliable political views"; it was circulated only in typescript. Similarly a picture-book biography of Reger was suppressed because it contained photographs of several non-Aryans; but this has now been published (see below). Mueller von Asow's very numerous literary works include:

BOOKS

- 'Die Mingottischen Opernunternehmungen' (Leipzig Dissertation, 1916).
- 'Joseph Gustav Mraczek' (Dresden, 1917-18).
- 'Angelo und Pietro Mingotti' (Dresden, 1917).
- 'Heinrich Schütz: Leben und Werke' (Dresden, 1922).
- 'Heinrich Schütz' (Leipzig, 1924).
- 'Dresdner Musikstätten' (Dresden, 1931).
- 'Heinrich Schütz: gesammelte Briefe und Schriften', ed. (Ratisbon, 1932).

- 'Egon Kornauth: ein mährischer Komponist' (Vienna, 1941).
 'Johannes Brahms und Mathilde Wesendonk: ein Briefwechsel', ed. (Vienna, 1943).
 'Max Reger und seine Welt: mit 152 Bildern' (Berlin, 1944).
 'Max Reger: Briefwechsel mit Herzog Georg II von Sachsen-Meiningen', ed. (Weimar, 1947).
 'Richard Strauss: thematisches Verzeichnis' (Vienna, 1948).

ARTICLES

- 'Unbekannte Briefe Joseph Haydns' ('Mandyczewski-Ehrung', Vienna, 1927).
 'Eine Tabulatur des Dresdner Hoforganisten Kittel' (Z.M.W., XIII).
 'Ferruccio Busoni und die Wiener Philharmoniker' ('Allg. Musikzeitung', 1938).
 'Ungedruckte Briefe zum Streit um Mozart's Requiem' ('Wiener Figaro', Oct. 1941).
 'La Version initiale de la "Ire Symphonie parisienne" de Mozart' (Grand Festival Mozart, Paris, 1941).
 'Geschichte der Musik bei den Siebenburger Sachsen von 1150 bis 1800' (unpublished).
 'Gluck: gesammelte Briefe und Schriften', ed. (unpublished).
 'Haydn: gesammelte Briefe und Schriften', ed. (unpublished).

EDITIONS

- Schutz, 'Tugend ist der beste Freund' (Brunswick, 1935).
 Mozart, Symphony in B \flat ma. (K. App. 214), previously unpublished (Leipzig, 1942).
 Bach, 'Suites a violoncello solo senza basso' facsimile (with Paul Grummer) (Vienna, 1945).
 Gluck, 'La corona', opera (unpublished).

E. B.

MUEREN, Floris van der (b. Hoogstraten, prov. of Antwerp, 2 Oct. 1890).

Belgian musicologist and composer. He became a laureate of the Interdiocesan School for Church Music at Mechlin in 1911 and studied the history of the arts and archaeology as well as musicology, taking a doctor's degree in the former two subjects at Louvain in 1931. In 1923 he was appointed Professor of Musicology at Ghent University, and in 1939 he was elected a member of the Royal Flemish Academy of Belgium. He composed and published a series of songs, 'Eenzaame Liedjes' ('Solitary Songs') to poems by the Dutch poet Adama van Scheltema, and his books include:

- 'Het Orgel in de Nederlanden' (Louvain, 1931).
 'Vlaamse Muziek en Componisten' (The Hague, 1931).
 'Muziek' (Ghent, 1946), &c.

He contributed to the 'Gentse Bijdragen tot de Kunstgeschiedenis' (Ghent, 1934, 1935, 1942, 1943) and the 'Handboek der Muziekgeschiedenis' (Utrecht, 1947), and the following articles of his appeared in the publications of the Academy: 'De Muziekgeschiedenis in onze Universiteiten' (1943) and 'Over het wetenschappelijk onderzoek van het nationaal karakter der muziek' ('On the Scientific Research into the National Character of Music') (1947).

A. L. G.

MUETTE DE PORTICI, LA ('The Dumb Girl of Portici', also known as 'Masaniello'). Opera in 5 acts by Auber. Libretto by Eugène Scribe and Germain Delavigne. Produced Paris, Opéra 29 Feb. 1828. 1st perf. abroad, Rudolstadt (trans.

by C. A. L. von Lichtenstein), 16 Oct. 1828. 1st in England, London, Drury Lane Theatre (as 'Masaniello, or The Dumb Girl of Portici', trans. by J. Kenney, music adapted by T. S. Cooke and B. Livius), 4 May 1829. 1st in U.S.A., New York (in French), 15 Mar. 1831. A performance in Brussels on 25 Aug. 1830 is said to have started the Revolution which led to the country's independence.

MUFFAT, Georg (b. Schlettstadt, c. 1645; d. Passau, 23 Feb. 1704).

German organist and composer of Scottish extraction.¹ He studied Lully's style for six years in Paris, was organist of Strasbourg Cathedral till 1675, became organist to the Bishop of Salzburg about 1678, visited Vienna and Rome, and became in 1690 organist and in 1695 Kapellmeister and Master of the Pages to the Bishop of Passau. He published 'Armomoco tributo' (sonate di camera, Salzburg, 1682); 'Apparatus musico-organisticus' (twelve toccatas, chaconne, passacaglia, Augsburg, 1690, dedicated to Leopold I), of importance as regards the development of organ playing; 'Svaviore harmoniae. . . Florilegium I' (Augsburg, 1695). 'Florilegium secundum' (Passau, 1698), both with autobiographical preface in four languages; 'Auserlesene mit Ernst und Lust gemengte Instrumental-Musik' (1701).² The 'Apparatus' was republished in the 'Trésor des pianistes' and the two works called 'Florilegium' in D.T.Ö., I and II, the 'Auserlesene mit Ernst und Lust gemengte . . .' in D.T.Ö., XI.

G. F. P., rev.

MUFFAT, Gottlieb (Theophil) (b. Passau, [bapt. 25 Apr.] 1690; d. Vienna, 10 Dec. 1770).

German organist and composer of Scottish extraction³, son of the preceding. He was a pupil of J. J. Fux in Vienna and became in 1717 court and chamber organist to the Emperor Charles VI and to the widowed Empress Amalie Wilhelmine (d. 1742), and music master to the imperial children. He retired on a pension in 1763. He was a distinguished organist and a composer of taste, and published for organ⁴ 72 'Versetten oder Fugen, sammt 12 Toccaten, besonders zu Kirchen-dienst bei Choral-Aemtern und Vespers dienlich' (Vienna, 1726); for harpsichord, 'Componimenti musicali', containing overtures, caprices, sarabandes, etc., with a preface; and ending with 'Particolari segni delle maniere [ornaments] . . .', dedicated to Charles VI, at whose expense it was engraved. Gottlieb Muffat was one of the composers whom Handel laid under contribution for subjects and phrases in his oratorios. The date of the last-mentioned work was formerly given as 1727. Subsequent research by Adler¹ and others fixed it at or about 1739; probably not more than three or four months, if so many, intervened before Handel's use of it in the 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' (Sept. 1739). The 'Componimenti', republished in the 'Trésor des pianistes', were again brought out by Chrysander, as No. 5 of his 'Supplément'.² Adler³ again edited the work for D.T.Ö., III.

¹ Eitner. If so, no doubt the name was originally Moffat. ² See Z.I.M.G., V, 365.

³ Löschenkohl of Vienna republished from this work 'XII kleine Fugen sammt II Toccaten' (c. 1860).

There were two violinists of the same name in the imperial chapel, Gottfried, 1701-9, and Johann Ernst, appointed in 1730, died in 1746, aged forty-eight. C. F. P., rev.

BIBL.—KNÖLL, HEINRICH JOHANN, 'Die Klavier- und Orgelwerke von Theophil Muffat', dissertation (Vienna, 1916).

MÜGLIN, Heinrich von (b. ?; d. ?).

German 14th-century composer. He is represented by some songs in the 'Codex Lunaecensis'. Some were republished in 1896 by F. Arnold Mayer and H. Rietsch. The theme of the Mastersingers' march in Wagner's 'Meistersinger von Nürnberg' is adapted from a tune by Müglin.

E. v. d. s., add.

MUGNONE, Leopoldo (b. Naples, 29 Sept. 1858; d. Naples, 22 Dec. 1941).

Italian conductor and composer. He came of a musical family and studied at the Conservatorio di San Pietro a Maiella at Naples under Vesi and Serrao. At the age of twelve he wrote a pretty comic opera, 'Il dott. Bartolo Salsapariglia', which was successfully performed at various academies. Another, 'Don Bizarro e le sue figlie', was given in 1875 at the Teatro Nuovo, Naples, together with some of his Neapolitan songs. With Enrico Golisciani as librettist he wrote, when still a youth, several other comic stage works, including 'Mamma Angot al serraglio di Costantinopoli' (3 acts), which enjoyed a lengthy run in 1875. So did 'Il birichino' (1 act), produced at the Teatro Malibran, Venice, on 11 Aug. 1892 and also given at Florence, Rome, Vienna and Barcelona. The opera 'Vita bretonna' was produced at the Teatro San Carlo, Naples, under his own direction in 1905 and well received.

Mugnone's career as a conductor began when he was only sixteen with a season of comic opera at the Teatro La Fenice, a minor theatre in his native city named after the famous one at Venice. After this he had experience as chorus master and as accompanist to Bottesini, the famous double-bass player. His talent was recognized by the publisher Sonzogno, who engaged him for various operatic undertakings, including that in Rome (1890) which gave him the direction of the first performance of Mascagni's 'Cavalleria rusticana'. He also shared with Toscanini the direction of the special performances at the Teatro alla Scala at Milan in honour of Verdi, a revival of whose 'Nabucco' he conducted with conspicuous ability.

He distinguished himself no less in the handling of symphonic orchestras, particularly with works of the modern Italian school. A well-known writer, Amintore Galli, once said of him: "He is the personification of Italian art as well as the manifestation of a sensitive and essentially musical soul".

When Mugnone visited England his individuality and sincerity were clearly revealed during the season that he conducted in London, at Covent Garden, where he made his début with 'La Bohème' in the autumn of 1905 and directed the first performance in England of Giordano's 'Andrea Chénier'. A year later he brought out the same composer's 'Fedora' and in 1919 Mascagni's 'Iris'. H. K.

MUHAMMEDAN MUSIC. See MOHAMMEDAN MUSIC.

MÜHLFELD, Richard (b. Salzgungen, 28 Feb. 1856; d. Meiningen, 1 June 1907).

German clarinettist. He was a member of the Grand Ducal Orchestra of Meiningen from 1873, at first as a violinist, but from 1876 as first clarinet, having taught himself the latter instrument with such success that he rapidly gained a unique position among modern players. He took part in the Bayreuth festival plays in 1884-96 and visited England for the first time in 1892, appearing on 28 Mar. at the Popular Concerts, in Brahms's Quintet for clarinet and strings, a work, like that master's Trio and two Sonatas in which the same instrument is employed, written with special view to Mühlfeld's great qualities as a player. In all kinds of music his performance was a perfect model of what musical interpretation should be. Many a detail of excellence in the Meiningen orchestra was due to him, for he was accustomed for many years to act as sub-conductor and to rehearse the players singly and in groups. J. A. F.-M.

MUNEIRA (Muñeira). See FOLK MUSIC: SPANISH.

Muir, Edwin. See Scott (F. G., song).

MUKLE, May (Henrietta) (b. London, 14 May 1880).

English violoncellist. She comes of a musical family, several members of whom are distinguished instrumental performers. She was educated at the R.A.M. in London. As her public career began at the age of nine and has been continued since with successful tours at home, in various European countries and in the U.S.A., she may be regarded as a pioneer among women cellists.⁴ She is a per-

¹ See Z.I.M.G., Dec. 1907 and Feb. 1908.

² See 'Denkmäler', I, 689.

³ See Riv. Mus. It., III, 1, where an interesting article by Guido Adler is to be found.

⁴ See VIOLONCELLO PLAYING.

former of first-rate ability who has constantly set herself to enlarge the repertory of her instrument by the introduction of new works of serious aim. She has also done admirable work in chamber music, especially as a member of several quartets. H. C. C., adds.

See also Hayward (Quartet).

MUL, Jan (Johan) (b. Amsterdam, 3 Apr. 1910).

Dutch organist, composer and critic. He studied at the Amsterdam Conservatory under Hendrik Andriessen (organ and composition) and Sem Dresden (composition). For many years he was organist at Overveen near Haarlem. He is best known as music critic for the popular Amsterdam newspaper 'Het Volkskrant' and for his lectures on musical subjects, but has also won an honourable position as a composer, particularly of organ and church music, including a number of masses. Of his works for concert purposes the principal are:

- 'Te Deum laudamus' for chorus & orch.
- 'Stabat Mater' for chorus & orch.
- 'Egmont onhald' ('Egmont Belieided') for chorus & orch.
- 'Divertimento' for chamber orch.
- Concerto for pf. & orch.
- 'Coplas', songs with orch.
- Sonata for vn. & pf.
- 2 Sonatas for pf.
- Prelude and Fugue for pf.
- 'Toccata' for pf.
- 'Six Intervals' for pf.
- Arietta and Fugue for 2 pfs.
- 'Three Latin Love Songs' for voice & pf.

H. A.

MULDER, Ernest Willem (b. Amsterdam, 21 July 1898).

Dutch composer and teacher. He was educated at the Amsterdam Toonkunst Conservatory, where he later became principal teacher of composition and theory. From 1938 to 1947 he was tutor at Utrecht University in "the technique of music". For many years he was Director of the Music School at Bussum and conductor of the Toonkunst Musical Society, his activities in these matters being brought to an end by the National Socialist invasion. As the basis of his teaching he wrote a book on 'The Theory of Harmony'.

Besides many works for pianoforte, songs and choral works ('Holland', 'Ars contrapunctica'), and an opera, 'Dafne', Mulder has specialized in orchestral music based on sacred themes. Four of his works bear the title 'Symphonia sacra', the first two being for orchestra and chorus, the third and fourth for orchestra alone. In the third, 'Symphonia sacra super psalmos', which is traditional in form though modern in feeling, he has employed three tunes from the Genevan Psalter: Ps. CV for the first movement, Ps. LXXXVI (variations and fugue) for the second and Ps. XXV (passacaglia) for the third. A fourth 'Symphonia sacra', not completed at the time of writing (1950), bears the title of "super passionem". These two last works were written for the Netherlands Christian Radio Society (N.C.R.V.) festivals.

H. A.

MULDER, Jan. See KING COLE CLUB.

MULÈ, Giuseppe (b. Termini, Sicily, 28 June 1885; d. Rome, 10 Sept. 1951).

Italian composer. He studied at the Conservatory of Palermo, obtaining his diploma in both cello playing and composition. In 1922 he was appointed director of that institution, but left three years later to take up a similar post at the R. Conservatorio di Santa Cecilia in Rome. His talent for organization was recognized by the Fascist government, which appointed him national secretary to the Fascist syndicate of musicians.

His music was at first influenced by the traditions of the Italian composers of the "realistic" school; but later he came under the influence of Sicilian folksong and found in Sicilian song and landscape the inspiration for his work. Going back to the very sources of folksong, he discovered the spiritual world of Greek tragedy and devoted himself to the writing of music for the performances given in the open-air theatre at Syracuse. It is in this field that Mulè excelled. But even in his operas the dramatic emotion and the atmosphere bear the stamp of a racial instinct as evident in his legendary and mythical drama as in popular comedy.

He composed the following operas: 'La Baronessa di Carini', lyric tragedy in one act (Palermo, 16 Apr. 1912); 'Al lupo!' lyric drama in two acts (1919); 'La monacella della fontana', legend in one act (Trieste, 17 Feb. 1923); 'Danni', pastoral poem in three acts (Rome, 14 Mar. 1928); 'Liola', on Pirandello's comedy, in three acts (Naples, 2 Feb. 1935); 'Taormina', idyll in one act (1937).

For Greek plays he composed choral music and intermezzi for the 'Choephoroe' of Aeschylus (1921); choral numbers and dances for Euripides' 'Bacchae' (1922); three choral pieces for Aeschylus' 'Seven against Thebes'; choral and dance music for Sophocles' 'Antigone' (1924); three choral pieces for Euripides' 'Medea'; choral numbers and dances for Euripides' 'The Cyclops' and for Sophocles' 'Satyric Play' (both 1927, the latter revived at the I.S.C.M. Festival, Palermo, 1949); choral and dance music for Euripides' 'Iphigenia in Aulis' (1930) and 'Iphigenia in Tauris' (1933); instrumental and choral music for Euripides' 'Hippolytus' (1934). He also wrote music for Corradini's tragedy 'Julius Caesar' (1928).

Other works by Mulè include an oratorio, 'Il cieco di Gerico', two orchestral movements, 'Sicilia canora' (1924); symphonic poem for orchestra, 'Vendemmia' (1936);

'Tre canti siciliani' for voice and orchestra (1930); a string Quartet and pieces for violin and for cello. A. C. (ii).

MULETIER, LE (Opera). See HÉROLD.

Mulgrave, Earl of (John Sheffield). See Sheffield.

MÜLLER. German family of string players.

(1) Aegidius Christoph Müller (b. Görsbach nr. Nordhausen, 2 July 1765; d. Brunswick, 14 Aug. 1841). He was Hofmusikus to the Duke of Brunswick.

(2) Karl Friedrich Müller (b. Brunswick, 11 Nov. 1797; d. Brunswick, 4 Apr. 1873), violinist, son of the preceding. He became Konzertmeister at the ducal court of Brunswick, and with his three brothers formed a string quartet that acquired considerable celebrity.

(3) Theodor Heinrich Gustav Müller (b. Brunswick, 3 Dec. 1799; d. Brunswick, 7 Sept. 1855), violist, brother of the preceding. He took the viola in the family quartet.

(4) August Theodor Müller (b. Brunswick, 27 Aug. 1802; d. Brunswick, 20 Oct. 1875), violoncellist, brother of the preceding. He took the cello in the family quartet.

(5) Franz Ferdinand Georg Müller (b. Brunswick, 30 July 1808; d. Brunswick, 22 May 1855), violinist and conductor, brother of the preceding. He took the second violin in the family quartet and was Kapellmeister to the Duke of Brunswick.

Educated by their father expressly with a view to quartet playing, the four brothers (2-5) brought the art to a perfection then unknown. The Duke of Brunswick's somewhat tyrannical regulation, by which none of his musicians was allowed to take any part in the music of the town, obliged them to prepare in secret for appearing in public, and in 1830 they sent in their resignations. They gave concerts at Hamburg in 1831 and in 1832 in Berlin, where the public gradually learned to appreciate their wonderful team-work. In 1833 they left Berlin and visited in turn all the principal cities of Germany as well as Paris, extending their tours farther and farther till 1845, when they went to Russia. Their repertory consisted almost entirely of the works of Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven. Their performance of Haydn's "Emperor" Quartet especially had a world-wide reputation.

(6) Bernhard Müller (b. Brunswick, 24 Feb. 1825; d. Rostock, 4 Sept. 1895), violist, nephew of the preceding, son of (2). He was the viola in a younger Müller string quartet formed with his three brothers.

(7) Karl Müller (b. Brunswick, 14 Apr. 1829; d. Stuttgart, 11 Nov. 1907), violinist and conductor, brother of the preceding. He was the leader of the younger family quartet and after marrying a singer, Elvira Berghaus, was known as Müller-Berghaus. He became Kapellmeister at Rostock.

(8) Hugo Müller (b. Brunswick, 21 Sept.

1832; d. Brunswick, 26 June 1886), violinist, brother of the preceding. He played second violin in the younger family quartet.

(9) Wilhelm Müller (b. Brunswick, 1 June 1834; d. New York, Sept. 1897), violoncellist, brother of the preceding. He was the cellist of the younger family quartet, but also the most important individually, for, unlike his brothers, he appeared frequently as a soloist. He was also for ten years a member of the Joachim Quartet and in 1873 became Kammermusikus and teacher at the High School for Music in Berlin.

The four brothers (6-9) were court quartet players to the Duke of Meiningen and also made extended tours, visiting Russia, Denmark and France. In 1866 they settled for a short time at Wiesbaden, and then at Rostock, where, Karl having become Kapellmeister, his place in the quartet was taken when travelling by Leopold Auer. It was, however, broken up entirely in 1873, by Wilhelm's Berlin appointment.

The younger Mullers, though distinguished for their ensemble, did not reach the standard maintained by the older members of the family, the chief reason being that, instead of restricting themselves to genuine quartets, they played music which, though good of its kind, was in reality better suited to a small orchestra. F. G.

MÜLLER, August (Eberhardt) (b. Northeim, Hanover, 13 Dec. 1767; d. Weimar, 3 Dec. 1817).

German keyboard player, flautist and composer. His father, organist at Rinteln, was his first instructor, and he subsequently learnt of J. C. F. Bach of Buckeburg. In 1785 he went to Leipzig to study law, but soon gave it up and became in 1789 organist of St. Ulric's Church at Magdeburg. In 1792 he was chosen to direct the concerts, etc., in Berlin, and there he became intimate with Marpurg, Fasch, Reichardt and other distinguished men. He was made organist of St. Nicholas Church, Leipzig, in 1794. He played the organ and harpsichord equally well, and was also proficient on the flute. In 1800 he was appointed deputy to J. A. Hiller at St. Thomas's School, and he became cantor on Hiller's death in 1804. In 1810 he moved to Weimar.

The following are Müller's chief compositions:

- 2 Operettas (Singspiele) (posthumous).
- 3 Cantatas for 4 voices & orch.
- 2 Concertos for pf.
- 11 Concertos for flute.
- Fantasy for flute & orch.
- Trio for vn., cello & pf., Op. 17.
- 2 Sonatas for vn. & pf.
- 23 Duets for 2 flutes.
- Sonatas, Variations, etc. for pf.
- Sonata for organ.
- Chorale Variations for organ.
- Suites for organ.
- Songs with pf.

Müller also wrote a method for the piano-forte and an instruction book for the flute.

J. A. F.-M.

MÜLLER-BLATTAU, Josef (Maria) (b. Colmar, 28 May 1895).

German musicologist. He studied musical science with Friedrich Ludwig and composition with Hans Pfitzner at Strasbourg. The first world war, in which he participated from the beginning to the end, interrupted his studies. After the armistice, however, he continued them at Freiburg with Wilibald Gurlitt, who made him his assistant in 1919. Three years later Muller-Blattau became a lecturer in musical science at the University of Königsberg, where he was appointed professor in 1928. In this town he worked also as academic musical director and as head of the Institute for Church and School Music. In 1935 he resigned from his post at the University to take up a similar professorship at Frankfurt o/M., where he stayed for two years. He then accepted an appointment at the University of Freiburg, succeeding his former teacher, Wilibald Gurlitt in the professorship. In 1952 he became director of the Saar Conservatory and Professor of Music at the Saar University.

The following are Muller-Blattau's chief publications:

BOOKS

- 'Geschichte der Fuge' (Cassel, 1922; 2nd ed. 1930).
- 'Die Kompositionslehre Heinrich Schutzens' (Leipzig, 1926).
- 'Einführung in die Musikgeschichte' (Berlin, 1932; 2nd ed. 1938).
- 'Das deutsche Volkslied' (Berlin, 1932).
- 'G. F. Handel' (Potsdam, 1933).
- 'Brahms' (Potsdam, 1933).
- 'J. S. Bach' (Leipzig, 1935; 2nd ed. 1950).
- 'Hohe Schule der Musik' (Potsdam, 1935).
- 'Geschichte der deutschen Musik' (Berlin, 1938; 2nd ed. 1953).
- 'Hans Pfitzner' (Potsdam, 1940).
- 'Gestaltung-Umgestaltung: Studien zur Geschichte der musikalischen Variation' (Stuttgart, 1950).
- 'Genealogie der Bachischen Familie' (Cassel, 1950).
- 'Das Verhältnis von Wort und Ton in der Geschichte der Musik' (Stuttgart, 1952).

ARTICLES

- 'Musik der Goethezeit' ('Euphoriön', 1930).
- 'Goethe und die Kantate' (J.M.P., 1930).
- 'Weisen des Lothamer Liederbuches' ('Archiv für Musikforschung', 1938).
- 'Glück und die deutsche Dichtung' (J.M.P., 1939).
- 'Zur Geschichte des vierhändigen Klavierspiels' (J.M.P., 1941).
- 'H. Albert und das Barocklied' ('Vierteljahrsschrift für literarische Wissenschaft', 1952).

EDITIONS

- Forkel, 'J. S. Bach' (Cassel, 1924).
- Rostock Song Book, with F. Ranke (Halle, 1928).
- H. Albert, 'Musikalische Kurbishutte' (Cassel, 1932).
- 'Preussische Festlieder' (Cassel, 1940).
- 'Musica reservata' (Cassel, 1952).

E. B.

MÜLLER, Christian (b. ?; d. ? Amsterdam, ?).

Dutch or German 18th-century organ builder. He worked in Amsterdam between 1720 and 1770 and built the finest organs in Holland, especially the celebrated instrument at Haarlem dating from 1738.

v. de P.

MÜLLER, Eduard (b. Basel, 12 Oct. 1912).

Swiss organist and harpsichordist. He studied at Basel under A. Hamm (organ) and Gunther Ramin (organ and harpsichord), and in 1934 was appointed organist and choir-master at St. Paul's Church there. He teaches his instruments as well as thorough-bass at the Basel Conservatory and the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis. He became more widely known by his concert tours in England, Holland, Germany, France and Austria. At Basel he did notable work as a performer by playing the complete clavier and organ works of Bach.

K. V. F.

MÜLLER-HARTMANN, Robert (b. Hamburg, 11 Oct. 1884; d. Dorking, Surrey, 15 Dec. 1950).

German composer. He studied at the Stern Conservatory in Berlin and became a teacher and writer on music in his native city. From 1923 to 1933 he lectured on musical theory at Hamburg University, and he published a treatise 'Aufgaben zur Harmonielehre'. In 1937 he settled in London. As a composer he did not adhere to any of the extreme modern schools, and his reputation rests mainly on his orchestral works. Among the prominent musicians who have conducted them are Richard Strauss, Karl Muck and Fritz Busch. They include a Symphony in C major, an Overture to Georg Büchner's 'Leonce und Lena', a 'Symphonische Ballade', a 'Symphonische Overture', a Suite in E major, another entitled 'Das Wasser', Variations and Fugue on an original theme, Variations on a pastoral theme, a 'Sinfonietta' for small orchestra and 'Craigelly Suite' for string orchestra.

Muller-Hartmann also wrote incidental music for Büchner's comedy, the overture to which is listed above, and for Eduard Stucken's mystery play 'Gawân', 2 string Quartets, a Trio for flute, violin and viola, 2 Sonatas for vn. & pf., a Sonata for 2 vns., a Passacaglia, a Sonata and 24 Preludes for organ, Variations on a theme by Purcell and other works for pianoforte, and numerous songs.

Having settled at Dorking to be near Vaughan Williams, to whom he was greatly attached, he did work of various kinds for that master and made a German translation of his 'Pilgrim's Progress'.

A. L., adds.

MÜLLER, Heinrich (b. Lübeck, 18 Oct. 1631; d. Rostock, 17 Sept. 1675).

German ecclesiastic and hymnologist. He was pastor and archdeacon of St. Mary's Church at Rostock from 1653 until his death, also a distinguished professor of theology at the University there. Among his numerous theological and homiletical works he published in 1659 a book entitled 'Geistliche Seelen-Musik', containing about 400 hymns, for which 126 tunes are provided with figured bass. As the hymns are characterized by almost an excess of subjective devotional sentiment, some of them by Müller himself, and a large number from Angelus Silesius, so the tunes bear witness to a corresponding change in musical taste and to the gradual suppression of the older rhythmical chorale in favour of the secular aria form in modern keys. The work is even more of a pioneer in this direction than Crüger's 'Praxis pietatis melica'. Of the tunes fifty new ones are the invention of Nicolaus Hasse, then organist of St. Mary's Church.¹ None of these tunes has continued in general use.

Müller prefaces his work with a series of ten chapters on the origin and use of spiritual songs, in the course of which he deplors the decay of congregational interest in church music and hymn-singing, and of the devotional sentiment in connection therewith. Another work by Müller may be mentioned, 'Geistliche Erquick-Stunden' (1664-66), the devotions in which were afterwards versified and provided with tunes in the form of spiritual arias by several Nuremberg poets and musicians, members of the Pegnitz-Blumen-Genossenschaft, and published under the title 'Poetischer Andacht-Klang' (1673-91).

J. R. M.

MÜLLER-HERMANN, Johanna (b. Vienna, 15 Jan. 1878).

Austrian composer. Her father was a high Austrian state official, her mother a gifted instrumentalist and singer. She started composing while still a child and received her first musical instruction in Vienna from Karl Nawratil and Josef Labor. She then studied with Guido Adler and Alexander von Zemlinsky and finally, as a mature artist, with J. B. Foerster. When this composer returned to Prague in 1918 she succeeded him as a teacher of musical theory at the Neues Wiener Konservatorium.

In her music Johanna Müller-Hermann starts from the later romantic tendencies of Brahms and Reger. She adheres on principle to the traditional musical forms and tonality, but this does not prevent her from being influenced by the harmonic richness of Schoenberg and the opalescent instrumentation of Schreker. Her works abound in polyphony and show an impressive impetus in their climaxes. She cultivates almost all domains of music except opera. Although she wrote numerous songs, pianoforte pieces and chamber works, her special leaning is towards the larger forms. Her most important work is the oratorio 'In Memoriam' (Op. 30), based on words by Walt Whitman. Her other compositions include the following:

CHORAL WORKS WITH ORCHESTRA

- Op.
- 10. 'Zwei dreistimmige Frauenchöre.'
- 16. 'Der sterbende Schwan.'
- 22. 'Deutscher Schwur.'
- 27. Symphony, D mi., with solo voices & orch.
- 29. Ode.
- 37. 'Von Minnelob und Glaubenstreu.'

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 21. 'Heroische Ouverture.'
- 25. Symph. Fantasy on Ibsen's 'Brand'.

VOICE AND ORCHESTRA

- 26. Songs.

CHAMBER MUSIC

- 6. String Quartet, E♭ ma.
- 7. String Quintet.
- 31. Quintet, G mi., for 2 vns., viola, cello & pf.

ONE INSTRUMENT AND PIANOFORTE

- 5. Vn. Sonata.
- 17. Cello Sonata.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- 8. Sonata.
- Also pieces Opp. 3, 12 & 19.

SONGS

- Opp. 1, 2, 4, 11, 14, 18-20, 23, 28, 32 & 33.
- Also unaccompanied choral works, etc.

K. G., adds.

MÜLLER, Iwan (b. Reval, 3 Dec. 1786; d. Buckeburg, 4 Feb. 1854).

Russo-German clarinettist. He made many improvements in his instrument, producing finally a clarinet with 13 keys which is often called by his name. He first appeared as a touring clarinettist and basset-horn player in Berlin and Leipzig in 1808, and a year later in Vienna, where Gyrowetz praised his playing on his new clarinet, made by Merklein of Vienna, "which can play in all keys with ease and security without changing the joints". Méhul, Cherubini and other Paris musicians were less enthusiastic when Müller submitted his invention to a commission appointed to examine it in 1812, and it was not till 1816 that Gambaro, the leading French player, adopted the new instrument. His example was soon followed by Berr and other prominent players.

Müller clarinets, made originally by Gentellet of Paris, were greatly improved by the younger Sax in the later 1830s, and rather later by E. Albert, both of Brussels. German makers, who contributed improvements, were Wünnenberg of Cologne and J. A. Heckel of Biebrich.

Much of Müller's life was spent in touring Europe. He was well known in London, where he appeared in 1815 and in 1816 at concerts of the Philharmonic Society. The statement that he was professor at the Paris Conservatoire is erroneous. As a player

¹ One reappeared in 'Songs of Syon', edited by the Rev. G. R. Woodward (No. 3).

Müller was brilliant and impetuous, but inferior in tone and refinement to H. Bärmann and Hermstedt. Soon after 1825 he wrote a method for his improved clarinet, which he dedicated to George IV of England.

F. G. R.

MÜLLER, Paul (b. Zurich, 19 June 1898).

Swiss conductor and composer. He was a pupil at the Zürich Conservatory from 1917 to 1920, and later studied in Paris and Berlin. In 1927 he was appointed to the staff of the Zurich Conservatory as teacher of counterpoint and conductor of the Akademisches Orchester, the Elisabeth Schmid-Chor and the Mannerchor Unterstrass Zürich. The high seriousness of his attitude towards his art is admirably expressed both in his vocal and his instrumental music. In his earlier works Müller showed himself attached to the romantics, but later he turned more especially to the study of the old Italian and Netherlands masters. His music shows a vigorous synthesis of logical polyphony, often related to the old church modes, and harmonic thinking. Without either experimenting or yielding to influences, he goes his own way. Strict part-writing is allied in his work with individual invention. He has done significant work in almost every domain of music except opera, and special attention is due to his sacred choral works on the one hand and his orchestral and chamber music on the other. The following are his chief works:

STAGE MUSIC

- Op.*
 7. 'Die Simulanten', play with music (1922).
 9. Music for the puppet play 'Dr. Faust'.
 13. Incidental music for Schiller's 'Wilhelm Tell' (1926).
 — Festival plays (1939 & 1947).
 Other incidental music.

CHORAL WORKS

11. 'Te Deum' for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1924).
 17. Mass for women's voices & insts.
 20. 'Te Deum' for women's voices & insts. (1923).
 29. 'Der Sonnengesang des heiligen Franz von Assisi' for solo voices, women's chorus & 6 insts. (1939).
 — Cantata 'Mein Land' for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1950-51).
 48. Cantata 'Aus Knechtschaft zur Freiheit' for contralto, bass, chorus & orch. (1952).
 Also motets, hymns & partsongs.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

3. 'Kleine Sinfonie' (1920).
 14. 'Hymnus'.
 21. 'Praludium, Aria und Fuge' (1933).
 40. 'Sinfonia' for stgs. (1944).
 43. 'Sinfonia', D mi. (1947).

SOLO AND ORCHESTRA

24. 'Concertino' for viola & small orch.
 25. Concerto for vn. & small orch. (1925).
 28. Concerto for organ & stgs. (1938).
 36. 'Psalmemusik' for soprano & stgs. (1942).

CHAMBER MUSIC

2. String Quintet (1919).
 4. String Quartet.
 8. 'Marienleben', 8 pieces for chamber combination.
 26. Quartet for vn., viola, cello & pf. (1937-38).
 — String Trio (1930).

VOL. V

Also 2 Sonatas for vn. & pf., Sonata for clar. & pf. works for organ & for pf., & c.

K. V. F.

Bibl.: — HRS, E., Article in Schweiz. Mus. Ztg., 1948, No. 5.

MÜLLER VON ASOW, Erich. See MUELLER VON ASOW.

MÜLLER VON KULM, Walter (b. Basel, 31 Aug. 1899).

Swiss composer. Having begun his musical studies with Werner Wehrli of Aarau, he studied further at the Conservatories of Basel and Zurich. At the same time he read musicology, philosophy and psychology at Basel University. He began to make a living as an elementary schoolmaster, but eventually devoted himself wholly to music. In 1917 he was appointed director of the Basel Conservatory, where he also teaches musical theory. His theoretical and pedagogic studies found an outlet in a book, 'Grundriss der Harmonielehre' (Basel, 1948), which is admirable both for its method and its contents. As editor of the 'Schweizerische musikpädagogische Blätter' he published in its first issue (1949) a lucid article setting forth his musical philosophy.

Müller's creative work is extraordinarily rich and manifold. His music, particularly on the vocal side, is permeated by spiritual and ethical strength and shows an abundance of both harmonic colour and rhythmic force. The following are his most important compositions:

STAGE WORKS

- 'Mutterland', festival play for the Federal Choral Festival at Basel (1935).
 'Die blaue Blume', ballet, Op. 36 (1936).
 'Der Erfinder', opera (libretto by O. Walterlin) (1936-1944).

CHORAL WORKS

- 'Klaggesang' (Goethe) for solo voices, chorus & orch., Op. 13 (1925 & 1932).
 'Grosser Choral' for solo voices, chorus & orch., Op. 38 (1936).
 'Vater unser', oratorio for solo voices, chorus, children's choir, organ & orch., Op. 52 (1945).
 Also works for unaccompanied chorus.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- Symphony, D mi., Op. 15 (1928).
 Music for stg. orch. with harpsichord, vn. & viola, Op. 24 (1931).
 Music for stgs., Op. 42 (1939).
 Suite on Swiss Folksongs, No. 2, Op. 58.

SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

- 'Kammerkonzert' for vn. & stgs., Op. 23 (1930).
 'Concertino' for flute & stgs., Op. 40 (1936).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- String Quartets, Opp. 18, 26 & 56.
 Trio for vn., cello & pf., Op. 30.
 'Kleine Serenade' for wind insts., Op. 35.
 Suite for 4 wind insts., Op. 57.

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

- 2 Sonatas, Op. 31.
 Also pf. & organ works, numerous songs, & c.

K. V. F.

MÜLLER, Wenzel (b. Trnava, Moravia, 26 Sept. 1767; d. Baden nr. Vienna, 3 Aug. 1835).

Austrian conductor and composer. He was for some time a pupil of Dittersdorf and became conductor in the Brno theatre in 1783, though only sixteen years of age. In 1786, still only nineteen, he obtained a similar post at Marinelli's suburban theatre in Vienna (Theater in der Leopoldstadt), where the rest of his life was spent, with the exception of the years 1808-13. During this period he was director of the Opera in Prague, where his daughter Therese, afterwards known as Madame Grünbaum, was engaged as a singer.

On his return to Vienna Müller resumed his post of conductor at the Leopoldstadt Theatre, which he retained until within a short time of his death. As a composer of plays with music, more or less approaching to light operas, he enjoyed enormous popularity for many years, and his productions in this kind are said to number over two hundred. His more ambitious works, such as symphonies, masses, etc., were less successful.

A complete list of Müller's stage works would take up far more space than they deserve, for they are extremely flimsy and as a rule slightly valuable only for some melodious songs; but the most successful may be mentioned as having some historical interest. A heroisch-komisches Original-Singspiel, 'Das Sonnenfest der Braminen', was produced at the Leopoldstadt Theatre on 9 Sept. 1790. It was his first considerable success since his appointment to that theatre, and it was followed by 'Kaspar der Fagottist, oder die Zauberzither' on 8 June 1791, of peculiar interest because Schikaneder took several suggestions from it for the plot of 'Die Zauberflöte', though these can have been only last-moment alterations, since Mozart's opera was produced on 30 Sept. of the same year. 'Das Neusonntagskind', produced at the Leopoldstadt on 10 Oct. 1793, was a favourite in Austria and Germany, and even travelled elsewhere. It had 154 performances in Vienna alone between its production and 1829. 'Die Schwestern von Prag', produced there on 11 Mar. 1794, was even more successful, and Beethoven, who must have known it, used the song "Ich bin der Schneider Kakadu" for the variations in his Op. 121a for violin, cello and pianoforte in 1823. On 12 Nov. 1799 a popular piece (ein österreichisches Volksmärchen mit Gesang nach einer Sage der Vorzeit) came out and had a long run as well as successes abroad, but its sequel, 'Otto von Löwenstein', had only nine performances after the first on 24 June 1815. In 1818 Müller produced a parody of 'The Magic Flute' entitled 'Die travestierte Zauberflöte'.

J. A. F.-M., rev. & adds.

BIBL.—[Krone, Walter, 'Wenzel Müller'] (Berlin, 1906).

RAAB, LEOPOLD, 'Wenzel Müller' (Vienna, 1928).

See also Stegmann (adds. to 'Sonnenfest').

Müller, Wilhelm. See Brahms (2 partsongs). Götz (cantata). Loder (4, 'Brooklet', song). Raff ('Schöne Mullerin', stg. 4tet). Schubert (45 songs).

MULLERPHONE. See DOUBLE BASSOON.

MULLINER BOOK, THE. Smaller in size, less opulently bound and less famous than the later Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, the Mulliner Book (B.M. Add. MS 30, 513) has none the less a special place in the history of keyboard music in England. The official description is as follows¹:

Paper; late Henry VIII. Oblong octavo. In the original binding, stamped with Tudor rose, portcullis and fleur de lys, and the initials H[enricus] R[ex]. Belonged at a late period successively to J. Stafford Smith, Dr. Rimbault and Professor W. H. Cummings. Collection of compositions apparently arranged for Organ or virginals, on two staves of from 5 to 8 lines each, or a single staff of from 11 to 13 lines. Probably in the hand of Thomas Mulliner, Master of the Choir at St. Paul's Cathedral, who appears to have been the original owner of the MS, as testified (f. 2) by John Heywood [virginal-player to Edward VI], and who is evidently the "T. M." mentioned below.² The composers' names, where known, are appended below. The short biographical notes interspersed throughout the MS are in the hand of John Stafford Smith, who lent it to Sir John Hawkins in 1774 (see f. 110).

To this description may be added a more detailed conspectus. On f. 1 appears a fragment of a madrigal a 4 called 'The hier that the cedar tree' (signed T. M.) and on f. 2 the writings by Stafford Smith begin. In the centre of the page are the words:

Sum liber thomae mullineri iohanne heywoode teste followed by a few lines of Latin by way of preface. The keyboard music extends from f. 3 to f. 115, though a number of pages appear to have been cut out between f. 8 and f. 9. It is at this point that the first part of the book may have been inserted, for the cheirography differs greatly from what follows and may be ascribed to a later date than Mulliner's work, which begins at f. 9. There is a blank and unnumbered folio between f. 17v and f. 18 (which are also practically blank). More notes by Smith are found on f. 115v, f. 116 and f. 117, while the remaining section of the book is taken up by music for the cittern and gittern. There is another short poem, 'De beata Maria versus', on f. 128, the end page containing various writings, including the name of Thomas Mulliner.

Certain scholars have thought fit to assign a definite date to the Mulliner Book, but whether the date suggested refers to the commencement of the book or to its completion is never expressly stated. The fact has been overlooked that a manuscript of this class and size would take many years to copy, if (as is supposed) it was the exclusive property of a busy organist and choirmaster. Since the paper and binding of the book belong to the latter part of the reign of Henry VIII, it is quite probable that the pieces beginning at f. 9 (with the twelve-line staves) were copied just before 1550. The pieces at the end of the keyboard section of the book may, however, have been copied as late as 1575, for the contents display not only an obvious chronology but a very broad hint of Mulliner's move to Oxford. For example, the earlier generation of Tudor composers, including Allwood, Taverner, Farrant and Shelbye, is represented in the first half of the book, while names like Munday, Heath, Tye and Whyte are found in the second half. Again, the pieces by Redford, who lived and worked in London, end on f. 69; and the bulk of the music by Blitheman (the Oxford organist) begins on f. 71. If this dividing-line does indicate Mulliner's change of domicile, it may well coincide with the appearance of his name in the books of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, on 3 Mar. 1563, when he is described as a modulator organorum.

¹ Hughes-Hughes's 'Catalogue of Manuscript Music in the British Museum' (Vol. III).

² I.e. on f. lv and f. 125.

There is no evidence that he actually composed any of the keyboard pieces in the manuscript, though his initials are appended to the vocal fragment on f. 1 and to the galliard for cittern on f. 125. It is therefore assumed that he acted rather as a dutiful, but by no means always infallible copyist, and that he so came to perpetuate many works by his contemporaries which would otherwise have been irretrievably lost. For one feature of the manuscript which is often overlooked is the unique appearance of some three-quarters of the total number of pieces: there are no copies of them anywhere. If the Mulliner Book had not been so well looked after, the largest single source for instrumental music by Redford, Blitheman and Tallis would have vanished, and countless authorities would have been compelled to state that no organ music by Shepherd, Farrant, Newman, Shelbye and Heath had ever come down to us.

Mulliner was clearly a broad-minded organist, for his choice of music includes not only compositions for the organ by all the best composers of the day, but also pieces for the virginals, for viols and for voices. This last category includes transcriptions from sacred music, some with English words, some with Latin; also secular partsongs, whose existence during the reign of Henry VIII is amply substantiated by Mulliner's choice. These partsongs are quite distinct in both technique and treatment from the more famous products of the later madrigal schools, and it is a matter for regret that in many cases Mulliner gives only the incipit of the text. Where no poem can be found to correspond, there is little or no hope of making a plausible reconstruction of the song, though an isolated bassus part found in the Public Record Office has been of considerable assistance.¹

The sacred music in the manuscript reflects perfectly the unsettled state of the Church during the mid-16th century. Some of the pieces are extracts from larger works, the 'Quia fecit' by Shepherd being taken from a Magnificat, and 'Per haec nos' by Tallis from a motet, 'Salve intemerata virgo'. Mulliner never states his source. Had he done so, the riddle of the In Nomine, so recently and belatedly solved, would never have existed, for the Taverner 'In Nomine' is an almost exact transcription of the latter part of the Benedictus in the Mass 'Gloria tibi Trinitas'. Most of the In Nomines subsequently written use the plainsong 'Gloria tibi Trinitas' as canto fermo, though the one important exception is found in the Mulliner Book itself--the 'In Nomine' by Allwood. Those by Johnson and Whyte follow the orthodox pattern, but are nothing more than keyboard arrangements of the original compositions for consort of viols.

The English church music includes a rather faulty version of Tye's 'I lift my heart', Tallis's 'Purge me, O Lord' (in the guise of a partsong entitled 'Fond youth is a bubble') and 'Rejoice in the Lord', which stands out by reason of its purity of style and its deft and memorable melodic lines. Since the day when Hawkins published his 'History of Music' this anthem has been attributed to Redford, presumably because he was the indubitable author of the pieces immediately before it in the manuscript. 'Rejoice in the Lord' is not, however, signed; yet there is ample room for a signature. The problem of the authorship thus remains unsolved, for nothing could be so dissimilar in style and technique as the Redford organ pieces, all based on Gregorian chant, and the anthem with English words, in which not a scrap of plainsong is anywhere audible.

The music based on plainsong forms well over half the total contents of the book. The settings may be two-, three- or four-voiced, with the plainsong appearing in any one of the parts. It never wanders from one to the other, though it may be shared out between the two hands of the player, in which case it is called a Meane. Sometimes the plainsong is quoted in bare breves; sometimes it is richly decorated, being so closely matched to the other parts that the listener has difficulty in finding it out. To help matters, Mulliner wrote out the beginning of the chant before each piece, on a fragment of four-lined stave. These fragments offer a strong visual contrast to the seven- or eight-lined staves used in the bulk of the manuscript, of which the earlier part has even twelve-lined staves, often with two or three separate clefs. Both sharps and flats are employed, though sparingly, and their function is that of a guide to the player, who would add further accidentals whenever the laws of musica facta called for them. Several pieces have an irregular key-signature, with one flat in the bass part and none in the treble. Even the reverse is sometimes found, which rules out the possibility of classing these irregularities as "partial signatures". A more likely cause may well be the fallibility of copyists, and since Mulliner was one of their number, he also is under suspicion.

¹ For a full description see article in 'Music Survey' II, 3.

His handwriting, although fairly neat, presents more difficulties than the actual style of notation. Many are the occasions when either horizontal or vertical alignment is wrong, with the result that the composer has been credited with barbarous harmonic imagination, or the instrument, whether virginals or organ, has been described as possessing a wider range than it actually had. There are some flourishes at the end of certain pieces which have been taken for cadential chords, and so transcribed in one edition.¹ Primitive bar-lines have been a source of worry to other scholars, who have been reluctant to admit that there is no scheme or principle which governs their insertion. Stems of notes crossed through two or three times, and usually interpreted as ornaments, take on new aspects here. They may signify new entries of a point (f. 99v) or serve to bring out the part-writing which has been obscured in the process of transcription (ff. 17, 82, 101, 106v, 108).

There are no ligatures in the manuscript.

There are, however, many instances of coloration, a notational device for which Mulliner has three distinct uses. Firstly, it is used to show proportio sesquialtera in Nos. 28, 41, 77, 93. Secondly, to mark out the vagans or meane, as it wanders from stave to stave so that the part shall lie conveniently under the hands (Nos. 30, 32, 36, 40, 47, 48, 53, 63, 67, 72, 73). Thirdly, it is used for a canto fermo, no matter what voice may have the part. Thus, in Nos. 21, 23 and 52 the soprano is blackened; with Nos. 35 and 62 it is the alto; with Nos. 31 and 51 it is the tenor; and in Nos. 19 and 75 the bass.

From all this it may readily be seen that Mulliner the copyist was as broad-minded as Mulliner the compiler: he is a unique figure, and his book is a landmark in musical history. The best of the keyboard pieces show the gradual change in musical style and technique which characterized the progressive outlook of so many English composers of the 16th century, proving them to be not insensitive to each other's influence, yet individual to such an extent that it is often possible to assign anonymous works, within a reasonable limit of accuracy, to the composer whose main features seem to stand out in those works. The difference between the earliest and simplest of the plainsong pieces, almost like exercises in strict counterpoint, and the later and more complex structures by Blitheman and his contemporaries, gives evidence of an ever-increasing feeling for keyboard colour and formal ingenuity, and a growing desire to make the most of the plainsong basis which is at one and the same time the beauty and the limitation of early English instrumental music.

MULLINER BOOK --- CONTENTS ²

No.	Folio	Title	Composer	Other MSS	Printed Ed. ³
—	1v	The hier that the cedar tree.	T. M[ulliner].	—	—
0	3	O ye happye dames [incomplete].	—	—	—
1	3	[The Maiden's Song.]	—	—	—
2	3v	[Galliard.]	—	—	—
—	5v	—	J. S. S[mith].	—	—
3	6v	Gloria tibi Trinitas.	N. Carleton.	—	—
4	7v	—	N. Carleton.	—	—
5	9	[Ex more docti mistico.]	[Redford.]	—	—
6	10	[Exultet coelum laudibus.]	[Redford.]	—	—
7	10v	[Miserere.]	[Redford.]	371 f. 15v. 29996 f. 7.	PJR p. 23
8	11v	[Miserere.]	[Redford.]	—	—
9	12v	[Puer] natus est nobis.	Tallis.	—	WHN.
10	13v	A fansye.	Newman.	—	—
11	14v	Whose faythefull service.	—	—	—
12	15	—	—	—	—
13	15v	La bounette.	—	—	SMA p. 38.
14	16	La doune cella.	—	—	SMA p. 38.
15	16v	La shy myze.	—	—	SMA p. 38.
16	17	—	—	—	—
17	18v	Voluntarye.	Allwood.	—	WAM No. 24.
18	19v	Claro pascali gaudio.	Allwood.	—	HGH (supplement).
19	20v	Felix namque.	Farrant.	—	GEO p. 20.

¹ Glyn, 'Early English Organ Music'.

² The complete manuscript, transcribed in modern notation, is available in 'Musica Britannica', Vol. I (1951).

³ For key to abbreviations see end of list.

No.	Folio	Title	Composer	Other MSS	Printed Ed. ¹
20	25	Voluntarye.	Farrant.	—	—
21	25v	Claro pascali gaudio.	Allwood.	—	—
22	27	Christe qui lux.	Blytheman.	—	—
23	27v	In nomine.	Allwood.	—	—
24	29	Quia fecit.	Shepherd.	45 f. 15v. 423 p. 238. 30480 f. 49.	TCM (8vo.). PJR p. 42.
25	29v	Fond youth is a bubble.	Tallis.	—	—
26	30v	Eterne rex altissime.	Redford.	—	—
27	31	—	Blytheman.	—	—
28	31v	O lux on the faburden.	Redford.	—	PJR p. 50.
29	33v	O lux with a meane.	Redford.	—	PJR p. 51.
30	34v	Exultet celum laudibus with a meane.	Redford.	—	PJR p. 43. GEO p. 24.
31	35	Christe qui lux.	Redford.	29996 f. 11.	PJR p. 33.
32	35	An excellent meane [Felix namque].	Blytheman.	—	HGH (supplement).
33	37	A point.	Shepherd.	—	HGH (supplement). SKS p. 394. AEM p. 222.
34	37v	Felix namque.	Shelbye.	—	—
35	41v	In nomine.	Taverner.	24d. 212. 371 f. 6v. 4900 f. 61v. 15166 f. 88v. 29246 f. 54v. 30480 f. 53. 31390 f. 101.	DME. GEO p. 14. TCM i.
36	42v	Salvator with a meane.	Redford.	—	PJR p. 57.
37	43v	Lucem tuam.	Redford.	—	PJR p. 19. GEO p. 30.
38	44v	[Te lucis ante terminum.]	Redford.	—	PJR p. 88.
39	45v	Lucem tuam.	Redford.	—	PJR p. 20. GEO p. 31.
40	47	Christe qui lux es with a meane.	Redford.	—	PJR p. 33. GEO p. 26.
41	47v	Miserere.	Shelbye.	—	—
42	48v	—	Allwood.	—	GEO p. 21.
43	49v	Remember not, O Lord.	Tallis.	74 f. 13.	DME. DWP.
44	51	I give you a new commandment.	[Shepherd.]	420 30480 f. 29.	GMS No. 18.
45	51v	In nomine.	Johnson.	212 31390 f. 53.	—
46	53	Sermone blando.	[Redford.]	—	—
47	54	Veni redemptor [genium].	Redford.	29996 f. 16.	PJR p. 61.
48	54v	Iste confessor with a meane.	Redford.	—	PJR p. 44.
49	55v	Eterne rerum conditor.	Blytheman.	—	—
50	56	Eterne rerum conditor.	Blytheman.	—	—
51	56v	Eterne rerum conditor.	Blytheman.	—	—
52	57	Eterne rerum conditor.	Blytheman.	—	—
53	58	Miserere with a meane.	Redford.	29996 f. 8.	PJR p. 25.
54	58v	Glorificamus.	Redford.	15233 f. 1.	WAM No. 24. PJR p. 17. GEO p. 28.
55	59v	Versus.	Shepherd.	—	—
56	59v	Versus.	Shepherd.	—	—
57	60	Versus.	Shepherd.	—	—
58	60v	—	[Redford.]	—	—
59	61v	Tibi omnes.	Redford.	15233 f. 2v.	PJR p. 79.
60	61v	Te per orbem terrarum.	Redford.	15233 f. 2v.	PJR p. 79.
61	62v	Tu ad liberandum.	[Redford.]	15233 f. 2v.	PJR p. 77.
62	63	Salvum fac.	[Redford.]	15233 f. 2v.	PJR p. 78.
63	63v	Iste confessor with a meane.	Redford.	—	PJR p. 45. GEO p. 25.
64	64	A point.	[Redford.]	—	PJR p. 87.
65	64	A point.	[Redford.]	—	AEM p. 223. PJR p. 87.
66	64v	Verbum supernum with a meane.	Redford.	29996 f. 14.	AEM p. 223. PJR p. 64.
67	65	A meane.	Redford.	—	GEO p. 24.
68	65	A point.	[Redford.]	—	PJR p. 87.
69	65	A point.	[Redford.]	—	PJR p. 87.
70	65v	My friends.	—	246 f. 22v.	—
71	66	Like as the chayned wight.	—	—	—
72	66v	Salvator with a meane.	Redford.	—	PJR p. 56.
73	67	Aurora lucis with a meane.	Redford.	—	PJR p. 29.
74	67v	Eterne rerum conditor.	Redford.	—	PJR p. 41.
75	68v	Iam lucis orto sidere.	Redford.	—	PJR p. 48.
76	69v	Rejoice in the Lord always.	—	—	HGH (supplement). TCM (8vo).
77	71	Te Deum.	Blytheman.	—	—
78	76v	Of wise heads.	—	—	—

¹ For key to abbreviations see end of list.

No.	Folio	Title	Composer	Other MSS	Printed Ed. ¹
79	77v	O the silly man.	Edwards.	722 f. 61v. 1196 f. 110v. 2111 f. 3.	HGH (supplement).
80	78v	Defiled is my name.	Johnson.	722 f. 60v. 1196 f. 110. 2111 f. 1v. 30480 f. 49v.	HGH (supplement).
81	79v	In going to my naked bed.	[Edwards.]	722 f. 62v. 2111 f. 4v. 36526a. 15166 f. 1.	HGH (supplement). FMS vol. 36.
82	80v	The man is blest.	[Shepherd.]	—	—
83	81	O ye tender babes.	Tallis.	—	—
84	81v	Benedicam Domino.	Johnson.	246 f. 24v. 4900 f. 60v.	—
85	83v	When shall my sorrowful sighing.	[Tallis.]	74 f. 35v. 30480 f. 48. 33933 f. 60. 36484 f. 1.	OCS No. 351.
86	84v	Iam lucis orto sidere.	Tallis.	—	GEO p. 5.
87	85v	In nomine.	White.	212 no. 6. 22597 f. 54v.	—
88	86v	I smile to see how you devise.	—	—	—
89	87v	The wretched wandering Prince of Troy.	—	—	—
90	88	When Cressyde went from Troy.	—	—	—
91	88v	Gloria tibi Trinitas.	Blitheman.	—	—
92	90	Gloria tibi Trinitas.	Blitheman.	30485 f. 58v. 31403 f. 8v. Fitz p. 91.	RTP p. 237. FWB i. 181.
93	91v	Gloria tibi Trinitas.	Blitheman.	5612 p. 108.	—
94	93	Gloria tibi Trinitas.	Blitheman.	—	—
95	94	Gloria tibi Trinitas.	Blitheman.	—	—
96	96	Gloria tibi Trinitas.	Blitheman.	—	—
97	97	Veni redemptor.	Tallis.	—	GEO p. 8.
98	97v	Ex more docti mystico.	Tallis.	—	GEO p. 6.
99	98v	[Clarifica me pater.]	Tallis.	—	GEO p. 9.
100	99	Ecce tempus.	Tallis.	—	GEO p. 7.
101	99v	[Clarifica me pater.]	Tallis.	—	—
102	100	Veni redemptor.	Tallis.	23623 f. 167.	—
103	100v	A point.	Tallis.	—	GEO p. 6.
104	101	[Clarifica me pater.]	Tallis.	—	GEO p. 3.
105	101v	Ecce tempus idoneum.	[Tallis.]	—	GEO p. 4.
106	102	Iste confessor.	Tallis.	—	—
107	102v	Christe qui lux es.	Heath.	—	—
108	103v	Christe redemptor omnium.	[Blitheman.]	—	—
109	105	O Lord, turn not away.	—	—	—
110	106v	Since thou art false to me.	—	4900 f. 58.	—
111	107	O happy dames.	[Shepherd.]	246 f. 28v.	—
112	108	—	—	—	—
113	108v	When griping griefs.	[Edwards.]	1196 f. 109v.	HGH (supplement). RMI.
114	109	The bitter sweet.	—	246 f. 29.	—
115	109v	Like as the doleful dove.	Tallis.	722 f. 43v.	HGH (supplement).
116	110v	A pavyon.	Newman.	—	—
117	111	I lift my heart.	Tye.	29372 f. 75. 30087 f. 118v. 30478 f. 23v. 31443 f. 171.	BCM.
118	113	As I deserve.	—	—	—
119	113v	Per haec nos.	Tallis.	24d f. 159v. 24h f. 108. 312 f. 86v. 423 p. 98. 2035 f. 6; f. 40v. 29246 f. 9v.	TCM vi. 151.
120	114v	Tres partes in una.	Munday.	—	—

MUSIC FOR CITTERN AND GITTERN

No.	Folio	Title	Composer	Instrument	Printed Ed. ¹
i	118	A songue.	—	[4-course cittern.]	—
ii	118v	A Pavion.	—	[5-course cittern.]	—
iii	119v	[A galliard.]	—	Gitterne.	—
iv	120v	[A pavane.]	—	[gittern.]	—
v	121v	—	—	[gittern.]	—
vi	122	[Galliard to passamezzo antico.]	—	[4-course] Sytherne.	—
vii	122v	[A cin]quepasse.	—	[4-course cittern.]	—
viii	123	Was not goode Kinge Solomon.	—	[4-course cittern.]	—
ix	123v	Queen of Scotts Gallyard to the Sithorne.	T. M[ulliner].	[4-course cittern.]	GSJ i. 57.
x	125	The French Galliarde.	—	[4-course cittern.]	—
xi	126v	Venetian Galliarde.	Churchyard.	[4-course cittern.]	—

¹ For key to abbreviations see end of list.

KEY TO MANUSCRIPTS AND PRINTED EDITIONS

(a) Manuscripts

24d	King's MS RM 24.d.2.	B.M.
24h	King's MS RM 24.h.11.	B.M.
Fitz	Mus. MS 32.G.29.	Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge.
45	Mus. MS 45.	Ch. Ch., Oxford.
74	Royal MS Appendix 74-76.	B.M.
212	MS Mus. Sch. D 212-216.	Bodl. Lib.
246	S.P.1 [Henry VIII] Vol. 246.	Public Record Office.
342	MS 342.	St. Michael's College, Tenbury.
371	Mus. MS 371.	Ch. Ch., Oxford.
420	MS Mus. Sch. E 420-422.	Bodl. Lib.
423	MS Mus. Sch. E 423.	Bodl. Lib.
722	R.C.M. MS 722.	B.M.
1196	R.C.M. MS 1196.	B.M.
2035	R.C.M. MS 2035.	B.M.
2111	R.C.M. MS 2111.	B.M.
4900	Additional MS 4900.	B.M.
5612	Drexel Collection MS 5612.	Public Library, New York.
15166	Additional MS 15166.	B.M.
15233	Additional MS 15233.	B.M.

All other numbers between 22597 and 36526a are among the Additional MSS of the British Museum.

(b) Printed Editions

AEM	Anderton, H.	'Early English Music' (London, 1920).
BCM	Barnard, J.	'The First Book of Selected Church Music' (London, 1641).
CMS		Church Music Society Reprints (London, 1912).
DME	Day, J.	'Morning and Evening Prayer' (London, 1565).
DWP	Dav, J.	'The Whole Psalter' (London, 1563).
FWB	Maitland & Squire.	'The Fitzwilliam Virginal Book' (Leipzig, 1899).
FMS	Fellowes, E. H.	'The English Madrigal School' (1913).
GEO	Glyn, M.	'Early English Organ Music' (1939).
GSJ		'Galpin Society Journal', I. (The above list of Music for Cittern and Gittern is taken from the article by R. T. Dart.)
HGH	Hawkins, J.	'A General History of the Science and Practice of Musick' (London, 1776).
OCS		'Oxford Choral Songs' (Oxford, 1927).
PJR	Pfaffeicher, C. F.	'John Redford' (Gassel, 1934).
RMI	Rimbault, E.	'Musical Illustrations of Bishop Percy's "Reliques"' (London, 1850).
RTP	Rimbault, E.	'The Pianoforte' (London, 1860).
SMA	Smith, J. S.	'Musica antiqua' (London, 1812).
SRS	Southgate, T.	'The Regal and its Successors' ('English Music', London, 1911).
TCM		'Tudor Church Music' (Oxford, 1921).
TCM (8vo)		Octavo edition of 'Tudor Church Music'.
WAM	West, J. E.	'Anthology of Old English Organ Music'
WHN	Wolf, J.	'Handbuch der Notationskunde.'

D. W. S.

BIBL. — STEVENS, DENIS W., 'The Mulliner Book: a Commentary' (London, 1952).

MULLINGS, Frank (b. Walsall, 10 May 1881; d. Manchester, 19 May 1953).

English tenor singer. He received his musical training at the Birmingham and Midland Institute under Granville Bantock and G. A. Breeden (vocal). In 1904 he won the Maas scholarship at that school, and three years later he made a public appearance in opera at Coventry in the part of Faust. He sang first in London at a Queen's Hall concert in 1911, but his experience as an operatic tenor really dates from a tour he made with the Denhof company in 1913. Subsequently he came under the notice of Sir Thomas Beecham and extended his growing reputation as a heroic tenor to the metropolis. He made his début at Covent Garden during the Beecham summer season of 1919 as Hadyar in the first English performance of Isidore de Lara's opera 'Nail'. In the autumn of the same year he did more conspicuous work by appearing as Othello in Verdi's opera and (17 Nov.) as Parsifal in the first English performance of Wagner's work. Both these impersonations gained for him warm praise and encouragement, while other parts in which he appeared to notable advantage were Tristan, Tannhauser, Siegfried and Radames.

After the formation of the British National Opera Company his work in opera was mainly associated with that organization, and among other parts he created that of Apollo in Rutland Boughton's opera 'Alkestis' on its production at Covent Garden on 11 Jan. 1924. During all this period he was doing important concert work and appearing at most of the principal musical festivals. In his later years he confined himself mainly to recital work, when his exceptional intelligence and versatility stood him in good stead. He never wholly rid himself of vocal defects and faults of production, but there was never any doubt of his passionate artistic sincerity.

Mullings taught for many years in Manchester and at the Birmingham School of Music, which made him a Fellow (F.B.S.M.) in 1949.

H. K., adds.

Müllner, Adolf. See Weber (12, 'König Yugurd', incid. m.).

Munch, Andreas. See Grieg (4 songs). Kjerul ('Brudefærden', chorus).

MÜNCH, Charles (b. Strasbourg, 26 Sept. 1891).

French conductor. He was the younger son of Ernest Münch, founder of the Chœur Saint-Guillaume at Strasbourg, and studied the violin first at the Strasbourg Conservatory and later in Berlin as a pupil of Carl Flesch. He became professor of the violin first at the Strasbourg Conservatory, then at Leipzig, where from 1926 he was leader of the Gewandhaus Orchestra. In 1933 he went to Paris and made his début as a conductor, giving concerts with the Paris Symphony Orchestra and the Lamoureux and Straram Orchestras. On the foundation of the Paris Philharmonic Orchestra by Alfred Cortot, Münch took over its direction and soon distinguished himself by his excellent and unusual programmes, of which a large part was given over to new and rarely heard works. He was principal conductor at the I.S.C.M. Festival held in Paris in 1937 and conducted the special centenary performance of Berlioz's Requiem in the Cour des Invalides.

In 1936 Münch was appointed a professor at the École Normale de Musique in Paris. In 1938 he visited London and conducted the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra, and the same year he succeeded Philippe Gaubert as conductor of the Société des Concerts du Conservatoire. Since 1945 he has been touring Europe and America extensively, and in 1948 he was appointed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A. H. (ii) & F. E. G.

MÜNCH, Fritz (b. Strasbourg, 2 June 1890).

French choirmaster and teacher, brother of the preceding. He first studied music in his native town, later at Leipzig, Berlin and Paris. He succeeded his father as director of the Chœur Saint-Guillaume, and rapidly made a name for himself both at Strasbourg and elsewhere. For many years he has been director of the Municipal Conservatory of Strasbourg and lecturer in the history of music at Strasbourg University. A. H. (ii).

MÜNCH, Hans (b. Mulhouse, Alsace, 9 Mar. 1893).

Swiss conductor and composer of Alsatian birth. Among his earliest teachers was Albert Schweitzer. In 1912 he went to Basel and studied at the Conservatory under Hans Huber, Hamm, David and Haeser. In 1918 he joined the staff of the Conservatory as professor of the pianoforte (till 1927) and of choral singing (till 1935); he was also conductor of the Kleinbasel Men's Choral Society and the Deutscher Männerchor (till 1926), and from 1921 to 1926 he conducted the Basel Bach Choir. He succeeded Hermann Suter in 1925 as conductor of the Basler Gesangverein, a large choral society, and of the excellent male-voice choir, the Basler Liedertafel. In 1935 he became conductor of the symphony concerts of the Allgemeine Musikgesellschaft, in succession to Weingartner, and was made director of the Music School and Conservatory (1935-47) and guest conductor at the Basel Municipal Theatre. In 1939 the University of Basel conferred a doctor's degree honoris causa on him.

Münch's work as a conductor has formed the bulk of his activity at Basel. He is among the most eminent of Swiss conductors. Though his interests are varied, he is most at home in the works of Beethoven, Wagner and Bruckner; but he also does much good work on behalf of young composers, especially those connected with Basel.

As a composer Münch has become known particularly through his choral works and his music for festival plays. The music for Bernoulli's mystery play 'Totentanz' and for Stickelberger's 'Reformationsgedenkspiel', as well as the 'Gryphius-Kantate', are outstanding. He has also written chamber music and songs.

H. E., adds.

Münchhausen, Lucia Elisabeth. See Bach (J. C. F., 36, husband of).

Münchhausen, Hieronymus von. See Grosheim ('Sympathie der Seelen', incid. m.). Sommer (opera).

MÜNCHHEIMER, Adam. See MINCHEJMER.

MÜNCH(E)NER LIEDERBUCH. An important collection of German songs of the 15th century, with some instrumental dances and canons. See SONG, p. 919.

Munck, Axel. See Delius ('Sunset', song).

MUNCK, Ernest de (b. Brussels, 1840; d. London, 19 Jan. 1915).

Belgian violoncellist. He was a pupil of his father, François de Munck, and of Servais, and was a capable cellist by the age of ten. In 1855 he went on tour in Great Britain with Jullien's orchestra, and he ultimately settled down in London, where he was engaged as professor at the G.S.M. His residence in London, however, was not continuous. In 1868 he was in Paris and in 1870 at Weimar, where he formed part of the court orchestra. He married Carlotta Patti in 1879. In 1893 he was appointed professor at the R.A.M. in London. w. w. c.

MUNCK, François de (b. Brussels, 1815; d. Brussels, 1854).

Belgian violoncellist, father of the preceding. He was trained under Platel at the Brussels Conservatoire, in which institution he eventually became that famous teacher's successor as first professor of the cello. As a soloist he was well known in Germany. In 1848 he accepted a post in the orchestra of Her Majesty's Theatre, London, but he returned to Brussels in 1853. His chroniclers unite in ascribing to him exceptional talents, the development of which was hindered by a somewhat disorderly course of life. His one published composition was a 'Fantaisie et variations sur un thème russe'.

W. W. C.

Munday, Anthony. See Moeran (madrigal).

MUNDAY, Eliza. See SALMON.

MUNDAY, Mrs. See MAHON (7).

MUNDY, John (b. ?; d. Windsor, 1630).

English organist and composer. He was a son of William Mundy, Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, and received his musical education from his father. He became organist of Eton College and about 1585 succeeded John Marbeck as one of the organists of St George's Chapel, Windsor. On 9 July 1586 he graduated B.Mus. at Oxford. Both he and his father are mentioned in some verses at the end of a manuscript collection of motets and madrigals transcribed in 1591 by John Baldwin, singing-man of Windsor, recounting the celebrated musicians of the time.

In 1594 Mundy published 'Songs and Psalmes, composed into 3, 4 and 5 parts, for the use and delight of such as either love or learne Musicke'. He took his D.Mus. degree in 1624. An anthem by him is contained in Barnard's manuscript collections, and three of the pieces in his 'Songs and Psalmes' were scored by Burney¹, who also gives a partsong by him, 'In deep distress'.² Several of Mundy's compositions for the keyboard are contained in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, among them a curious fantasy describing 'Faire Wether', 'Lightning', 'Thunder', 'Calme Wether' and 'A faire Day'. He was buried in the Cloisters of St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

Mundy contributed the 5-part madrigal 'Lightly she whipped o'er the dales' to Morley's 'Triumphes of Oriana' (1601-3), and the following are the madrigals contained in his 'Songs and Psalmes'³:

FOR THREE VOICES

Of all the birds,
As I went walking,
Turn about and see me.

FOR FOUR VOICES

My prime of youth.
In deep distress.
The longer that I live.
Heigh ho! 'chill go to plough.

FOR FIVE VOICES

Were I a king.
(In midst of woods (Pt. i).
(The blackbird made (Pt. ii).
Penelope that longed.
Who loves a life.

W. H. H., adds.

Bibl. — FELLOWS, E. H., 'English Madrigal Composers' (Oxford, 1921).

See also Ferguson (orch. piece on 'Go from my window').

¹ B.M., Add. MSS 11,388.

² 'History', III, 55; modern ed. II, 53.

³ Republished in 'The English Madrigal School', Vol. XXXV.

MUNDY, William (b. ?, c. 1529; d. ?, c. 1591).

English composer, father of the preceding. He succeeded Thomas Giles as head chorister of Westminster Abbey in 1543 and remained there for at least the next twelve months. He became a vicar-choral of St. Paul's Cathedral in London and was sworn a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal on 21 Feb. 1564. A service and three anthems by him, and also the anthem 'O Lord, the Maker of all thing' (sometimes assigned to Henry VIII), are printed in Barnard's 'Selected Church Music'. Another service and two other anthems are contained in Barnard's manuscript collections, and eleven Latin motets in a set of manuscript parts by him, both in the R.C.M. A number of compositions are in the Christ Church and Music School collections, Oxford. The words of several of his anthems are contained in Clifford's 'Divine Services and Anthems' (1664).

Mundy is mentioned by Morley in his 'Introduction', in company with Byrd and others, as never having "thought it greater sacriledge to spurne against the Image of a Saint then to take two perfect cordes of one kinde together". This mention may have further significance since Mundy was at the Abbey and in Edward VI's and Mary's reign one of the singing men was a Robert Morley, while a Robert White was Master of the Choristers, coming to the Abbey when William Mundy would have been thirteen and while Morley was still there. There was undoubtedly a thread of the old Catholicism in the Abbey right through Elizabeth I's reign, and one of the choristers who later became Bishop of Gloucester is the only Anglican prelate believed to have gone over to Rome, and the headmaster at Westminster School in 1610 embraced the Roman Communion.

The date of Mundy's death is not recorded, but it was probably in 1591, as on 12 Oct. in that year Anthony Anderson was sworn Gentleman of the Chapel Royal in his place.

W. H. H. & E. P. (iii).

See also Anthem.

MUNEIRA (Muñeira). See FOLK MUSIC: SPANISH.

MUNICH. Throughout its history until 1918 Munich's musical life had been closely bound up with that of the Bavarian court. To go no farther back, Lassus spent the last thirty-four years of his life there as Hofkapellmeister, his most prolific if not his best period, to be followed at intervals by his son Ferdinand (1609) and his grandson Ferdinand (1616-1629). The first opera recorded at Munich was brought there by the Electress Adelaide from her home in Savoy. Opera seria had given way to opera buffa by 1745.

OPERA.—The small Residenztheater, an interesting example of theatrical rococo, was begun in 1751 and opened in 1753. Mozart's 'Idomeneo' was produced at Munich in 1781. Side by side with Italian opera occasional German musical plays were produced. A new opera-house had been built in 1818 on the site of the Franciscan monastery from plans of Karl von Fischer. In 1818, however, it was burnt down. Ludwig I had it rebuilt according to Fischer's plans in 1823; it was reopened on 2 Jan. 1825 as the Hof- und Nationaltheater. Shortly afterwards the king disbanded the Italian opera; it is said that he was finally converted by a performance of 'Fidelio'.

With Johann Aiblinger as chief Kapellmeister came the new period when the German opera at Munich began to rank with the best in the country. The subsequent hundred years of opera in Munich may be said to form an epitome of the development of opera in Germany. First came the period of Franz Lachner. With his production of Meyerbeer's 'Les Huguenots' he lifted the Munich Opera on to a new plane; another landmark was his production of 'Tannhäuser' in 1855, in the face of strong opposition and intrigue. After his death in 1860 the second period may be said to have begun. It was signalized by the friendship between the new King, Ludwig II, and Wagner. The composer brought Hans von Bülow to Munich, first as court pianist, but soon to be advanced (in 1867) to general musical director. A year later Hans Richter went to Munich as director of the opera chorus, also under the influence of Wagner, and in 1869 Franz Wüllner became chief Kapellmeister. In the year in which Bülow became general musical director, Karl von Perfall was appointed intendant. Under this combination, stimulated by the personality of the composer, the Wagner operas began to acquire a world-wide reputation and to raise the Munich Opera with them. 'Tristan' had been produced in 1865; it was to be followed by 'Rheingold' (1869), 'Die Walküre' (1870) and 'Rienzi' (1871). When 'Siegfried' and the 'Götterdämmerung' were given in 1878, two years after the Bayreuth production, Hermann Levi had been Kapellmeister for six years, Wüllner had died and Rheinberger was chief Kapellmeister, assisted by Franz Fischer, who had been a cellist in the orchestra.

CONDUCTORS.—In the period that followed, new influences were at work at Munich. Thuille had begun teaching at the composition school in 1883 (he remained till 1907) and Alexander Ritter went to live at Munich. Ritter had great influence on the younger musicians, and among those who came under him was Richard Strauss, who had a post as Kapellmeister from 1886 to 1889, and again from 1894 to 1898. Stavenhagen was Kapellmeister in 1898, Felix Weingartner conducted the Kaim orchestra from 1898 to 1907 and Max Reger lived at Munich in 1901–7. In 1903 Felix Mottl arrived for his all-too-short career at Munich—he died there in 1911—and set a tradition that was felt through every German school of conducting. He was succeeded by Bruno Walter. At this period Pfitzner, after many vicissitudes, went to Munich as conductor of the Kaim orchestra, and ten years later had his triumph when the Munich Opera produced his 'Palestrina' as the climax of a Pfitzner week.

LATER OPERA.—After an interval, due to the revolution of 1918, the Hof- und Nationaltheater was reconstructed and reorganized as the Bayerisches Staatstheater, the name covering the Nationaltheater, the Residenztheater and the Prinzregententheater, the last having been built in 1901 as a Wagner memorial theatre for performances after the manner of Bayreuth. Karl Zeiss then took over the management of the whole, but died in 1923. Baron Clemens von Frankenstein, the intendant at the time of the revolution, who had then been compelled to retire, now returned, with Hans Knappertsbusch, who had succeeded Siegmund von Hausegger under Zeiss as general musical director. The Munich festivals were revived in Aug. 1924. The centenary of the opera-house was celebrated with great ceremony by a gala performance of the 'Meistersinger' on 1 Jan. 1925.

Frankenstein was succeeded by Oskar Walleck in 1934 and Knappertsbusch as Operndirektor by Clemens Krauss in 1936.

Both the Nationaltheater and the rococo Residenztheater were destroyed by bombing during the second world war. The Prinzregententheater survived practically undamaged and is now the home of the Staatsoper, whereas the Theater am Gartnerplatz, which was severely damaged during the war and has now been repaired, is used exclusively for performances of operettas. Like the Staatsoper, this house is under the management of the Bavarian State. The Residenztheater has been rebuilt as a modern theatre for performances of plays and small-scale operas. The intendant of the Munich State Opera is (1954) Georg Hartmann and its post-war musical director was Georg Solti. Regular guest conductors include Knappertsbusch, Eugen Jochum and Robert Heger.

Since 1925 the following works have had their first productions at Munich:

1925. Vollerthun, 'Island Saga'.

1927. Roehr, 'Corur Dame'; Wolf-Ferrari, 'Das Himmelskleid'.

1929. Albert Coates, 'Samuel Pepys'.

1930. Weismann, 'Gespenstersonate'; Piechler, 'Der weisse Pfau'.

1931. Weinberger, 'Die geliebte Stimme'; Malipiero, 'Komödie des Todes'; Haba, 'Die Mutter'; Pfützer, 'Das Herz'; Maurice, 'Tanzlegendchen'.
 1932. Heger, 'Bettler Namenlos'.
 1934. Giannini, 'Lucidia'.
 1938. Strauss, 'Der Friedenstag'.
 1939. Orff, 'Der Mond'.
 1942. Strauss, 'Capriccio'.
 1948. Egk, 'Abraxas' (ballet).

CONCERTS.—The orchestra of the Staatsoper (112 members) gives ten subscription concerts each season, known as Musikalische Akademie; the principal conductor is Georg Solti. The Munich Philharmonic Orchestra (formerly known as Kaimorchester and later as Münchener Konzertvereinsorchester) gives twelve subscription concerts under the direction of Fritz Rieger. Former well-known conductors of this orchestra were Siegmund von Hausegger (d. 1948) and Oswald Kabasta (d. 1945). An important factor in Munich's musical life is the newly constituted radio orchestra (Symphonie Orchester des Bayerischen Rundfunks), which under the conductorship of Eugen Jochum devotes itself largely to programmes of modern music.

Outstanding among a large number of chamber-music associations formed at Munich after the 1939-45 war is the Freund Quartet and the Vereinigung für alte Musik. The Musica Viva under the artistic direction of the composer Karl Amadeus Hartmann, which is financed by the Munich State Opera, has for its task the promotion of contemporary music. Chief among the many choral associations are the Lehrergesangverein, the Philharmonic Choir, the Bachverein and the celebrated Domchor (Berberich). Symphony concerts at Munich are now taking place in the Congress Hall of the Deutsches Museum and in the hall of the University, the two principal concert halls, the Odeon and the Tonhalle, having been destroyed by bombing.

EDUCATION.—The leading educational institution for music is the Staatliche Akademie für Tonkunst, which offers training facilities in every branch of music. It was founded in 1846 and remodelled in 1897 under Hans von Bülow. Its president between the wars was Siegmund von Hausegger, who was succeeded by Richard Trunk. The first post-war president was Joseph Haas, and its present director (1951) is Robert Heger. At the University there is a chair for musicology, which for many years past was held by Adolf Sandberger. His successor is Rudolf von Ficker.

H. G. D. & K. W. B.

- BIBL.—RUDHART, F. M., 'Geschichte der Oper am Hofe zur Munchen' (Freising, 1865).
 SANDBERGER, ADOLF, 'Beiträge zur Geschichte der Hofkapelle in Munchen unter Orlando di Lasso', 3 vols. (Munich, 1894-95).
 URSPRUNG, O., 'Munchens musikalische Vergangenheit von der Frühzeit bis zu Richard Wagner' (Cassel, 1927).

MUNICH SONG-BOOK. An important collection of German songs of the 15th century, with some instrumental dances and canons. See SONG, p. 919.

Munk, Kaj. See Andersen ('Puzzlespel', incid. m.).
 Borresen ('Cant', do.). Koppel ('Niels Ebbesen', do.). Riisager (do.).

MUÑOZ MOLLEDA, José (b. Cadiz, ? 1895).

Spanish composer. He studied composition in the Madrid Conservatory with Conrado del Campo and pianoforte with Tragó. In 1934 he was awarded the Gran Premio de Roma and was sent by the Spanish Government to Italy, Germany and France. In Rome his Quartet in F minor was awarded a prize by the Academy of Santa Cecilia. He has written two symphonic poems for full orchestra, 'De la tierra alta' and 'Scherzo macabro', and an orchestral Suite, 'Postales madrileñas'—a work full of vivacity and Goyaesque touches. His 'Introducción y fugado' for orchestra was acclaimed at its first performance in Dublin. His Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra was brilliantly played by Leopoldo Querol with the composer conducting. He has also written the music for a ballet, 'La niña de plata y oro' and an oratorio, 'La resurrección de Lázaro', which has been produced with success at Trier in Germany. In recent years he has concentrated his attention upon chamber music, in which he has achieved genuine success in such works as the Trio for flute, cello and pianoforte, and 'Divertimento a sei' for piccolo, flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horn. His finest work up to date is his Quintet in G minor for strings and pianoforte, which was played for the first time by the Quinteto Nacional in Madrid and received an ovation. It is a striking work and, though modern in form and harmony, yet echoes the Spanish traditional idiom. The first movement with its rhythmical introduction in 5-8 leads into a dramatic allegro in which the pianoforte and violin carry on an animated dialogue, punctuated by the other three instruments, who interrupt and interpose discordant views; but at the end all the instruments combine together in a presto and produce a climax ending cyclically with the introductory theme. The Adagio espressivo is a lyrical movement beautifully written for the first violin and pianoforte, who continue their dialogue but expand it into a broad cantabile uniting all the instruments. In the third movement the composer transforms the traditional scherzo into a kind of miniature rhapsody consisting of a folk dance and a copla. Instead of the usual light finale the composer rounds off his work with a dynamic trial of strength in which all the instruments take part and with consummate skill he achieves perfect balance between pianoforte and strings in the intricate fugato and at the same time preserves the cyclic unity with the earlier movements. W. S.

Muñoz San Román. See Turina (songs with orch.).

MUNRO, Alexander (b. ?; d. ?).

Scottish 18th-century musician. He settled in Paris and published there 'A Collection of the best Scots tunes fitted to the German flute', folio, licence dated 1732. This work is particularly rare — a copy was sold at the Taphouse sale in July 1905. Hawkins criticizes the arrangements of the melodies thus: "The simplicity of the airs is lost in the attempts of the author to accommodate them to the style of the Italian music". F. K.

Munro, Harold. See Ireland (J., 'Earth's Call', voice & pf.).

MUNSEL, Patrice (b. Spokane, Washington, 14 May 1925).

American soprano singer. She began to study singing at the age of twelve, first with Charlotte Lange at Spokane and later with William P. Herman in New York, where, in Mar. 1943, she was a winner in the Metropolitan Opera's auditions of the air. A three years' concert contract with S. Hurok followed in Nov. On 4 Dec. 1943, at eighteen, she made her début at the Metropolitan Opera as Philine in 'Mignon'. Critics noticed unusual but incompletely developed vocal gifts, and an impression of a remarkable, though variably employed voice continued through her first few Metropolitan seasons, in which she sang mainly in the Italian and French coloratura repertory. She made vocal progress during these years and showed a distinct flair for the stage. The success of her Adele in the Metropolitan's English production of 'Fledermaus' called attention to her talent as an interpreter of soubrette parts or others with a humorous element, which has also been shown in her Rosina (1944), Zerlina (1950) and Despina in 'Così fan tutte' (1952), and this has since been her principal though not exclusive operatic field. In 1948 she made her European début in Copenhagen. She sang in operetta at Pittsburgh in 1949 and in California in 1950, and in 1952 played the title-part in the United Artists film biography of Nellie Melba. She is also active as a concert, radio and television artist. F. D. P.

MUNTZBERGER (Müntz-Berger), Joseph¹ (b. Brussels, 1769; d. Paris, Jan. 1844).

Netherlands violoncellist and composer. He was a pupil of his father and van Maldere. Having chosen the cello as his principal instrument, he went to Paris in 1783, was cellist at the Opéra-Comique in 1790 and later at the Théâtre Favart, retiring with a pension in 1830. He composed 2 concertos, trios, sonatas, solos and studies. E. v. d. S.

¹ Called "le jeune" on some title-pages of his works.

MÜNZ, Mieczysław (b. Cracow, 31 Oct. 1900).

Polish pianist. He studied at the Musical Academy in Vienna and at the High School for Music in Berlin, where he also received some private lessons from Busoni. He made extensive tours in Europe, Asia and both Americas. After his début in the U.S.A. in 1922 he frequently appeared as soloist with the leading American orchestras (New York Symphony Orchestra, Boston, Philadelphia, etc.). For two years (1930-32) he was a member of the pianoforte department at the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia. He is permanently domiciled in the U.S.A.

G. R. H.

MUNZINGER, Karl (b. Balsthal, Canton Solothurn, 23 Sept. 1842; d. Berne, 16 Aug. 1911).

Swiss conductor and composer. From 1860 to 1863 he was a student at the Leipzig Conservatory. His first important post was that of conductor of the Solothurn Liedertafel, to which he was appointed in 1867. In 1869 he went to Berne, where he was conductor of the Liedertafel and taught singing. In 1884 he became responsible for the symphony concerts of the musical society and the choral concerts of the Caecilienverein, so that all the important musical functions of Berne were in his hands. He was also director of the Music School, where he was succeeded in 1909 by Fritz Brun.

During this time Munzinger had written a number of works, including incidental music for festivals, partsongs with and without orchestral accompaniment, partsongs for male voices, pianoforte pieces, organ music, a pianoforte Quartet and a Mass. One of his major works was the music for a pageant commemorating the 700th anniversary of the foundation of Berne. It contains a 'Zahringermarsch' which bears remarkable likenesses to the marches in Wagner's 'Tannhauser' and in Verdi's 'Aida'.

The force of Munzinger's personality is seen in the fact that he was the first Swiss citizen to raise the standard of musical life in Berne.

H. E.

MURADELY, Vano (actually Irakly) (b. Gory, Georgia, 6 Apr. 1908).

Georgian composer. He is of peasant origin. From early childhood he listened to the songs of the people, memorized them, playing them on the mandoline, the guitar or the balalaika. At the age of eleven he began to compose songs in the Georgian language and to sing them, imitating the style of folksongs. On leaving school at Gory he entered the school of music at Tbilisy to study singing. In 1926 he was admitted without an examination into the Tbilisy Conservatory, where he studied under S. Barkhidarian, V. Shcherbachev and the Georgian composer and historian D. Arakishvily. He graduated from the Conservatory in 1931 and spent the three following years at Tbilisi, where he wrote a considerable amount of theatre music. He was the leader of the Musical Section of the Young Workers' Theatre and promoted many new vocal productions. In 1934 he went to Moscow, was admitted into the second year of the Conservatory and completed his musical training in 1938, under Shekhter and Miaskovsky. For his diploma he wrote the first two movements of his Symphony dedicated to the memory of S. Kirov, finishing it in the following year. In 1939 he wrote his first cantata to Stalin, which was followed almost immediately by the second and then by 'Zdravitsa' for chorus and orchestra, dedicated to the Soviet people and the fatherland.

Throughout this period he was actively engaged in the writing of film and theatre music for the productions at the Kamerny Theatre, the Moscow Dramatic Theatre and others. During the second world war he composed the music to the films 'Retribution' and 'Hatred', over twenty patriotic songs and ballads, among them the ballad 'Father and Son' for bass and orchestra, and the popular song 'Dovator's Cossacks', dedicated to the heroic exploits of General Dovator's cavalry regiments. In the summer of 1942 the composer began working on his second Symphony, 'The War of Liberation'.

Muradely's music is deeply rooted in Georgian folklore, yet he never has recourse to direct quotations from popular song; the melodious structure of Georgian national music and its marked diatonic character are at the source of his style, but its themes are woven into his compositions, which remain original, although unmistakably Georgian in spirit.

While still a student in 1937, he was elected President of the Youth Section of the Association of Soviet Composers. In 1938 he became the secretary of the Association and in 1939 a member of its Organizing Committee and Chairman of the Musical Fund of the U.S.S.R. During the second world war he joined the Anti-Fascist Youth Committee and frequently visited the front.

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

OPERA

'The Great Friendship' (c. 1947).

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

'Honour', by Dmivan, 'The Mountains of Fatusiva', &c.

FILM MUSIC

'The Ferghana Canal', 'Retribution', 'Hatred', &c.

CHORAL WORKS

'Our Leader', cantata for solo voices, chorus & orch., written for the 60th birthday of Joseph Stalin (1939).
'Zdravitsa' for chorus & orch. (1941).

March for chorus & milit. band (1941).
Arrangements of Georgian folksongs.

Battle-songs

Father and Son.
Dovator's Cossacks.
Wait for Me.

'Orel' for solo voices, chorus & orch. (c. 1939).
Poem for solo voices, chorus & orch. (c. 1939).
Cycle of Heroic Songs (c. 1946).

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC

Georgian Symphonic Dance (1936).
Symphony No. 1 ('In Memory of Kirov') (1938).
'Solemn Overture' dedicated to Molotov (1940).
Symphony No. 2 ('The War of Liberation') (1942-47).

VOICE AND ORCHESTRA

'Song of Stalin's Youth' (1940).

S. G. R.

MURCIANA. See FOLK MUSIC: SPANISH.
MURDOCH, William (David) (b. Bendigo, Australia, 10 Feb. 1888; d. Holmbury St. Mary, Surrey, 9 Sept. 1942).

Australian pianist and writer. He studied music at Melbourne University, going to London in 1906 to enter the R.C.M. with a Clerke scholarship. On leaving this institution in 1910 Murdoch began the career of solo pianist, travelling extensively in five continents. An exceptional sense of tonal values and responsibility made him an ideal partner in chamber-music combinations. The recitals given by the Chamber Music Players, a quartet including, besides Murdoch, Albert Sammons, Lionel Tertis and Lauri Kennedy, will be remembered for their rare balance as well as for the soundness of their interpretations of classical music. From 1930 to 1936 Murdoch was professor of the pianoforte at the R.A.M. He was an A.R.C.M. as well as Hon. R.A.M.

Murdoch produced a few compositions including songs and pianoforte pieces, and he published various transcriptions from the organ works of J. S. Bach. He was also the author of 'Brahms' and 'Chopin: his Life'.

F. B.

Muret, Marc-Antoine de. See Goudimel ('Chansons spirituelles').

Murger, Henri. See Bohème (Puccini). Delibes ('Abeilles', choruses). Leoncavallo ('Bohème', opera). Massenet ('Vie de Bohème', incid. m.). Puccini ('Bohème', opera).

MURIS, Johannes de (b. ?; d. ?).

French, English or (?) Swiss philosopher, astronomer, mathematician and musical theorist. Gesner, in his 'Bibliotheca universalis' of 1545 cites a mathematical treatise by de Muris printed at Mainz in 1538, but gives no indication of his nationality. Bale, who appears to have relied on information received from the learned Oxford mathematician, physician and antiquary Robert Record, included "Joannes de Muris, quem Anglum fuisse scriptores ferunt", in the second part of the enlarged edition of his 'Scriptores illustres Majoris Britanniae' (Basel, 1559, p. 69). Neither Gesner nor Bale makes any reference to his reputation as a musician. At a later date Tanner describes him as "natione Anglus, philosophus, mathematicus et musicus insignis" ('Bibliotheca Britannico-Hibernica', 1748, p. 537), and Sir John Hawkins found confirmation of his English origin in the following verses which occur in a treatise 'De origine et effectu Musice' in the B.M. (MS Lansdowne 763, fol. 17) :

Pausas, iuncturas, fracturas, atque figuras
Mensurarum formavit Franco notarum.
Et Jhon de Muris variis floruitque figuris.
Anglia cantorum nomen gignit plurimorum.

But, in whatever way these lines are punctuated, it is difficult to see how they can be made to attribute an English origin to de Muris. No locality in England is known with an English or Latinized name at all resembling Muri or Muris.

When we look abroad, the great Benedictine abbey of Muri in Switzerland at once suggests itself; but the chronicles of this abbey, which have been published by P. M. Keim (Zürich, 1877), contain no reference to our author. In France there are several communes of the name of Murs or Meurs, and the Abbé Normand, who under the pseudonym of Théodore Nisard published a short paper on Jean de Muris in 1886, gives reasons for selecting Murs or Meurs in the canton of Sézanne, which lies about half-way between Meaux and Vitry, as the home of the de Muris family. Henri de Muris, bishop of Thérouane (d. 1826), was a benefactor of the abbey of Saint Faron at Meaux. Another Henri de Muris, chevalier, owned land at Saint-Fiacre in Brie in 1313. This is in the near neighbourhood.

On the other hand Fétis favours a Norman origin on the ground that de Muris, in a letter written late in life to Pope Clement VI, alludes to the friendship of their youth, and that Clement had in fact been a monk at the Chaise-Dieu in Normandy and afterwards Archbishop of Rouen. He cites a Padua manuscript dated 1404 and entitled

Mag. Joh. de Muris de Normandia alias Parisiensis practica mensurabilis cantus cum expositione Prosdocimi de Beldemandis, but one may suspect that the title is a later addition. In a mathematical treatise at Oxford dated 1321 (MS Digby 190, fol. 66) Johannes de Muris is again described as a Norman; but this is in a colophon which is clearly not part of the original treatise. No place of any name like Murs is known in Normandy.

Whatever doubt there may be about his birthplace, there is abundant evidence that de Muris resided for some part of his life in Paris. He himself speaks of having heard there a triplum composed by Franco (Coussemaker, 'Scriptores', II, 402a), and at least two of his treatises are dated from the Sorbonne in Paris. One is the 'Musica speculativa' printed by Gerbert ('Scriptores', Vol. III), the Paris manuscript of which ends with the words: "Explicit musica speculativa secundum Boetium per magistrum Johannem de Muris abbreviata Parisiis in Sorbona anno Domini 1323". The other is the 'Canones de eclipsi lunae', the Bodleian manuscript of which (MS Digby 97, fol. 124b) ends thus: "Hos autem canones disposuit Johannes de Muris Parisiis in anno Domini 1339 in domo scolarium de Sorbona". Léopold Delisle ('Le Cabinet des manuscrits de la Bibliothèque Nationale', 1874, II, 186) noticed that many of the Sorbonne manuscripts bear the names, and possibly the signatures, of teachers through whose hands they passed. One of them (Latin MS 16,646) is a Euclid bearing the name of J. de Muris, but this may be the Julianus de Muris who was elected Rector of the Sorbonne in Dec. 1350 (Du Boulay, 'Historia Universitatis Parisiensis', IV, 973). Mersenne ('Harmonicorum libri XII', Paris, 1648, I, xxv, 8) speaks of de Muris as "Canonicus et Decanus Ecclesiae Parisiensis"; but his name does not occur in the 'Cartulary' of Notre-Dame published in four volumes in 1850, nor in the 'Gallia Christiana', nor in 'La France pontificale'.

Beyond 1339 the existence of de Muris can be traced down to 1350 or a little later. The authors of the 'Gallia Christiana', writing in 1744 (VII, 1636), speak of "epistolae Johannis Muri famosi theologi anni 1340" as attesting Philippe de Vitry's skill in music; but the letters are not now known, unless that mentioned below should prove to be one of them, and it may be doubted whether de Muris the musician is the person referred to. The Paris MS 7443 of the Bibliothèque Nationale contains a letter of de Muris to Pope Clement VI, who succeeded to the papacy in 1342. MS Digby 176 of the Bodleian Library contains (fol. 17b) an astrological treatise by de Muris on the conjunction of Saturn and Jupiter in 1345. Another Paris manuscript of the 15th century (Fonds Latin 14,736) is catalogued as containing: (1) 'Theorica numerorum auct. Jo. de Muris'; (2) 'Ejusdem epistola metrica ad Philippum de Vitriaco, episcopum Meldensem'; (3) 'De arte mensurandi'. If this description is correct de Muris must have been living at least as late as 1350, the year in which de Vitry was appointed Bishop of Meaux. Weiss in Michaud's 'Biographie universelle' (Paris, 1821) asserts that de Muris is known to have been still alive in 1358, but he gives no authority.

The reputation of de Muris, not only as musician, but as mathematician, astronomer and astrologer, is attested by the numerous manuscripts bearing his name to be found in most of the principal libraries of Europe. Mathematical treatises by him were printed at Vienna in 1515 and at Mainz in 1538. A copy of the latter is in the B.M. The 'Musica speculativa', an abridgment of Boethius attributed to de Muris, was printed at Frankfurt in 1508 and is probably the work cited by Panzer (I, 486) as 'Joann. Muris Musica manuscripta et composita. Lipsiae, 1496, fol.'. As early as 1404 a commentary on his treatise on mensurable music was written by Prosdocimus de Beldemandis, and his authority is constantly appealed to by the theorists who followed him.

Of the musical works of de Muris by far the most important is the 'Speculum musices',¹ preserved in two manuscripts of the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris (Nos. 7207 and 7207A), the former of which is said to date from the end of the 14th century. It is a treatise in seven books, the first five of which deal with the theory and the last two with the practice of music. Owing to its great length it has never been printed in its entirety, but Coussemaker included the last two books in the second volume of his 'Scriptores', and also, in the preface to that volume, gave us the chapter-headings of the first five books.² These treat of intervals and ratios, consonances, proportions, scales, tetrachords and the like, and are professedly based on Boethius. The sixth book is devoted to the church modes, and expounds the doctrines first of Boethius, then (cap. xv) of Guido and his successors, and finally (cap. lx-cxiii) of the moderns. The seventh book deals with mensurable music, and is remarkable for the protest it contains against modern divergence from the theory and practice of Franco and his school, against innovations in notation, exaggerated sentiment in descant, the liberties taken by singers in the matter of embellishment, the excessive use of discords and the abandonment of the old organum and conductus in favour of the motet and cantilena. De Muris never refers to contemporary musicians by name, but the passages he cites from their writings show that Philippe de Vitry, the champion of the ars nova, was one of those attacked. This lends point to the sentence at the end of his first chapter, in which de Muris disclaims any personal enmity against those whose doctrines he controverts. It has been thought that the 'Speculum musices' is the treatise mentioned with three others at the end of the mathematical treatise of 1321 as having been completed in the same year, and that its publication was the immediate cause of the papal decree of 1322 prohibiting the use of descant in churches (see Ambros, II, 347). The passage in MS Digby 190 is as follows:

Eodemque anno iusticia artis musice proferende, figurande, tam mensurabilis quam plane, quantum ad omnem modum possibilem discantandi, non solum per integra sed usque ad minutissimas fractiones; Cognicioque circuli quadrature perfectissime demonstrata; Expositioque tabularum Alphonsi regis Castelle; ac Geneologia Astronomie nobis claruit.

This is not a very apt description of the 'Speculum musices', nor is the expression "nobis claruit" such as one would expect an author to use of his own work. On the other hand, it is unlikely that de Muris would have troubled to note down such a list of works unless they were his own, and no other musical treatise of his is known to which the description would at all apply. A further difficulty is caused by the fact that in the 'Speculum' de Muris speaks of himself as old and feeble, which is hardly consistent with his having lived another thirty years, and it may be doubted whether the ars nova could have won by 1321 such general acceptance as is indicated by the language of the seventh book of the 'Speculum'.

Several minor treatises attributed to de Muris have been printed by Gerbert and Coussemaker. Some of them do not profess to be more than epitomes of his teaching; such are the 'Summa Magistri Johannis de Muris' (Gerbert, III, 190) and the 'Ars contrapuncti secundum Johannem de Muris' (Coussemaker, III, 59). Others contain details of notation which did not come into use till long after his death, and doctrines which are entirely at variance with those of the 'Speculum'. Such are the 'Libellus practice cantus mensurabilis' (Coussemaker, III, 46), which authorizes the use of white or open-headed notes in proportio sesquialtera, and the 'Ars discantus', which is not only inconsistent with the 'Speculum' in many respects, but actually cites de Muris as an authority (Coussemaker, III, 68, 108). Others again contain passages which are quoted verbatim and confuted in the 'Speculum'. Such are the 'Musica speculativa' and the 'Quaestiones super partes musicae' (Gerbert, III, 256, 301).³

The treatises with the next-best claim to authenticity are the 'Summa musices', the 'Libellus' and the 'Musica speculativa'. The 'Summa musices' is not inconsistent with the 'Speculum', and the difference of style may be accounted for by supposing it to be an early work written for the use of students. The 'Libellus' is accepted and quoted as the work of de Muris by Prosdocimus de Beldemandis and all the early theorists. The anachronism above referred to may perhaps be explained as a later addition intended to bring the book up to date. On the other hand, in all the manuscripts it is entitled 'Libellus secundum [not per] J. de Muris', and the mention by name of the contemporary Gulielmus de Mascandio (Guillaume de Machaut) is not in accordance with the practice of the 'Speculum'. The 'Musica speculativa' follows immediately after the 'Speculum' in the Paris MS 7207, and was printed as the work of de Muris in 1508, but Dr. Hirschfeld's demonstration of the attack made upon it in the 'Speculum' seems fatal to its authenticity.

¹ Its authenticity is here accepted for the purpose of its discussion under an acceptable heading; for its modern attribution see Jacques de Liège and Musicology.

² The text of liber I, cap. i-xix, is printed in the pamphlet 'Die einleitenden Kapitel des Speculum Musicae von Johannes de Muris', by Walter Grossmann (Leipzig, 1924). The pamphlet includes an analysis of the text of this portion of the 'Speculum', together with an attempt to answer the questions raised as to the identity of the author.

³ See Robert Hirschfeld's 'Johann de Muris' (Leipzig, 1884), pp. 11-26.

Extravagant claims were formerly made for de Muris as a pioneer and inventor. Nicola Vicentino first made the astonishing statement that musical notes, the long, breve, etc., were the invention of de Muris ('L'antica musica', Rome, 1555, p. 9). Before the publications of Gerbert and Coussemaker this was repeated in many books of reference (as, for instance, in Grassineau's 'Musical Dictionary' of 1740), though Mersenne and after him Rousseau ('Dictionnaire de musique', 1767), both of whom were at pains to consult the Paris manuscripts, had no difficulty in refuting it. If we ask what was the contribution of de Muris to the progress of the art of music, the answer must be that his was purely a restraining influence. Neither on the theoretical nor on the practical side of the art did he take any step forward. It is to his personality as a teacher, his vast erudition and his lucidity in definition and exposition that his reputation as a musician must be attributed.

J. F. R. S.

BIBL.—GROSSMANN, W., 'Die einleitenden Kapitel des Speculum Musicae von Johannes de Muris' (Leipzig, 1924).

MÜRISTUS, MÍRISTUS or MÚRTUS

(b. ?; d. ?).

(?) Greek author of a work on the pneumatic organ and hydraulis found only in Arabic. He appears in Arabic works as early as Al-Jáhiz (c. 767–864), who uses the name or names in two instances. (a) In speaking of Greek music theorists he says: "From Pythagoras to Euclid and Míristus"; (b) regarding Greek mechanicians he exclaims: "From Archimedes to Múristus".¹ Thus Múristus or Míristus would appear to be of Greek origin. In the 'Fihrist' of Ibn al-Nadím (c. 988) this Múristus is credited with two books on organ construction: (1) 'Kitáb fi'l-álát al-musawwitat al-musammát bi'l-urghanun al-búqí wá'l-urghanun al-zamrí' ('Book about the Resounding Instruments called the Flue-pipe Organ and the Reed-pipe Organ'); (2) 'Kitáb ála musawwita tusma'u 'alá sittín mílan' ('Book of the Resounding Instrument which may be heard Sixty Miles'). Ibn al-Qiftí (1172–1248) refers to the first of these instruments as a flue-pipe instrument only, and the second as a reed-pipe instrument ('Ta'ríkh al-hukamá' [Leipzig, 1903], p. 322). Both these works have survived; copies are to be found in the British Museum (Or. 9649), Constantinople (St. Sophia, No. 2755) and Beyrout (Univ. of St. Joseph, No. 224: Three Moons College, No. 364). The Arabic texts have been printed in the Beyrout journal 'Al-Mashriq', IX (1906), under the editorship of Cheikho, but a fresh text is badly needed, although Farmer (see Bibliography) has clarified many points. Carra de Vaux made a part translation of one text into French, and Wiedemann and Hauser gave versions in German of both texts, while Farmer, with three manuscripts before him, gave an integral translation into English, with an apparatus criticus.

To determine who Múristus or/and Míristus were, is a task for a Sisyphus. Farmer has urged that the name is a scribal error for Ctesibius, and the orthographical morphology of the word in the transition, as argued, is interesting. The proposition is certainly backed up by the statement in the pseudo-Aristotelian Arabic treatise, the 'Kitáb al-siyása', translated from the Greek, by way of Syriac, by Yúhanna ibn al-Bitríq (fl. 815), where the inventor of the hydraulis is called in the various manuscripts Yáyastayús, Thástiyús, Thásitús and Tásitús, all of which may be variants of Qatásibiyús, as Ctesibius would have been imagined in Arabic. On the other hand, the late Professor Margoliouth suggested that the name might be Ameristos (c. 630–550 B.C.), of whom we know through Proclus on Euclid (I, 65), and we certainly have Mamertinos, Mamerkus, Mamertios (Marmetios) in Suidas (Lex., s.v. Stesichoros). Carra de Vaux opines that the above Arabic works have been wrongly ascribed to Múristus as author, since the latter is more likely to have been the dedicatee, and that the mistake has arisen by misreading the Arabic particle li to be genitive instead of dative. Therefore it is argued that the title-page should be understood as "to Múristus" instead of "by Múristus". Carra de Vaux also shows this likely error in the Arabic version of Philo's 'Pneumatics' ('Kitáb fi'l-hiyal al-ruháníya'), where a certain Ristún or Aristún is the dedicatee, but is called Marzotom in the Latin version. In the Arabic translation of the treatise on the clepsydra by Archimedes this same dedicatee is also mentioned, and this has led Carra de Vaux to consider that Múristus, Ristún, Aristún, etc., are all scribal malformations of Philo's friend Ariston or Aristos.

¹ 'Majmú'at rasá'il' (Cairo, 1906), p. 133.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- CARRA DE VAUX, 'L'Invention de l'hydraulis' ('Revue des études grecques', XXI, Paris, 1908, pp. 333-40).
 'Notes d'histoire des sciences' ('Journal Asiatique', Nov.-Dec. 1917, p. 449).
 'Philon de Byzance' ('Notices et extraits des manuscrits de la Bibl. Nat.', XXXVIII, Paris, 1903, pp. 29, 38).
 DEREMBOURG, H., 'Notes sur la musique orientale' ('La Revue musicale', VI, p. 192).
 FARMER, H. G., 'Mûristus' and 'Urghan' ('Encyclopaedia of Islam', Leyden, 1913 38, Suppl. vol. pp. 156-57, 256-57).
 'Studies in Oriental Musical Instruments', Series I (London, 1931), pp. 27-30.
 'The Organ of the Ancients: from Eastern Sources' (London, 1931).
 'The Sources of Arabian Music' (Bearsden, 1940).
 STEELE, R., 'Roger Bacon's "Secretum Secretorum"' (Oxford, 1920), p. 248 et seq.
 WIEDEMANN, E. & HAUSER, F., 'Byzantinische und arabische akustische Instrumente' ('Archiv für die Geschichte der Naturwissenschaften und der Technik', VIII, Erlangen, 1918, pp. 139-63).
See also Ctesibius. Hydraulis. Organ.

MURKY BASS. An English term dating from the 18th century, applied for obscure reasons to accompaniments in broken octaves played on keyboard instruments.

Murphy, Arthur. See Arne (1, 'Love Finds the Way', 'Desert Island', 'Way to keep him', 'Alzuma', incid. m.).

Murray, (George) Gilbert (Aimé). See Anson ('Alkestis'), Bantock ('Hippolytus'), Boughton ('Alkestis'), Drysdale ('Hippolytus'), Holst (choruses from Euripides), Vaughan Williams (partsong, do.), Walker (E., choral work [Euripides].)

MURRILL, Herbert (Henry John) (b. London, 11 May 1909; d. London, 25 July 1952).

English composer. While at Aske's School, Hatcham (1920-25), he won the Musicians' Company's Carnegie Scholarship to the G.S.M. in London, but resigned it in order to go to the R.A.M. (1925-28), where he studied under York Bowen, Stanley Marchant and Alan Bush. Proceeding to Worcester College, Oxford (1928-31), where he was Organ Scholar, he studied under W. H. Harris, Ernest Walker and Sir Hugh Allen, and took the M.A. and B.Mus. degrees. While he was at the University he became president of the University Musical Club. During this period his short opera 'Man in Cage' ran for nine weeks at the Grafton Theatre (1930) in London. From 1931 to 1936, when he joined the B.B.C., he held various appointments as school music master, organist and choirmaster, and was for one season (1935-36) director of music at the Westminster Theatre. In 1933 he was appointed a professor of composition at the R.A.M., a post he held till his death. At the B.B.C. he became Music Programme Organizer in 1942, but in the same year he joined the Intelligence Corps on war service, returning to the B.B.C. in 1946. He became Assistant Head of Music in 1948 and Head in 1950, in succession to Sir Stuart Wilson.

As a composer Murrill was perhaps prevented by his other activities from the full development of an exceptional talent. His affinities lay mainly with the French school and with Stravinsky, whose ideals as a composer he completely endorsed. In spite of a precocious acquirement of a brilliant technique and harmonic mastery, he found time for few attempts to apply his skill to the larger forms of composition. Probably his most successful and distinctive work is the string Quartet (1939), in which his belief that music should be written for music's sake, not solely as a vehicle for emotional expression, and should be only incidentally, not primarily an expression of the composer's personality, finds perfect realization. The same quality distinguishes all his smaller works, which like the Quartet are classical in spirit and neo-classical in idiom, his harmonic usage varying in boldness, but being generally sparing in dissonance. Two of the most beautiful examples are the 'Suite française' for harpsichord or pianoforte and the Sonata for recorder (or flute) and harpsichord (or pianoforte), in both of which the 18th and 20th centuries are reconciled with complete success and originality.

Murrill's most important orchestral works are both concertos for cello and orchestra - he was married to the cellist Vera Canning. The earlier one, written in the neo-classical style, with small orchestra, he came to regard as immature. The second, which dates from 1950, appears to be the outcome of a quite different kind of inspiration from that of Murrill's other works. It is much less formal, being in one rather rhapsodic movement, based on a Catalan folksong, 'El cant dels ocells', said to hold particular significance for Casals, to whom the Concerto is dedicated. Its formal argument, however, seems in some way less than complete and not entirely convincing.

Murrill's works include the following:

OPERA

- 'Man in Cage' (libretto by Geoffrey Dunn) (1929).

BALLET

- 'Picnic' (1927).

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

- 'The Dance of Death' (W. H. Auden).
 'The Dog Beneath the Skin' (Auden and Christopher Isherwood).
 'No more peace' (Ernst Toller).
 'Fulgens and Lucrece' (Henry Medwall).
 'Music at Night' (J. B. Priestley).
 'Richard III' (Shakespeare).

FILM MUSIC

- 'And so to Work.'
 'The Daily Round.'

CHURCH MUSIC

Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (1945) S.A.T.B. & organ.

CHORAL WORKS

- 'Love not me for comely grace', part-song (1932).
 'Brother Petruc's Carol', part-song (1940).
 Two songs from Shakespeare's 'Twelfth Night' for unaccomp. chorus (1941).
 'In Youth is Pleasure' for chorus and pf. (1943).
 'The Souls of the Righteous' (1947) for unaccomp. chorus.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

- 'Three Hornpipes' (1932).
'Set of Country Dances' for stgs. (1945).

'SOLO INSTRUMENTS AND ORCHESTRA

- Cello Concerto No. 1 (1935).
Cello Concerto No. 2, 'El cant dels ocells' (1950).

CHAMBER MUSIC

- String Quartet (1939).

ONE INSTRUMENT AND PIANOFORTE

- 'Capriccio' (Alla Marcia, Aria, Toccata) for cello (1932).
'Prelude, Cadenza and Fugue' for clar. (1932).
Three Pieces for cello (1938).
Four French Nursery Songs for cello (or viola) (1941).
Sonata for recorder (or flute) and harpsichord (or pf.) (1950).

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

- Sonatina (1930).
4 Studies (1931).
2 Impromptus (1933).
Play for Pleasure (Children's Pieces) (1935).
'Suite française' (harpsichord or pf.) (1938).
'Toccata' (1939).
'Canzona' (1939).
'Presto alla giga' (1939).
Dance on Portuguese Folksongs (1940).
Caprice on Norfolk Folk Tunes (1940).

ORGAN

- 'Carillon' (1949).
'Postlude on a Ground' (1949).
Fantasy on 'Warcham' (1950).

SONGS

- Self-portrait (four poems by Geoffrey Dunn) (1928).
3 Carols for voice & oboe (1928).
2 Songs (Herrick) (1938).

ARRANGEMENTS AND EDITIONS

Various works by Walton and others arr. for pf. duet and 2 pfs. and editions of works by Arne, Boyce, Handel, Purcell, etc.

C. M. (iii).

See also National Anthems (India). Somerset (collab. in parodies for pf.).

MURSCHHAUSER, Franz Xaver Anton

(b. Zabern, [bapt. 1 July] 1663; d. Munich, 6 Jan. 1738).

German theorist and composer. He went early to Munich and became a pupil of Johann Caspar Kerl, with whom he remained till the latter's death in 1693. From the title-page of his book 'Vespertinus latriae, et hyperduliae cultus' (Ulm, 1700; for four voices, two principal and four ripieno violins), we learn that he was then Kapellmeister to Our Lady's Church at Munich. Besides the work already mentioned he left: 'Octitonium novum organum' (Augsburg, 1696); 'Protypon longobreve organicum' (Nuremberg, 1700) — preludes and fugues for organ, lately re-edited by Franz Commer. A second part appeared later: 'Fundamentalische . . . Handleitung gewohl zur Figural- als Choral-Musik' (1707); 'Opus organicum tripartitum' (1712, 1714). His most important and best-known theoretical work is the 'Academia musico-poetica bipartita, oder hohe Schule der musikalischen Composition' (Nuremberg, 1721). Towards the close of the first part he incautiously used the words "to give a little more light to the excellent Herr Mattheson", for which he was so severely taken to task by that irascible musician in a pamphlet 'Melo-poetische Lichtscheere in drei verschiedenen Schneutzungen' ('Critica musica', pp. 1-88), that he relinquished the publication of the 'Academia'. An 'Aria pastoralis variata' of his is given in Pauer's 'Alte Klaviermusik'; his organ works have been reprinted in D.D.T. (2nd series), XVIII.

F. G.

MURSKA, Ilma de (b. Agram [Zagreb], 1836; d. Munich, 14 Jan. 1889).

Croatian soprano singer. She was taught in Vienna and Paris by Mathilde Marchesi. In Apr. 1862 she made her début in opera at the Teatro della Pergola, Florence, and later she sang at Pest, Berlin, Hamburg, Barcelona, etc. In Vienna she obtained an engagement as a bravura singer for parts such as Constanze ('Entführung'), Martha, Inez ('L'Africaine'), etc. She appeared in London, at Her Majesty's Theatre, as Lucia, on 11 May 1865, playing also Linda, Amina and the Queen of Night, and sang at the Philharmonic (29 May). Between this date and 1873 she acted and sang repeatedly in London, at Her Majesty's, Covent Garden and Drury Lane, returning to the Continent in the off seasons. One of her most congenial parts and best achievements was Senta in the Italian version of Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman', 23 July 1870. Between 1873 and 1876 she visited America, Australia, New Zealand, etc., returning to England in 1879. On 29 Dec. 1875, she married for the second time (her first marriage having taken place many years before), Alfred Anderson at Sydney; and, after his death, she took for her third husband J. T. Hill, at Otago, New Zealand, 15 May 1876. Her voice was a soprano of nearly three octaves in compass, with great execution. Her acting was brilliant and original, though sometimes bordering on extravagance. After spending some time from 1879 onwards in London, she went to New York as a teacher of singing, but, finding this work uncongenial, returned to Munich, to live with a married daughter. Interesting and amusing particulars of Murska's career may be read in 'Marchesi and Music', Santley's 'Student and Singer' and 'The Mapleson Memoirs'.

A. C.

MUS.B.

MUS.D.

} See DEGREES.

Musaeus, Johann Karl August. See Hiller (J. A., Prologue for Weimar Theatre). Lortzing ('Rolands Knappen', opera).

MUSARD, Philippe (b. Tours, 1793; d. Auteuil, 30 Mar. 1859).

French violinist, conductor and composer. He took private lessons for some years from Reicha, to whom he dedicated his 'Nouvelle Méthode de composition musicale' (1832).

This long-forgotten work, of which only eight chapters appeared, contains the announcement of a 'Traité complet et raisonné du système musical', with curious historical notes, implying that Musard was dissatisfied with his position as an obscure violinist and conductor, and proposed to make his mark as a solid and erudite musician. A series of concerts and bals masqués, held in the bazaar in the rue Saint-Honoré (afterwards the Salle Valentino), however, gave him the opportunity of distinguishing himself in a different direction. The most salient feature of these promenade concerts (instituted Nov. 1833) was the introduction of the cornet-à-pistons. In fact Dufresne, the cornet player, owed much of his success to the solos composed for him by the conductor. In 1835 and 1836 Musard conducted the balls at the Opéra, and his band of seventy musicians was rapturously applauded. Auber's opera 'Gustave III' had set the fashion of the galop, and with Musard's music, and the entrain of the orchestra, the new dance deserved its nickname of le galop infernal. Meantime a better room had been built in the rue Vivienne, and thither Musard removed in 1837. There he had to sustain a competition with Johann Strauss of Vienna. His first experiment, the introduction of a chorus, having succeeded, he next attempted classical music and in Holy Week gave a concert consisting of Handel's music only.

Having secured a reputation in France, Musard went to England and made his first London appearance at Drury Lane Theatre on Monday 12 Oct. 1840, as conductor of the Promenade Concerts, or Concerts d'hiver, given there under the management of Eliason. The series terminated in Mar. 1841, and on 30 Sept. Musard appeared again as conductor of a set of Promenade Concerts at the Lyceum Theatre, under the management of Henri Laurent, which continued up to Christmas. He was long remembered in London, and his appearance is well described by Hood:

From bottom to top
There's no bit of the Fop,
No trace of your Macaroni;
But looking on him,
So solemn and grim,

You think of the Marshals who served under Boney.

Up to 1852 Musard was considered the best composer of dance music and conductor of promenade concerts in France. His quadrilles — 'Venise', 'Les Échos', etc. — contain many happy and at that time novel effects, and his music is well written and well scored. Having made money, he bought a house at Auteuil, where he lived, much respected. Symptoms of paralysis appeared in 1852 and he died in 1859.

Musard's son Alfred (b. Paris, 1828; d. Apr. 1881) followed his father's profession.

As early as 1847 he conducted the orchestra at a ball given at the Opéra-Comique, and in 1856 Besselièvre selected him to conduct the Concerts des Champs-Élysées; but he did not retain the post and never rose above mediocrity. G. C.

MUSCADIN. An old dance similar to the hornpipe occurring in English music for the virginals.

MUSET, Colin (b. ? , d. ?).

French 12th-century trouvère and juggler. The poems of fifteen and the tunes of eight of his songs are extant.

See also Jongleur.

MUSETTE (1) (Fr.). An intricate and aristocratic design of bagpipe which achieved enormous popularity in France in the 17th and early 18th centuries and owned a considerable literature (see BAGPIPE, also PLATE 2, Vol. I, No. 5). A full description of the musette, with excellent instructions for playing it, is to be found in Borjon's 'Traité de la musette' (Lyons, 1672). Early in the 19th century the name was applied by woodwind makers (e.g. Triébert of Paris) to a degenerate form of the above musette's chanter, marketed by itself (i.e. without bag) as a toy or begging-instrument. During the same century it lost the wooden cap which had enclosed the reed (see SHAWM, (4)) to become that small toy oboe, sometimes fitted with four or five keys, which is still offered for sale in some music shops. G. C., rev. A. B.

See also Bagpipe (France). Organ Stops.

MUSETTE (2) (Fr.). An air in 2-4, 3-4 or 6-8 time, of a moderate tempo and smooth and simple character, appropriate to the instrument from which it takes its name. Thus a musette generally has a pedal-bass answering to the drone or bourdon, and the upper part abounds in grace-notes and rapid passages. To these airs were arranged pastoral dances, also called musettes, which were in great favour under Louis XIV and Louis XV, especially the latter, as may be seen by the pictures of Watteau and others of that school.

Among the most celebrated musettes may be mentioned those in 'Callirhoé' and 'Nina', operas by Destouches and Dalayrac. Musettes are to be found in Bach's English Suites, Nos. 3 and 6, in the sixth of Handel's grand concertos and his overture to 'Alcina'.

G. C.

MUSHÁQA, Mikhá'il ibn Jurjís al-Lubnání (b. Rokhmayá, Lebanon, 1800; d. Damascus, 1888).

Arabian musical theorist and writer. He was the most important modern Arabic writer on the theory of music. He spent his youth at Dair al-Qamar, but in 1819 was in Egypt, finally settling at Damascus in 1820. There he lived professionally as a physician but privately as a man of letters for the rest of his days, save for his student years at the Qasr al-'Ain School of Medicine, Cairo, in 1845-46. Being deeply interested in the physical sciences, he began to take an interest in the theory of music as early as 1830, and took lessons from the best masters, including the shaikh Muhammad al-'Attār, "a master of several sciences and much learning". The shaikh had written a book on the theory of music which did not satisfy Mushāqa, with the result that he himself published his 'Shihabian Treatise on the Art of Music' ('Risālat al-shihābiyya fi'l-ṣinā'at al-mūsīqiyya'), the name being due to the Amir Muḥammad Fāris Shihāb. We do not know the precise date of its composition, but the oldest manuscript is dated 1840. In this work Mushāqa was the first to codify and explain the modern quarter-tone system of the Arabs. Although it circulated only in manuscript until 1899, when Ronzevalle edited the text in the journal 'Al-Machriq', and in a separate issue of 1900, it had already been translated into English by Eli Smith in the 'Journal of the American Oriental Society' (1847). In 1913, when other and more correct manuscripts became available, a new Arabic text was published in the 'Mélanges de la Faculté Orientale' (VI) together with a translation into French by Ronzevalle.

H. G. F.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- COLLANGETTES, M. ('Journal Asiatique', 1904, pp. 380, 387, 411).
 'Encyclopaedia of Islam', Suppl. 159-60 (Leyden-London, 1913-38).
 HELMHOLTZ, HERMANN, 'Sensations of Tone', pp. 264, 285, 525 (London, 1895).
 'Journal of the American Oriental Society', 1847, p. 174 et seq.
 LAND, JAN P. N., 'Recherches sur l'histoire de la gamme arabe' ('Actes du VIème Congrès International des Orientalistes', pp. 75-78, Leyden, 1883).
 RONZÉVALLE, L., 'Mélanges de la Faculté Orientale', VI, 1-9 (Beyrut, 1913).

MUSIC PRINTING. See PRINTING.

MUSIC SCHOOL, THE, Oxford. This is situated on the south side of the Schools quadrangle, under the Bodleian Library. The building was rebuilt in its present form at the beginning of the 17th century, but the interior of the Music School was altered in 1780 by the architect Wyatt under the direction of the then Professor of Music, Dr. Philip Hayes. The expenses of these alterations were defrayed by a grant of £50 from the University and by the proceeds of three choral concerts given at the following Commemoration, at one of which Hayes's oratorio 'Prophecy' was performed. The Music School was formerly used for the performance of the exercises for the degree of B.Mus. and D.Mus. The collection of music¹ which belongs to the Music School is no longer preserved there, having been removed to the Bodleian; and the famous collection of portraits², of which a list is appended, was moved in 1887 to the New Schools. They were shown at the Music and Inventions Exhibition of 1885, where Salomon's portrait was identified.

C. F. Abel.
 Dr. J. Bull.
 Dr. Burney.
 Thomas Blagrave.
 Colonel Blaithwait.
 Dr. Boyce.
 Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham.
 Dr. Child.
 Dr. Croft.
 Corelli.
 J. P. Eiffert.
 Bernard Gates.
 Christopher Gibbons.
 Orlando Gibbons.
 W. Gregory.
 Handel.
 Dr. Heather (Heyther).

Sir John Hawkins.
 James Hasletine.
 Dr. W. Hayes.
 Dr. P. Hayes.
 John Hingeston.
 R. Hudson.
 J. Hilton.
 Nicholas Lanier.
 Henry Lawes.
 William Lawes.
 Orlande de Lassus.
 Matthew Locke.
 Dr. Pepusch.
 Salomon.
 Bernard Smith.
 Christopher Simpson.
 Dr. Thomas Tudway.
 Dr. Wilson.

Anthony à Wood states that the Music School also possessed busts of King Alfred, Dr. W. Hayes and H. Purcell, as well as portraits of W. Hine, Dr. Parsons and John Weldon.

W. B. S.

MUSIC SOCIETY, THE. See MANGEOT, ANDRÉ.

MUSICA ANTIQUA (1). A collection of music compiled and edited by John Stafford Smith and published in 1812 in two vols. folio, with a preface and translations of the Provençal songs inserted in the work by John Sidney Hawkins, and some notes by the editor. Its nature and objects will be best described by quoting the very ample title:

Musica Antiqua. A Selection of Music of this and other countries from the commencement of the twelfth to the beginning of the eighteenth century, comprising some of the earliest & most curious Motets, Madrigals, Hymns, Anthems, Songs, Lessons & Dance Tunes, some of them now first published from manuscripts and printed works of great rarity & value. The whole calculated to shew the original sources of the melody & harmony of this country, & to exhibit the different styles and degrees of improvement of the several periods.

The work contains 190 separate pieces. The selections are made with great skill and judgment, but are very ill digested, for instead of being arranged in strict chronological order, they are intermingled in a very confused manner. The composers from whose works the specimens are selected are:

John Ambrose, Hugh Aston, Thibaut de Blason, John Blow, Gaces Brulez, William Byrd, Thomas Campian, Peter Certon, William Child, Clemens non Papa, John Cole, Raoul de Coucy, Perrin Dangecourt, John Dowland, John Earsden, Jehan Erars, Thomas Erars, Francesco Geminiani, Jhan Gero, Orlando Gibbons, Heath, Henry VIII, Pelham Humfrey, Simon Iye, John Jenkins, Robert Johnson, Robert Jones, Nicholas Lanier, Orlande de Lassus, Jehan de Latre, William Lawes, Matthew Locke, George Mason, Tiburtio Massaino, Cristóbal Morales, Thibaut King of Navarre, Jacob Obrecht, Johannes Okeghem, Parkes, monk of Stratford, Francis Pilkington, Jodocus Pratensis, Daniel Purcell, Henry Purcell, Richafort, Nicholas Stagginis, Thomas Tallis, Thierres, Orazio Vecchi, Thomas Weelkes, Giaches de Wert, Adriaan Willaert and Gioseffo Zarlino, besides others whose names are unknown.

¹ See B.M., Add. MSS. 23,071, folio 65, for a list of them in 1733-34. See also Mus. Ant., iv. 143.

² See LIBRARIES.

The principal pieces include four ancient chants for the 'Te Deum' as given by Meibomius, Diruta, Lucas Lossius and Marbeck; the rota 'Sumer is icumen in'; chansons by troubadours of Navarre and Normandy; part of Robert Johnson's music for Middleton's 'Witch'; two or three masques of the time of James I, copious extracts from 'Musick's Handmaid', two parts, 1678 and 1689, etc., etc.

W. H. H.

MUSICA ANTIQUA (2). Dutch team for the promotion of old music. It was formed in Amsterdam in 1935. The object of the organization is the performance, in the most favourable circumstances, of the music of the 17th and 18th centuries of all countries. Its members, Nicholas Roth (violin), Johan Feltkamp (flute), Carel van Leeuwen Boonkemp (viola da gamba) and Hans Brandts Buys (harpsichord) are all internationally known players on their respective instruments. There is no leader, in the string-quartet sense. Programmes and interpretations are discussed among the members, and as far as possible the original manuscripts, some of which have remained unknown for a couple of centuries until revived by Musica Antiqua, are followed as closely as possible. Although most of its concerts are given in, and broadcast from, the studios of the Dutch broadcasting organization, A.V.R.O., the quartet has travelled considerably and won great success in England and Scandinavia. Fifty per cent. at least of the repertory of Musica Antiqua consists of unpublished works. Of the members Nicholas Roth is British and the others are Dutch by nationality.

H. A.

See also A.V.R.O.

MUSICA BRITANNICA. A national collection of British music, begun in 1951 and dedicated by gracious permission to the reigning monarch. It is published by the Royal Musical Association with the support of the Arts Council of Great Britain; the printing and distribution is in the hands of Messrs. Stainer & Bell, Ltd., of London. Professor Anthony Lewis is the General Editor and Thurston Dart the Secretary. The Editorial Committee further consists of Professor Edward J. Dent, Professor J. A. Westrup, Frank Howes and Professor Gerald Abraham.¹ As President of the Association Frank Howes takes the chair at the meetings of its Council, which takes an active part in the deliberations concerning the general policy of editing and publication. A Management Committee drawn from the Editorial Committee and supplemented by Cedric Glover (Hon. Treasurer) and C. Vere Pilkington (Member of Council) looks after the detailed administration.

The aims of the edition are outlined in the prospectus as follows:

¹ Elected on the death of Dr. E. H. Fellowes, C. A.

This edition is planned to supplement existing collections such as 'Tudor Church Music', 'The English Madrigal School' and the publications of the Purcell Society. It will cover the many extensive fields of English music so far untouched, and also present in systematic fashion important material hitherto only dealt with piecemeal. The aim of its comprehensive programme is to represent in authoritative form the development of music in Great Britain from the Middle Ages to the early nineteenth century. . . .

The editorial methods used in 'Musica Britannica' aim to serve both scholar and performer. The best composite reading of the original text drawn from all available sources will be provided for the scholar, while at the same time the performer will be given sufficient editorial guidance to enable each volume to be used for present-day performance in the home or concert-room. Facsimiles, explanatory notes, comparative readings and full details of all sources will be given. A prefatory essay will outline the historical context and general background of the music; where exceptional features demand more lengthy analysis, a substantial commentary will form an appendix to the volume concerned.

The first three volumes were ready in time for the 1951 Festival of Britain:

1. 'The Mulliner Book', ed. by Denis Stevens.
2. 'Cupid and Death', by Matthew Locke and Christopher Gibbons, ed. by Edward J. Dent.
3. 'Comus', by Thomas Augustine Arne, ed. by Julian Herbage.

After these came the following two (1952):

4. 'Medieval Carols', ed. by John Stevens.
5. 'The Keyboard Music of Thomas Tomkins', ed. by Stephen D. Tuttle.

Future plans were thus laid down by the prospectus:

Succeeding volumes so far planned will complete the publication of the entire English virginal school and will include the complete lute music and four-part Airs of John Dowland, in Nomines and other sixteenth-century music for string ensemble, Restoration masques and operas, eighteenth-century ballad operas, music of the early Tudor court, the complete church music of Christopher Tye, the Coronation anthems of John Blow, early seventeenth-century string fancies, the chamber music of Matthew Locke and the piano concertos of John Field.

By 1953 the following two volumes were ready:

6. John Dowland, Ayres for Four Voices, transcribed by Edmund H. Fellowes, ed. by Thurston Dart and Nigel Fortune.
7. John Blow, Coronation Anthems and Anthems with Strings, ed. by Anthony Lewis and Harold Watkins Shaw.

The series is published in a* edition of 1000 copies of each volume, and the prices vary between two and three guineas per volume.

E. B.

MUSICA COLORATA. See MUSICA FICTA.

MUSICA DIVINA (1). A collection of 42 madrigals by various composers published by Phalèse at Antwerp in 1583.

MUSICA DIVINA (2). An important collection of church music, edited by Carolus Proske, priest and Kapellmeister of the cathedral at Ratisbon, and published there by Pustet. The materials were collected by Proske himself from the libraries of the papal chapel,

St. Peter's, St. John Lateran, Santa Maria Maggiore, Santa Maria in Vallicella, the Vatican, the Roman College and other libraries in Rome, and also from the best collections at Naples. The prospectus was issued in Jan. 1853, and the first volume, 'Liber missarum', was published in the same year. The second volume, 'Liber motetorum', followed in 1854; the third, 'Liber vesperarum' (Psalms, etc.), in 1859; the fourth, 'Liber vespertinus' (Passions, Lamentations, etc.), at Easter 1862. All these contained compositions for four voices and belong to the "first year". The publication was continued by a 'Selectus novus missarum' in two vols. (1857-61), after which Proske died, 20 Dec. 1861. An "Annus secundus", four volumes having the same general arrangement as the "Annus primus", was issued subsequently under the editorship of Schremo and Haberl.

G.

MUSICA FALSA. See below.

MUSICA FICTA (Musica falsa, musica colorata, cantus fictus). Early music presents many insoluble problems to those who set out to reconstruct and interpret it. In few of the problems, however, is it so hazardous to attempt any definite codex of law and practice as in that of musica ficta—i.e. the insertion of accidentals into a text. That composers, from the earliest times, intended such occasional modifications to be made by the performers is beyond any possible doubt: indeed the ancient name for an accidental (signum asininum or "ass's mark") is clear evidence that its insertion by a composer was a reflection on the competence of the singer. But there is little or no agreement among the old theorists as to the laws of interpretation; which seems to imply either that there was no unanimity in practice or that the theorists themselves suffered from the malady endemic to their tribe. For it is characteristic of all theorists to epitomize and codify the very usages which the creative minds of their contemporaries have decisively abandoned. Nor is there, at the present day, any solid agreement among the most thoughtful students of ancient music—no two of whom would, in all probability, produce an identical "fair copy" of any given manuscript from the earliest times down to Orlando Gibbons. The most reasonable course, therefore, is to attempt to state impartially the conditions of the problem and the difficulties inherent in its solution.

"Music is called ficta when we make a tone to be a semitone, or, conversely, a semitone to be a tone."¹ And the problem for the student consists in this: since the composer did not (or seldom did) tell the performer, by means of accidentals, when these changes were to be made, how could the performer know?

¹ 'Ars Contrapuncti', early 14th century.

The most usual cases in which accidentals were assumed to be too obvious for insertion were the following:

Notes to be raised a semitone:

- (a) The seventh note of the scale, if rising to the tonic, in order to create a major sixth with the supertonic below:

but

- (b) To avoid a diminished fifth, if rising subsequently:

- (c) To avoid the tritone:

- (d) To avoid the minor third in a full close:

Notes to be lowered a semitone:

- (a) To avoid the tritone:

- (b) To avoid the chord of the diminished fifth (quinta falsa).

It is beyond doubt that the singers, in any early period, were capable of a performance comparatively free from error, and it is customary nowadays to marvel at their skill, with an accompanying gibe at the deterioration of their descendants. But such easy wit ignores the fact which lies at the root of the matter: the immense strain on the resources of notation which accompanied, pari passu, the transition from the homophonic modal melody to the polyphonic harmonies of the major and minor scales. If an edition of a hymn-book were published to-day with all accidentals omitted, any fair musician could play it through with but few catastrophes; and such accidents as occurred would be due to one of two causes: (1) in equal temperament the music may at any moment modulate anywhere, and therefore cases of ambiguity may arise when the signposts are absent; (2) certain hymn-tunes would be "modal" (or pseudo-modal) and the idiom might be unfamiliar to a performer accustomed only to major and minor keys.

But when all music was modal the first of these difficulties was practically non-existent. Given the mode, the excursions from it were circumscribed and definite, and a mistake would betray either culpable ignorance or pure carelessness. The second difficulty, however, was always present from the moment when the simplest two-part harmony existed; at first involving little more than careful attention, but decade by decade more imperatively demanding concentration of mind. And the appreciation of the ever-growing insistence of this demand gives the key to the whole development of music from the simplicity of a plainsong melody to the complexity of a Bach motet.

A short outline of the functions of the accidental in this evolution may help to make clearer the lines on which it developed. Originally, when melodies were purely modal and structurally simple, no need occurred for the alteration of any note of the mode chosen. Given an appreciation of the relationship of tonic and dominant, the melodies travelled evenly along the path of conjunct motion. But as soon as a more enterprising ambition began to explore the possibilities of disjunct motion, the angularity of the tritone became apparent and was felt to be the bar to progress. And undoubtedly the first use of a note foreign to the mode (i.e. a note chromatically altered) was for the purpose of softening this obstruction.

Later, when the combination of voices had passed the experimental stage and normal music had become definitely harmonic, the accidental acquired other functions. For example, the clausula vera, or "true cadence" ¹ in two parts necessitated a penultimate chord which was a major sixth (or its inversion); and the feeling for the "leading-note", which was destined to revolutionize the whole modal system, was given its first impetus. And when increased harmonic technique had established three-part writing, the laws of acoustics led composers, unconsciously obedient to them, to sharpen the third in the final chord. Once started, the swing away from the severity of diatonic modal melody to the freedom of non-modal chromatic harmony gathered momentum with every experiment. The process is described in a passage from the preface to Vol. I (Taverner) of the Carnegie edition of 'Tudor Church Music':

At the present moment the world has so tired of the limitations of the major and minor scales that our composers are deliberately exploring those harmonic fields which are conveniently labelled "modal". But in Taverner's time the musical sense of Europe was moving, in the unconscious fulfilment of an evolution it could not escape, in exactly the reverse direction: from the modal system to the system with which we are now surfeited. The modes are for melody, and for melody alone, and the birth of polyphony rang the death-knell of the whole modal system. Consequently, the pioneer of those days was the man who saw his way to cast aside some of the angular conventions that had grown out of the vain attempt to combine modal laws with harmonic exigencies, and to foreshadow the ease and smoothness of texture and progression which later, in the days of equal temperament, were to be the common accomplishment of every student. In the days when the modes were living things such terms as leading-note, dominant, or any sort of cadence, meant something different in kind from what they of necessity meant to the later polyphonic composer; for his standpoint was no longer primarily melodic. Horizontal it still was, in the matter of texture and combination of rhythms, but his mind was at last — what it had never been before — chained and tethered to the perpendicular chord as seen from the bass upwards. Smoothness of chord-progression meant manipulation of the notes constituting chords, so that in the passage from austere diatonic modality to the flexibility of the modern tonality, increase of technique and craftsmanship synchronised with increased freedom in the use of accidentals.

This inexorable trend towards our modern scales, spread over the centuries, produced in composers a sense of tonality which was never final or stagnant, but continuously developing. Their conception of the material at their disposal, notes, chords, keys and modulations, was never for any group of years truly static, and in this ceaseless growth of an idea lies the difficulty of the student of to-day in determining the intention of a composer at any given moment. At either end of the period the problem is seldom really baffling: one expert will feel as secure in his transcription of a purely modal melody as another in his reading of one of Bach's "48": in both cases there may, here and there, be a choice between two possibilities, but not a doubt as to whether any reading at all will "make sense". But in the intervening centuries uncertainty dogs every conclusion, and many questions arise. What was the feeling for tonality at this moment? Was this particular composer a pioneer or a "die-hard"? Is this curious passage a survival of modal influence or an experiment in modernity? And in such a work as a Tallis motet questions such as these must be answered a dozen times, and no two scholars will coincide in every solution. And when it is added that right up to the end of the period, until the complexities of equal temperament forced composers to say exactly what they meant, there persisted the old tradition that to insert all the accidentals was to insult the intelligence of the performer, some conception will be formed of the brambles and briars that bestrew the path of a modern editor.

Scholars who desire first-hand acquaintance with the ancient authorities on musica ficta are referred to Pietro Aron, 1529.

¹ See CADENCE.

Zarlino, 1558.
Zacconi, 1596.
Coussemaker, 'Scriptorum de musica'.

P. C. B.

BIBL.—HIBBERD, LLOYD, 'Musica ficta and Instrumental Music c. 1250-c. 1350' (M.Q., XXVIII, 1942, p. 216).

See also Modes, p. 803.

MUSICA FIGURATA (Lat. & Ital., figured music). A term used in medieval music for embellishments to the plainsong itself, but more frequently for descants added by singers in counterpoint with the canto fermo or plainsong.

MUSICA MENSURATA (Lat. also cantus mensurabilis, measured music). The notes of plainsong were originally of indeterminate length and were lengthened or shortened indefinitely, in accordance with the rhythm or accent of the words to which they were adapted. But after the invention of figured music it became necessary to design a system of notation capable of expressing the relative duration, as well as the pitch, of every note intended to be sung. Thus arose a new species of song, called cantus mensurabilis or measured music.¹

One of the earliest-known writers on this subject was Franco of Cologne, author of 'Ars cantus mensurabilis'.

Next in point of antiquity to Franco's treatise is one written by the Englishman Walter Odington of Evesham, in the 13th century. Others follow, by Marchettus of Padua in 1274, Johannes de Muris in 1321, Robert de Handlo — another Englishman — in 1326, Prosdocius de Beldemands in 1410 and Franchinus Gafurius in 1480.

W. S. R., abr.

BIBL.—HANDSCHIN, J., 'Die ältesten Denkmäler mensural notierter Musik in der Schweiz' (A.M., Jan. 1923, pp. 1-10).

WOLF, JOHANNES, 'Ein Breslauer Mensuraltraktat des 15. Jahrhunderts' (A.M., I, iii, 1919).
'Geschichte der Mensural-Notation von 1250-1460' (Leipzig, 1904, 1905).

MUSICA RESERVATA (Lat., reserved music). A 16th-century term the meaning of which is not perfectly clear. It seems to have referred either to the technical secrets reserved for themselves by the new composers of about the middle of that century, or else to an exclusive class of society for which the music was intended. Later in the 16th century the term was also used for vocal music particularly closely adapted to the words to which it was set.

MUSICA TRANSALPINA. The name of the first printed collection of Italian madrigals with English words. It was published in London in 1588 (the dedicatory epistle is dated 1 Oct.), soon after Byrd had issued his 'Psalmes, Sonets and Songs', the first printed collection of English madrigals. The title is:

Musica Transalpina. Madrigales translated of foure, five and sixe parts, chosen out of diuers excellent Authors, with the first and second part of La Verginella, made by Maister Byrd vpon two Stanz's of Ariosto, and brought to speak English with the rest. Published by N. Yonge, in fauour of such as take pleasure in Musick of voices. Imprinted at London by Thomas East, the assigne of William Byrd, 1588. Cum Priuelegio Regiæ Maiestatis.

Nicholas Yonge was the compiler. The collection contains fifty-seven madrigals, viz. sixteen by Ferrabosco, ten by Marenzio, four each by Palestrina and Philippe de Monte, three by Conversi, two each by Byrd, Faignient, Donato, Orlande de Lassus, Ferretti and Felis, and one each by Macque, Pordenoni, Vert, Verdonck, Palestrina, Rinaldo del Mel, Bertani and Pinello. In the table of contents the original initial Italian words are given, side by side with the English.

In 1597 Yonge published a second book under the same name, containing twenty-four madrigals, viz. six by Ferrabosco, three each by Marenzio, Croce and Quintiani, two each by Eremita and Palavicino, and one each by Vecchi, Nanini, Venturi, Feliciani and Bicci. The English words in both books are almost literal translations of the original Italian and are generally well fitted to the notes, but as verses are singularly crude and in some instances — notably the well-known 'Cynthia, thy song and chanting' by Giovanni Croce — almost unmeaning. W. H. H.

BIBL.—OBERTELLO, ALFREDO, 'Madrigali italiani in Inghilterra' (Milan, 1949).

MUSICAL ANTIQUARIAN SOCIETY, THE (1840-47). A society established in London "for the publication of scarce and valuable works by the early English composers". It was launched in 1840 and started its publications in Nov. of that year.

Nineteen works were published, in large folio, and to these were added sixteen corresponding folios of compressed scores by Sir G. A. Macfarren. These were undertaken by the publisher on his own responsibility, with a view of increasing the subscription list.

The Society lasted seven years, and in its second year numbered nearly a thousand members. The annual subscription was one pound, and the works were supplied to the members at prime cost.

The nineteen works issued by the Society were:

1. Mass for five voices by William Byrd. Edited by E. F. Rimbault.
2. The first set of Madrigals by John Wilbye. Edited by James Turle.
3. Madrigals and Motets for five voices by Orlando Gibbons. Edited by Sir George Smart.
4. Dido and Æneas, a tragic opera by Henry Purcell. Edited by G. A. Macfarren.
5. The first set of Ballets for five voices by Thomas Morley. Edited by E. F. Rimbault.
6. Book I of Cantiones Sacrae for five voices by William Byrd. Edited by W. Horsley.
7. Bonduca, a tragedy by Henry Purcell. Edited by E. F. Rimbault.

¹ See also NOTATION. RHYTHMIC MODES.

8. The first set of Madrigals by Thomas Weelkes. Edited by Edward J. Hopkins.
9. Fantasies in three parts composed for viols by Orlando Gibbons. Edited by E. F. Rimbault.
10. King Arthur, an opera, by Henry Purcell. Edited by Edward Taylor.
11. The whole Book of Psalms with their wonted tunes, in four parts, as published by Thomas East. Edited by E. F. Rimbault.
12. The first set of Songs by John Dowland. Edited by William Chappell.
13. Airs or Fa las by John Hilton. Edited by Joseph Warren.
14. A collection of Anthems by M. East, T. Ford, Weelkes and Bateson. Edited by E. F. Rimbault.
15. Madrigals by John Bennet. Edited by E. J. Hopkins.
16. The second set of Madrigals by John Wilbye. Edited by George William Budd.
17. The first set of Madrigals by Thomas Bateson. Edited by E. F. Rimbault.
18. Parthenia, or the first music ever printed for the Virginals, by W. Byrd, John Bull and Orlando Gibbons. Edited by E. F. Rimbault.
19. Ode composed for St. Cecilia's Day by Henry Purcell. Edited by E. F. Rimbault.

Rimbault acted throughout as hon. secretary and W. Chappell, the projector of the Society, acted for about five years as treasurer and manager of the publications. He was then succeeded by his younger brother, Thomas P. Chappell. The publications of the Society, useful in their day, are now for the most part succeeded by later and more authoritative editions, such as those of the Purcell Society, 'The English Madrigal School' and 'The Church Music'.

W. C., adds.

MUSICAL ARTISTS' SOCIETY, THE (1873-99). Among the numerous attempts made for the direct encouragement of British music towards the end of the 19th century, those for which this Society was responsible hold no small place. Projected in 1873 by Arthur O'Leary, C. E. Stephens and other musicians, the Society was established in London the following year, when a series of semi-private concerts was inaugurated, at which performances were given of chamber music, chiefly by members of the Society, Algernon Ashton, J. F. Barnett, F. Davenport, F. E. Gladstone and Sir G. A. Macfarren being some of the composers whose works had a hearing.

Among the list of original members may be mentioned J. F. Barnett, H. R. Bird, Alfred Gilbert, A. Randegger and Olaf Svendsen; while the vice-presidents were Sir G. A. Macfarren, Sir Arthur Sullivan and others, the Duke of Beaufort being president. The first concert took place at the premises of Messrs. Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., others (being three in number a year, though later this number was increased) at such places as the R.A.M., Grosvenor Gallery and St. Martin's Town Hall, where the last concert was given on 6 June 1898, the Society dissolving itself early in 1899.

N. C. G.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION. See ROYAL MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

MUSICAL BOW. A primitive type of musical instrument found among savage tribes in such widely distant places as New Mexico, Patagonia, Central and South Africa, India and the Spice Islands.

The types which have been collected and deposited in museums are astonishingly similar, the general form being an ordinary bow such as is used for shooting arrows, formed of cane or pliable wood, bent by a tight cord. The size varies from 5 or 6 ft. in length to 18 in. or 2 ft. In almost every case a dried gourd or other hollow vessel is fixed to the cane or wood portion, and this acts as a resonator. Generally the string is also kept taut by a smaller cord passing over it, below the middle, and attached to the wood or cane part. The sound is produced by striking or plucking the tightened string with a piece of wood or bone, and by skilful performance various notes are produced.

It is important to discriminate between the musical bow and the Oriental kite bows and African goura, in both of which the string is set in vibration by a current of air; nor does the musical bow appear to have much affinity with the Jew's harp, another widely distributed sound-producer, in which, however, the notes are varied by altering the resonating cavity of the mouth.

F. W. G.

BIBL.—ANKERMANN, 'Die afrikanischen Musikinstrumente' (Berlin, 1901).

BALFOUR, H., 'The Goura' (Journ. Anthropol. Inst., XXXIII, 1902).

'The Natural History of the Musical Bow' (Oxford, 1899).

'The American Anthropologist', II, 1898.

MUSICAL BOX. The name generally used, in a limited sense, for any instrument which plays mechanically on a metal comb. It consists essentially of clockwork to drive a rotating brass barrel from which project steel pins to pluck the pointed teeth of a metal comb. The comb, said to be first used by Aristide Janvier in 1776, is of steel, with teeth of varying lengths and weights to give a scale of notes. For rapid repetition there may be three or four teeth tuned to the same note.

Attempts were made in the 19th century to produce a serious musical instrument by great elaboration of the combs, which had up to four hundred teeth. For instance, some had three separate scales, a fundamental set of teeth, another set playing more softly, and a third set tuned to beat against the fundamental set. Pinning of barrels was developed to give major classical works (e.g. the "Twelfth Mass" wrongly attributed to Mozart).

There may be eight or ten tunes on one barrel, and several barrels to a box, and large boxes will play for three hours on one winding.

The best boxes, musically, had only a comb. But boxes of a decadent type were very popular and were to be found in every nursery at the end of the 19th and beginning of the 20th centuries. These, in addition to combs, had bells, drums, cymbals, castanets and free reeds worked by bellows.

Small musical-box movements, generally with two tunes, have been made since the beginning of the 19th century for incorporation into common objects of everyday use, such as snuff-boxes, tankards, chairs, cigarette boxes, etc., the clockwork being discharged automatically by some appropriate action. They were also used extensively for providing music for simple automata, such as dancing dolls, acrobats and sailing-ships. Miniature musical boxes were made for use in musical watches and musical seals.

The popularity of the musical box, and with it a flourishing industry, particularly in Switzerland, declined rapidly with the introduction of the gramophone with its great variety of cheap records. A. H. (iv).

BIBL. - CLARK, JOHN E. T., 'Musical Boxes' (Birmingham, 1948).

See also Musical Clocks. Musical Watches.

MUSICAL CLOCKS. Once the principle of striking the quarters and hours on bells in clocks by means of pins projecting from a rotating barrel was discovered, it was a short step to extend it to produce tunes. The earliest-known musical clock was probably Dallam's "Turkish Organ", made as a gift for the Sultan of Turkey in 1598. No sooner the clock struck, than the Chime of 16 bells went of, and played a songe of 4 partes. That beinge done, tow personages which stood upon two corners of the second stories holdinge tow silver trumpetes in there handes, did lift them to their heades and sounded a tantarra. Than the musick went of, and the organ played a song of 5 partes twyse over. In the tope of the organ, being 16 foute hie, did stande a holly bushe full of birds and thrushes, which at the end of the musick did singe and shake their winges.

In public clocks the tunes are usually played on large bells, but in domestic clocks we find not only small bells, but organ pipes and wire strings. The musical clocks made for Prince Esterházy, with tunes written and the pinning of the barrels supervised by Haydn, use several octaves of organ pipes.

The musical mechanism was discharged by the striking-work at every hour, or at longer intervals, and the tunes might be changed automatically. Domestic clocks are found with seven tunes, it being arranged that they work through light airs and dances during the week to a hymn-tune on Sunday.

A. H. (iv).

MUSICAL GLASSES. See ARMONICA.

MUSICAL SNUFFBOX. See MECHANICAL INSTRUMENTS.

MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON, THE (1858-67). This Society was founded in Apr. 1858 by a body of musicians, professional and amateur, who had originally been members of the New Philharmonic Society and wished to reconstitute it. This being found impracticable, they established a new institution under the name of The Musical Society of London. Among the names of this body are found those of Charles Salaman, the chief mover of the project, who held the post of honorary secretary until 1865, when C. G. Verrinder succeeded him; Augustine Sargood (treasurer); C. E. Horsley (honorary librarian); W. V. Wallace, G. A. Macfarren, Henry Smart, Julius Benedict, Stephen Elvey, John Goss, E. J. Hopkins, B. Molique, Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., and S. S. Wesley, besides other prominent musicians. The objects of the Society, as stated in its early prospectuses, were:

To promote social intercourse among its members and with musicians of this and other countries; to form a musical library for the use of members; to hold conversazioni, at which papers on musical subjects might be read, and subjects of musical interest discussed; to give orchestral, choral, and chamber concerts, and occasionally lectures; to afford the opportunity of trying new compositions; to publish occasional papers calculated to extend the theoretical and historical knowledge of music.

The members consisted of fellows, associates and lady associates, whose subscription was fixed at one guinea. The following were honorary fellows: Auber, Berlioz, Ernst, Joachim, Meyerbeer, Moscheles, Rossini and Spohr. The conductor of the Society during the whole period of its existence was Alfred Mellon. The first concert took place on 26 Jan. 1859, when Beethoven's C minor Symphony, Mendelssohn's 'Melusine' overture and a cantata by G. A. Macfarren, 'May-Day', etc., were given. At the last concert, 20 Mar. 1867, the most interesting feature of the programme was Beethoven's choral Fantasy, the pianoforte part of which was played by Clara Schumann. J. A. F.-M.

MUSICAL UNION, THE. See ELLA, JOHN.

MUSICAL WATCHES. These were made, usually in Switzerland, at the beginning of the 19th century. A small disc, with projecting pins arranged radially, engages with a comb, as in a musical box, the teeth of which are more or less curved to follow the shape of the watch. There might be one tune, such as a dance tune, or 'God save the Queen', or, more rarely, an air and variation.

A. H. (iv).

MUSICIANS' BENEVOLENT FUND.

An English institution started in 1921 as The Gervase Elwes Memorial Fund on the initiative of Victor Beigel, who became its first chairman, with Sir Edward Elgar as president. Subsequent chairmen have been W. H. Leslie, Lord Henry Cavendish Bentinck, Lord Howard de Walden, Lord Blanesburgh, Harry Plunket Greene, Sir Landon Ronald and Frank Howes. Since the death of Elgar the office of president has been left vacant.

The fund was originally intended to assist young musicians, but soon after its foundation it was renamed Musicians' Benevolent Fund and, on the advice of Plunket Greene, who was indefatigable on its behalf, it was turned into a registered charity. The present (1954) hon. treasurer is Baroness Ravensdale and the organizing secretary Frank Thistleton.

H. C. C., adds.

See also Beigel.

MUSICIANS' COMPANY. See WORKSHIPPFUL COMPANY OF MUSICIANS.

MUSICIANS OF GREAT BRITAIN, ROYAL SOCIETY OF. See ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

MUSICIANS' UNION. This society, a registered Trade Union, was formed in 1921 by the fusion of the National Orchestral Union of Professional Musicians and the Amalgamated Musicians' Union, two independent organizations which had been in existence since 1891 and 1893 respectively.

These were by no means the first protective associations for musicians. With the general decay of craft guilds in the 17th century those which looked after the interests of minstrels or musicians ceased to have any power after the mid-18th century (e.g. the Musicians' Company). Indeed it was not until the last quarter of the 19th century that musicians began to federate for the sake of protection. In 1874 there was a London Musical Artists' Protective Association, together with an affiliated group with a similar title at Manchester, but both these fell into dissolution in 1876. Of a like nature was the Birmingham Orchestral Association, also founded in 1874, but this managed to flourish until 1878. From that date there was no protective society for musicians in Great Britain until 1891, when the London Orchestral Association was formed, its first general secretary being Fred Orcherton (1858-1944), the well-known flautist of Richter's and the Queen's Hall orchestras, and of the Queen's Private Band, who had been, since 1888, the secretary of the British and Foreign Musicians' Society, which was a friendly society. Despite its later titles — the National Orchestral Association and the National Orchestral Union of Professional Musicians — this society had immediate influence only in London, where, controlling the very best instrumentalists in the concert world and west-end theatres who were its members, it had a most salutary effect on wages, salaries, fees, contracts and conditions of employment for the professional musician. For some years it issued the 'Orchestral Association Gazette', but later (1901) it contented itself with allocated columns in the 'Orchestral Times' until 1907, when it again adopted its own publication. Orcherton remained as general secretary until 1916, when he was succeeded by Fort Greenwood, who continued in office until 1921, when the National Orchestral Union lost its identity through the fusion of the two societies as mentioned above.

In the provinces professional musicians were practically unorganized, and it was not until 1893 that the musicians of Manchester and Birmingham sought to federate. Out of this urge, under the guidance of Joseph Bevir Williams, the Amalgamated Musicians' Union was established, with John Tiplady Carrodus (1836-95) as its first president and Williams as its first general secretary (1893-1924). Before many weeks had passed, branches of the union sprang up in Glasgow, Liverpool, Dundee and Newcastle-on-Tyne, followed in 1894 by Oldham, Leeds, Preston, Southport, Bradford, Edinburgh, Hull, Sheffield, Bristol, Dewsbury, Huddersfield, Middlesbrough, Sunderland and South Shields. The year 1895 brought in Newport (Mon.), Nottingham, Blackpool, Aberdeen, Brighton, Bolton, Stockport and other towns, with Belfast and Dublin falling into line the next year. In 1894 the Union issued its first Directory and published its first 'Amalgamated Musicians' Union Monthly Report and Journal', which became, in 1900, the 'Musicians Report and Journal', the "Report" being a separate issue. Later (1929-33) it launched a quarterly entitled the 'Musicians' Journal', under the editorship of Dr. Henry G. Farmer.

In its early years the Union experienced much storm and stress, harassed by disputes and lawsuits, although strengthened by awards and arbitrations, but these struggles brought forth the historic charter for theatrical musicians in the Askwith Award of 1907, with later revisions in 1911 and 1912. Not only did this award recognize rates for matinées and rehearsals for the first time, but it became the basis for all subsequent awards and agreements between theatrical employers and musicians, and even had an immediate effect on the concert world. Whether disputes and strikes are justified or not is not our concern (strike pay was governed by rule in the Union in 1898), but many of these are historic in their way since they have established many points in law, such as the Reville v. Jennings and Bayley (Manchester Assize Court, 1897), Hardacre v. Williams (Law Courts, 1906), United Theatres Co. v. Durrant (Bristol Dispute, Mr. Justice Lawrence, 1909), ditto, Appeal (Master of Rolls, Justice Farwell, 1909), Dallimore v. Williams (Law Courts, 1912), ditto, new trial (Law Courts, 1913), and especially the more recent Rex v. Brook (County of London Sessions, H. W. W. Wilberforce, 1929).

Unlike the London Association, the Union

did not insist on any professional ability standard for admission to membership, its argument being that so long as employers were content to engage musicians irrespective of such qualifications, the Union would be compelled to admit all and sundry. There were many in the Union, and in the profession, who did not agree with this ruling, with the result that there arose a National Federation of Professional Musicians, registered as a Trade Union, in 1907, which insisted on this professional standard and even provided for a board of examiners where necessary. The Federation was short-lived, being dissolved in 1914.

In 1912 the Union formed a Choristers' Section in order to include chorus singers of stage productions. It had but a fitful existence. More promising was the Musical Directors' Section, formed in London in 1913, and extended to Scotland in 1916, where Sir Donald Tovey became its Hon. President. Eventually this section was styled the Musical Directors' Association, when provincial branches in England were formed, and in 1929 a meeting was held with the London Musical Conductors' Association, with Sir Hugh Allen in the chair, with a view of bringing the two societies into one organization, but without avail. Of greater moment was the working agreement signed in 1915 between the two great societies which represented the interests of musicians in general, i.e. the National Orchestral Association and the Amalgamated Musicians' Union, which eventually brought about the complete fusion of the two societies in 1921. This was due mainly to the efforts of Joseph B. Williams who, having seen the dream of his life fulfilled, retired in 1924, after watching his foundling grow from a mere handful of stalwarts in 1893 to a powerful society of over 19,000 members in 1924. He was succeeded by E. S. Teale (1861-1931), a pupil of the Yorkshire Training College of Music, and it was during his tenure of office that the appalling disemployment of musicians in consequence of the introduction of sound-films took place. During the autumn of 1928, after the first "talkies" appeared, the membership of the Union was over 20,000, but before long it fell to less than 7000. To meet the menace the Union created the Musical Performers' Protection Association which essayed to confer "performing rights" on those musicians who made the sound-films, an instrument which would have enabled the union to control to some extent the humanly detrimental effects of the new mechanism. In its first legal case however, judgment went against the Union and the association was shelved.

From its inception in 1893 until 1932 the headquarters of the Union were at Manchester, its birthplace, but in the latter year London became the administrative centre, and to-day this is situated at 7 Sicilian Avenue, Southampton Row, W.C.1, and its general secretary is Fred Dambman (b. 1880). It has branches throughout the country with local branch secretaries. There are also district organizers who are, in turn, secretaries of district councils, made up of delegates from the branches. Each district also sends a member or members to an executive committee which, with a periodic delegate conference (first held in 1894), is the governing body of the Union. Inter-trade-union activities are carried on through local Trades Councils and the Trades Union Congress, with which the Union has been affiliated since 1895. Politics are provided for under the Political Fund Rules of 1913 et seq.

On the social side, the Musicians' Union has attempted much. As early as 1897 it put forward a scheme for the acquisition of theatres to be run on co-operative lines. It was then thought to be Utopian, but the idea has recently been adopted by the co-operative movement itself. In both 1896 and 1909 it proposed unemployment and superannuation schemes, but both were rejected by the members. A graduated scale of funeral benefits has existed since 1900, and an insurance fund for instruments began to operate in the same year. In 1912 the Titanic Convalescent Homes Fund was established.

To-day the Musicians' Union, with a membership not far from 20,000, must be considered an integral part of the musical life of this country, more especially since all wages, salaries, fees, agreements, contracts and conditions of employment come under its aegis. In fixing adequate rates for the musician in the concert-hall, band-stand, dance-room, theatre pit, broadcasting studio and almost every sphere of seasonal or occasional engagement, the musical profession has been made sufficiently lucrative to eliminate the necessity of other extraneous employment. This confining the musician to a whole-time service has naturally enhanced executive ability which, in turn, has not only raised the social status of the musician, but has largely contributed to the improvement of music itself. H. G. F.

BIBL.—'Amalgamated Musicians Union Monthly Report and Journal' (Manchester, 1894-1900).
'Musicians' Journal' (Manchester-London), especially April 1929, pp. 8-9; July 1929, pp. 8-9; Oct. 1929, pp. 27-28; Jan. 1930, p. 13.
'Musicians' Report and Journal' (Manchester, 1900-1929).

See also Carrodus (J. T.). Farmer (H. G.). Musicians' Company. Williams (Joseph Bevir). •

MUSICOLOGY. This term has occurred more and more frequently of recent years in English books, periodicals and articles. It is used to express the scientific study of music in the widest sense. In France and America the word has been in current use for some considerable time: there is a 'Revue de Musicologie', which appears in Paris, and an American Musicological Society, which corresponds to the Royal Musical Association in England.

. METHOD.—It is still sometimes questioned whether the term "musicology" really corresponds to the idea it is meant to express or whether it has merely come into use for the convenience of having a single word for "musical science".

The whole province of the sciences can be divided into those two main groups which Socrates recognized as fundamental modes of scientific thought—the general and the particular. Thus the polarity of natural and humanistic or more precisely natural and historical sciences is preserved: in a more extended sense this would mean the polarity of natural and humane sciences (which would include historical science). Natural science is concerned with the search for general laws, humane science with individual facts.

The historical sciences can never be exact in the same sense as the natural. The aim of all historical research is the presentation of the individual thing, and this aim is achieved by the method of description: the choice, from among all the available facts, of those which the historian considers "valuable". The existence of the objects of the natural sciences is considered in the light of known laws which these objects obey: the objects of the cultural sciences are interesting for the value attaching to each of them individually. Hence there are two fundamentally different methods of approach, the generalizing method for the natural sciences, the individualizing for the humane sciences.

In the case of music, what is the material with which science has to deal?

First, there are the qualities of music considered as a world of sounds; secondly, the principles according to which isolated sounds are joined to each other, the rules arising from the simultaneous or successive relationship of sounds to each other; thirdly, musical composition. These three groups demand different treatment.

(1) The acoustic and physiological phenomena of music can be treated purely scientifically: they can be examined in the light of their own inherent laws.

(2) The rules governing sound-relationships are not laws but norms¹, which determine the simultaneous (harmony) or successive (melody) relationship of sounds to each other, with a view to the fulfilling of certain conditions not universally valid but dependent upon changeable values. Musical theory belongs therefore to the province of the normative cultural sciences.

(3) On the other hand, a musical composition is a creation of the artist, a projection of the artistic experience from the inner consciousness of the artist into actuality. It is conceivable only in relation to the artist who creates it: it is bound up with the significance of the artist as an individual, a unique phenomenon. This value may be at its minimum when a composition is scarcely distinguishable from others of its kind; and it approaches its maximum in proportion to the success with which the artist achieves a unique expression of his personality. A musical composition, then, can be classified as belonging to the historical humane sciences. The investigation and understanding of the problems involved in the act of composition form the kernel of musical science. The physical and physiological data of music are of interest to the student only in so far as they help him to understand a composition. Acoustic phenomena, as such, interest the physicist: the norms of music—the rules expounded in musical theory—are conceivable in relation to a musical composition alone, because they are abstract generalizations arrived at by induction from concrete instances.

Musical science, then, is a province of the general theory of art and, as such, of humane science. The object with which musical science is concerned is the musical composition and the conditions of its creation, development and performance.

Comparative musical science (which can be treated purely scientifically) and the history of style are only parts of musical history. By these means compositions can be collected, classified and increasingly raised from their position as parts of an anonymous mass to an individual existence. Starting from these branches of musical research it will gradually become possible to achieve our object, i.e. the arrangement and investigation of all available material in such a way as to be able to consider historically as many as possible of those compositions which have hitherto been regarded as prehistoric or historically unclassifiable.

HISTORICAL SYNOPSIS OF THE SYSTEMS OF MUSICAL THEORY.—The scientific study of music in the West dates from Greek antiquity. It is almost easier to form some idea of Greek music from the numerous theoretical treatises which have been preserved, and from the observations of the philosophers, than from the disconnected fragments of the music itself. There are a large number of manuals and treatises belonging to the first centuries of the Christian era, in which the work of these older theorists is revised and extended. For Greek writers, music (μουσική) is a science (ἐπιστήμη), which includes both theory and practice. Aristides Quintilianus (1st century A.D.) draws up the following system:

¹ Norms are not like natural laws, i.e. abstractions of cause and effect: they rather lay down the nature of this effect under given circumstances. In the terminology of logic the difference between natural law and norm might be compared with that between a judgment of fact and a judgment of value.

I. Θεωρητικόν (theoretical portion)

A. φυσικόν (science):

- (a) ἀριθμητικόν; (b) φυσικόν.
(arithmetic) (physics)

B. τεχνικόν (technique):

- (a) ἁρμονικόν; (b) ῥυθμική; (c) μετρική.
(harmony) (rhythm) (metre)

II. Πρακτικόν (practical portion)

A. χρηστικόν (composition):

- (a) μελοποιία; (b) ῥυθμοποιία; (c) ποίησις.
(melody) (rhythm) (poetry)

B. ἐξαγγελτικόν (execution):

- (a) ὀργανική; (b) ὠδική; (c) ὑποκριτική.
(instrumental) (vocal) (dramatic)

The speculations of the Greek philosophers and theorists on the nature of music and its connection with ethics were taken over by Boethius (c. A.D. 475–525), the first great musical theoretician of the Christian West, in his 'De Institutione Musica'. In the first chapter he enunciates the theory (taken over from pre-Christian theory, but greatly intensified by Christianity) which was to have such an effect on all medieval musical theory, i.e. that music is related not only to science but also to morality (musica vero non modo speculationi verum etiam moralitati coniuncta). Going back to neo-Pythagorean and neo-Platonic sources, Boethius distinguishes the various kinds (genera) of music: (1) musica mundana, expressed in the motion of the spheres, the ordering of the elements and the cycle of the seasons; (2) musica humana, recognized by each man in himself and ordering aright the relations between the incorporeal spirit and the body, just as high and low notes make a consonance; (3) musica quae in quibusdam constituta est instrumentis — i.e. music in our modern sense. By musician, however, Boethius does not mean one who has acquired the practical technique of singing or playing some instrument: a musician is a man conversant with the theory of singing which he must have mastered not through mere practice but by scientific control (non servitio operis sed imperio speculationis).¹ Boethius is also the first western writer (in the 'Institutio Arithmetica') to use the word quadrivium for the four branches of mathematical learning — Arithmetic, Geometry, Astrology and Music.

The division of music into "scientia harmonica, rhythmica, et metrica" goes back to the 'De artibus ac disciplinis liberalium artium' of Cassiodorus (c. 490–580), whose classification is more inclusive than that of Boethius; but neither of them goes into the practical side of music. Cassiodorus is the prototype of a number of theorists of the following centuries: Isidore of Seville, Alcuin and Aurelianus Reomensis all start from his principles, which they apply to wider fields.

A third important musical system was made by Regino of Prüm (d. 950), who distinguishes in his 'Epistola de harmonica institutione' between a divine musica naturalis and a musica artificialis, modelled by man on the musica naturalis. There is a reflection of neo-Platonic ideas in this division, and also a noticeable parallel with Byzantine musical theory as it had developed under the influence of Gnostic and Plotinian ideas.

In the middle of the 12th century there appears a fourth system, also based on pre-Christian theory — the separation of music into musica speculativa and musica activa. This goes back to Aristides Quintilianus, who distinguished, as we have seen, between a θεωρητικόν (theory) and a πρακτικόν (practice). This division was taken over by Arabic musical theory and reappeared in the West in the translation of Al-Fārābī by Domenicus Gundisalvus, in the middle of the 12th century.

Most medieval treatises are based on the principles of Boethius, Cassiodorus and Isidore — especially on Boethius, who occupied for the Scholastics the same authoritative position in music as Aristotle did in philosophy. On the other hand, Al-Fārābī starts from the practical musician, thus introducing into medieval musical theory a new point of view which led to the new concept of the musicus as set forth in the 'Musica Magistri Ugolini' (of Orvieto: 1380–1449). Here the musicus is defined as the man who is conversant with both sides of music, the speculativa and the activa. This prepared the way for the idea of music and the musician which was universal at the time of the Renaissance, the connection of theory and practice; and thence arose the type of musician who is at the same time theorist and composer.

MUSIC AS A SCIENCE AT THE MEDIEVAL SCHOOLS AND UNIVERSITIES.—Music was originally taught in monasteries and cathedral schools and made its way thence to the universities. The inclusion of theoretical instruction in music goes back to Cassiodorus, who, in the monastery founded by him at Vivarium (about 540), endeavoured to put

¹ This definition of the musician is common to many musical treatises throughout the middle ages and right on to the time of the Flemish and Burgundian composers. Even in Tinctoris's 'Diffinitorium Musices' (about 1475) there is a definition of the musician based almost word for word on Boethius: 'Musicus est qui perpena ratione beneficio speculationis, non operis servitio, canendi officium assumit. Hinc differentiam inter musicum et cantorem quidam sub tali metrorum serie posuit:

Musidorum et cantorum magna est differentia:

Illi sciunt, ii dicunt quae composit musica.

Et qui dicit quod non sapit diffinitur bestia.'

(E. de Coussemaker, 'Œuvres théoriques de Jean Tinctoris' (Lille, 1875), p. 489.)

into effect St. Augustine's ideals of Christian education. But Cassiodorus set far more value than St. Augustine did on the cultivation by the monks of music as a science. In his 'Expositio in psalmos' he declares that the singing of psalms is of equal importance with any other form of worship: "to sing is indeed to utter the word of the Lord through the mouth" (cantare vero est verba Domini ore proferre). Cassiodorus's views remained somewhat isolated among those of his contemporaries; in a few monasteries only, in Lombardy and Spain, did his conception find a response, while in Italy the monastic ideal was that of an ascetic way of life.

Among the Irish, Scottish, Welsh and Anglo-Saxon monks, on the other hand, Cassiodorus's ideas found acceptance. Hence the existence in Ireland and Wales of a blend of theological and secular learning at a period in which — save in Spain and Lombardy — a different form of education prevailed on the Continent. In the monastery schools of Armagh, Bangor, Lismore and Clonmacnoise the theory of music was taught together with mathematical theory. The same tendency may be found in England at the end of the 7th century, especially in the newly founded school at Canterbury, and also at Malmesbury, Jarrow, Wearmouth and York.

In Italy, on the other hand, the study of music was confined to the practical side. St. Benedict's 'Regula Monasteriorum' discusses the practice of music only, no mention being made of musical theory. At the Schola Cantorum in Rome, founded by Pope Gregory the Great, it also appears that practical instruction alone was given. It was otherwise in southern Italy and in Sicily, where there was a Greek colony with its own monasteries and scriptoria. These were the centres from which the heritage of the ancient knowledge and study of musical theory gradually penetrated northwards. The educational reforms which took place under Charlemagne were carried out under the supervision of Irish, Scottish, Anglo-Saxon and Lombard monks, and led to a renaissance in the east and west Frankish monastic schools of the Carolingian empire. The monastic schools of Saint-Martin of Tours, Ferrières, Saint-Germain in Auxerre, Fulda, Reichenau and St. Gall became at this period centres of musical culture, primarily of liturgical music, but also of musical theory. The leading personalities at these centres were: at Saint-Martin, Alcuin (from 796 onwards), Fredregisus (804-34), Adelard (834-45)¹; at Ferrières, Sigulf (from 796 onwards), Servatus Lupus (805-62); at Auxerre, Remigius of Auxerre (841-908), Hucbald of Saint-Amand (840-930), both of them musical theorists of great fame and lasting importance; at Fulda, Hrabanus Maurus, who was a pupil of Alcuin at Tours; at Reichenau, the Abbot Waldo (786-802), who planned the library in which all the important musical treatises between 835 and 842 were copied, and the musical theorists Berno and Hermannus Contractus (11th cent.); at St. Gall, Notker Balbulus (d. 912), Totilo (d. 915), Notker Labeo (c. 950-1022), Ekkehard (c. 980-1060).

From the opening years of the 11th century onwards begins the gradual decline of the monastic schools as centres of the scientific study of music. As a result of the reforms originated at Cluny the singing of psalms increasingly took the place of general musical study. On the other hand the scientific study of music in the cathedral schools increased steadily from the middle of the 10th century onwards. Theory and practice were taught side by side. This accounts for the fact that the treatises of the theorists are a mixture of practical instructions and theoretical speculation, often following each other in a completely unsystematic manner; they are thus exceedingly difficult for the present-day scholar to fathom, but the readers for whom the treatises were designed knew precisely at what point the author of a compilation from earlier treatises was adding something new of his own.

During the 11th and 12th centuries this new movement centred increasingly at Rheims, Chartres and Liège, and later at Laon. At Rheims scientific instruction in music was inaugurated by Gerbert of Aurillac, later Pope Sylvester II (c. 940-1005), who introduced the 'Institutio Musica' of Boethius as the foundation of the theoretical study of music. At Chartres the study of musical theory was begun by Fulbert (c. 975-1029), while at Liège it was introduced by Notker (972-1008), who came from St. Gall and brought with him to Liège the great tradition of the famous monastic school.

In the 11th century the monastic schools were once again temporarily influenced by the cathedral schools. But these too, after the 12th century, were gradually supplanted by those new centres of intellectual life which thenceforward until the present day were destined to gain and retain the leadership, namely the universities. The scientia musicae was a part of the Faculty of Arts at the universities of Paris, Oxford, Salamanca, Naples, Bologna and Pavia, and also in Germany. Johannes de Garlandia (b. c. 1186), a student of Oxford, taught first in Paris and was appointed in 1229 "magister" at the newly founded University of Toulouse. The Franciscan Robert Grosse teste (b. 1175; d. 1253 as Bishop of Lincoln) taught at Oxford. In his philosophical work 'De Artibus Liberalibus' he gives music a most important place and inclines to Arabic views, probably under the influence of Gundisalvus. His most important pupil was Roger Bacon, who considered music as an important part of theoretical study. In the 14th century Paris possessed one of the greatest theorists, Johannes de Muris, who was rector of the Sorbonne in 1350. His chief work is the 'Musica Speculativa'. To the same author was also attributed the 'Speculum Musices' in seven books, an extraordinary achievement which provided the basis of all musical instruction at most universities in the 15th and 16th centuries.¹

¹ At the end of the 7th century Saint-Martin became a centre for the composition of sequences, proses and tropes. The famous Winchester Troper (MS Bodley 775) was probably copied from a book originally written at Saint-Martin outside Tours, and came to Winchester by way of Fleury and Abingdon. See E. W. B. Nicholson, 'Early Bodleian Music', III, xxix ff.

About 1400 Joannes de Ciconia was living at Padua, and eighty years later Johannes Tinctoris and Bernard Hykaert were at Naples — signs of the great esteem in which Flemish music was held at this time. Franchinus Gafurius (Gafori) was Professor musicae at Milan about 1500, Johannes Cochlaeus was Magister artium at the University of Cologne, his pupil Glareanus at Basel and Freiburg i/B.

After the end of the 16th century, when in England the study of music at the universities took on a new lease of life, the chairs of music disappeared on the Continent. With the end of scholastic philosophy the study of Muris's widespread treatises on music disappeared from the curriculum.

The change in the general conception of music is shown by the appearance in 1558 of the 'Istituzioni harmoniche' of Gioseffo Zarlino, later maestro di cappella of St. Mark's, Venice. In the music of his time, and before all else in that of Adriaan Willaert, Zarlino saw the end of the infima bassezza of the middle ages which had succeeded the somma altezza of antiquity. In spite of his deliberate return to the theories of antiquity, however, Zarlino's division of music does not represent any break with scholastic theory (which was itself based on antiquity) but rather a further development of that theory. The difference between the medieval and Renaissance conceptions of music, as shown in the 'Istituzioni harmoniche', lies in the new independence of music from theology. An aesthetic valuation of music takes the place of the old connection between music and religious ideas. The middle ages saw in terrestrial music only a copy of the celestial (a conception which was particularly developed at Byzantium); for the Renaissance the only real music is that which is audible to human ears. Superficially the division into musica animastica and musica organica is preserved, and the first of these is subdivided into mundana and humana. But in practice very little is said of the musica animastica and stress is laid on the musica organica, which Zarlino subdivides into naturale (vocal) and artificiale (instrumental). The perfect musician (musico perfetto) is still for Zarlino the man who practises his art on the foundation of a scientific mastery of theory; but his admiration is increasingly for free, creative work. As the poet makes use of language to imitate the object which he is describing, so the musician is allowed to represent by means of music that which is expressed in the words of his text ("così è concesso al Musico & Mellopeio, imitar con la Modulatione & con l' Harmonia: con quel modo migliore ch' ei può fare, quelle che esprimono le parole contenute nell' Oratione, la quale vuole esprimere col canto": 'Sopplimenti musicali', 1588, p. 316).

The freeing of "real" music from its dependence on the cosmic, and its connection with aesthetic ideas, put the teaching of music on quite a new footing. From the time of the Greek theorists, by way of Boethius and Cassiodorus, right up to Tinctoris, Aaron and Glareanus, theorists did no more than continue and supplement the works of their predecessors. Zarlino begins the subjective approach to music, and with him starts the battle of opinions. Vincenzo Galilei, a pupil of Zarlino, opposed some of his master's theories in his 'Dialogo della musica antica e della moderna', which appeared in 1581 at Florence. Zarlino answered him in the 'Sopplimenti musicali' (1588), and Galilei attacked him more bitterly in his 'Discorso intorno alle opere di Messer Zarlino di Chioggia' (1589). Still more bitter is the answer of G. M. Artusi, which appeared after Zarlino's death. The chief stress now is laid on questions of aesthetics, the use of new chords and their solution, and the question of declamation. The contrapuntal style, hitherto so greatly admired, was attacked by the circle of Florentine musicians who were making the first beginnings of the opera, and by their successors; thus the whole interest of these musical treatises begins to centre on the technique of composition and questions concerning the aesthetic consideration of a composition. It is a sign of the times that most of the theorizing is done by practising musicians, in the prefaces to their works (Banchieri, Peri, Caccini, Viadana and many others) or in books of instruction, written at the height of their creative ability, for the use of young musicians and composers. There is a direct line of ancestry connecting Michael Praetorius's 'Syntagma musicum' (1615–20) with Vincent d'Indy's 'Cours de composition' (1902-9), to mention only two standard works of the many produced, one at the beginning of the period, the other at the present day.

¹ The problem as to which of the writings that have been handed down under the name of Muris are to be ascribed to the mathematician Johannes de Muris, has been much discussed, but is not yet solved. The only fact which may to-day be regarded as certain is that the 'Speculum Musices' is not by him, but by one Jacobus, otherwise unknown, who was studying in Paris towards the end of the 13th century.—H. Besseler, 'Studien zur Musik des Mittelalters', I ('Archiv für Musikforschung', VII, 180 ff., and VIII, 207 ff.).

THE HISTORY OF MUSIC.—The fact that theoretical treatises from now on confined their interest to the actual craft of music made it necessary to carry on the philosophical consideration of music in a new way, i.e. in treating music historically, a method which also implied a more or less explicit connection with philosophical ideas. No fewer than seven would-be complete histories of music appeared during the 18th century. The first of these was the 'Histoire de la musique et de ses effets' (1725) by Jacques Bonnet, who was well aware of the novelty of his attempt. In his preface he writes: "Mais quoique plus de douze cens Auteurs ayent traité de cette Science [music], pas un ne s'est hasardé d'en faire l'Histoire". After this attempt (for it is no more) there appeared G. B. Martini's well-known 'Storia della musica' (1757). Very little attention has been paid to Eximeno's 'Dell' origine e delle regole della musica, colla storia del suo progresso, decadenza, e rinnovazione' (1774), which is remarkable for the boldness, novelty and penetration of its ideas. In Part I, ch. ii of his book he attacks the connection of music with mathematics under the heading 'Che la musica non ha correlazione colla matematica', and combats the views of the older and the modern theorists, especially Euler's 'Tentamen novae Theoriae Musicae', Tartini's 'Trattato dell' armonia', Rameau and d'Alembert. Eximeno maintains in his thesis ('Che la musica sia un vero linguaggio') that a knowledge of the rules of music is not necessary in order to compose well in the same sense as a knowledge of the rules of geometry is necessary for the solution of a mathematical problem. The rules of music are no more than mere observations or reflections on musical sounds ("solamente sono osservazioni o riflessioni sopra i toni"), and an absence of reflection is no drawback for a composer who follows his instinct. Eximeno even goes so far as to say that if only those who have learnt the rules are to compose, it would be better to burn all compositions. In order to compose, it is enough to abandon oneself to the arms of nature and allow oneself to be guided by the sensations aroused by the subject which is to be put to music¹ (p. 107).

¹ "In fatti bisognerebbe dar alle fiamme quasi tutte le composizioni di Musica, se fosse stata necessaria ne' loro Autori la scienza delle vere regole. Per la detta ragione ancora mentre si risolve un problema geometrico, conviene tener la mente rivolta alle regole: altrimenti non possono applicarsi a' casi particolari. Ma per comporre in musica bisogna abbandonarsi nelle braccia della Natura e lasciarsi condurre dalle sensazioni, che risveglia il soggetto da mettere in musica."

Here we find a direct contradiction of previous musical theory and a confession of faith in the "theory of sensibility" (Affektenlehre) which was the basis of musical theory in the second half of the 18th century: more than that, Eximeno is the herald of the romantic conception of music as it came to be stated a few years later in the writings and poems of the German romantics.

Not long after Eximeno's work there appeared two English histories, Burney's 'General History of Music' (1776) and, in the same year, Hawkins's 'General History of the Science and Practice of Music', both of which are still of interest. They were followed by B. de La Borde's 'Essai sur la musique' (1780) and J. N. Forkel's 'Allgemeine Geschichte der Musik'.

Unfortunately there was an insufficient supply of the material necessary for the chronicling and appreciation demanded by a general history of music. It is little wonder therefore that none of these works achieved its object. At the end of the 18th century there began a period of detailed research, a period which is not yet over, whose object is to investigate, step by step, the whole province of music, to publish complete editions of the great masters and collections of the most important works of lesser composers, each country contributing its quota to the whole. This is the end served by the 'Publications of the Musical Antiquarian Society', the 'Publication alterer praktischer und theoretischer Musikwerke', the 'Recueil des morceaux de musique ancienne', the 'Archives du chant', the D.D.T., the D.T.Ö., 'Tudor Church Music', the 'English Madrigal Schools', the 'Istituzioni e monumenti dell' arte musicale italiana', the edition of the 'Maatschappij tot bevordering der Toonkunst', the 'Plain-Song and Mediaeval Music Society', the 'Paléographie Musicale', the 'Monumenta Musicae Byzantinae', etc.

In the 19th century A. W. Ambros's 'Geschichte der Musik' (4 vols., 1862-78) and F. J. Fétis's 'Histoire générale de la musique' (5 vols., 1869-76) represent a real advance on the works of the 18th century. At the beginning of the 20th century we have the 'Oxford History of Music' and H. Riemann's 'Handbuch der Musikgeschichte'; in 1913 A. Lavignac's 'Encyclopédie de la musique' began to appear; in 1924 G. Adler's 'Handbuch der Musikgeschichte'; and in 1927 E. Bücken's 'Handbuch der Musikwissenschaft'. By the side of these monumental works there have appeared vast quantities of detailed studies of varying size, with the result that almost the whole field of music has now been covered. Perhaps the clearest idea of the revolution which took place during the 19th century in the conception of the scientia musicae and of the mass of work produced can be obtained by comparing the oldest extant dictionary of music (Tinctoris's 'Terminorum musicae diffinitorium', 1475) with the latest edition of the present Dictionary. Tinctoris's "dictionary" would barely cover ten pages in the format of Grove's Dictionary.

SYNOPSIS OF METHODOLOGICAL SYSTEMS UP TO THE PRESENT TIME.—We have seen that the second half of the 19th century saw the birth of the scientific spirit in the treatment of the problems of musical history. A natural corollary of this was the appearance of a number of scholars concerned with the exact nature of their studies. (1) The first of these was Friedrich Chrysander, the editor of the complete edition of Handel's works. In his preface to the 'Jahrbücher für musikalische Wissenschaft' he explained that he had chosen the word Wissenschaft (science) in order to emphasize the fact that musical research would be content with nothing less than the standard of seriousness and accuracy demanded by the other, older branches of science. He looked for an aesthetic of music arrived at from the point of view of the artist and his work, not from that of his audience. This short programme was admirably suited to Chrysander's day, when the scientific study of the arts suffered much from obsolete and useless aesthetic slogans.

(2) The 'Jahrbücher' met with very little success and only appeared over a period of two years. The 'Vierteljahrsschrift für Musikwissenschaft', edited by Chrysander and Philipp Spitta, and directed by Guido Adler, had much greater success. The first volume (1885) opened with an essay by Guido Adler bearing the title 'Scope, Method and Object of Musical Science', in which he explained the programme of the quarterly. Adler starts from the thesis that all peoples who can be said to have an art of music also possess a science of music, undeveloped though it may be as a scientific system. He acknowledges that the concern with musical science will of necessity change with the status of music as an art; and he lays down—as has been demonstrated in the section dealing with method—that modern musical science must start with the composition. Following the theory of Greek antiquity, Adler classed music as a science and drew up the following table, which shows for the first time the full extent of the province of musicology¹:

¹ This table is repeated, with a few variations noted here, in Adler's 'Methode der Musikgeschichte' (1919), a book to which too little attention has been paid. It is designed for students and provides an excellent introduction to the whole field of musical history. In the years 1898–1927, when he was director of the Music History Institute of Vienna University, Adler carried out the programme outlined above. Musical theory was taught by A. Schoenberg, K. Weigl and H. Gál; mensural theory by Koller, one of the editors of the Trent Codices; lute tablatures by Koszicz; the study of medieval theorists and neume notation by Adler himself.

MUSICAL SCIENCE

- I. Historical section (history of music arranged by epochs, peoples, empires, countries, provinces, towns, schools, individual artists).
 - A. Musical palaeography (systems of notation).
 - B. Historical basic forms (grouping of musical forms).
 - C. Laws:
 - (1) As they occur in the compositions of each epoch;
 - (2) As they are conceived and taught by the theorists of each period;
 - (3) As they appear in the practice of the arts.
 - D. Musical instruments.
- II. Systematic section (tabulation of the chief laws applicable to the various branches of music).
 - A. Investigation and justification of these laws in:
 - (1) Harmony;
 - (2) Rhythm;
 - (3) Melody.
 - B. Aesthetics and psychology of music:
 - (1) Comparison and estimation of value and their relation to apperceptive subjects;
 - (2) Complex of questions either directly or indirectly connected with the foregoing.
 - C. Musical pedagogics:
 - (1) The general teaching of music;
 - (2) Teaching of harmony;
 - (3) Counterpoint;
 - (4) Teaching of composition;
 - (5) Teaching of orchestration;
 - (6) Methods of teaching singing and instrumental playing.
 - D. Musicology (research and comparative studies in connection with folklore and ethnography).

Sciences contributory to the historical section: General History and Palaeography, Chronology, Diplomacy, Bibliography, Knowledge of Library and Archive Methods, Literature and Languages, Liturgiology, History of the Mimetic Arts and the Dance, Biography, etc.

Sciences contributing to the systematic section: Acoustics and Mathematics, Physiology (sensations of sound), Psychology, Logic, Grammar, Metrics and Poetics, Pedagogics, Aesthetics, etc.

Adler starts with the appearance of musical science as theoretical observation, as opposed to the sound-product arranged by fantasy and subject to primitive aesthetic norms. At first science tried to fix, determine and explain sound-data, i.e. methodologically considered; this was theory concerned with norms (rules). This was not an historical science until musical composition became the object of investigation. Adler then illustrated the methods necessary for the determination of the qualities required by a work of art.

Palacography must come first, to enable the student to transliterate a composition, as far as possible, from the original into our modern notation. Then follows the examination of the composition, its rhythmic, melodic and harmonic structure, its form and method of performance: this enables the student to date the work. Style is the sum-total of the characteristics of a work which, apart from technical questions, determine its character. The great virtue of Adler's research lies in the examination of stylistic hallmarks and the building up of a method of stylistic investigation (Stilkritik). In this he resembled C. H. H. Parry, whose 'Style in Musical Art' appeared in the same year as Adler's 'Der Stil in der Musik', a significant fact in the development of the study of musical history.

The study of style is the last stage of the research into general factors; after this there remain only the personal factors which determine the individual character and worth of each separate work.

(3) An essay of Hermann Kretzschmar's, which appeared in the 'Jahrbuch der Musikbibliothek Peters' (1907), deserves attention. It bears the title 'A Few Considerations of the Purpose, Development and the Task of Music in the Immediate Future', and in it Kretzschmar points out that in all other branches of artistic study the history of art is given priority, while in music history tends to be sacrificed to semi-scientific theory.

(4) H. Riemann starts from quite a different point of view in his 'Grundriss der Musikwissenschaft'. As we have seen, Adler and Kretzschmar start from the musical composition as the object of research and so arrive naturally at the priority of musical history, all other branches of study merely playing secondary parts in the investigation of the origin and development of the musical composition. Riemann, on the other hand, starts from the psychological act of artistic creation, the exteriorization of the creation of the artist's inner vision, which has artistic worth as a new object. This method leads logically to a psychology of the artist, but it can never completely explain the complex ingredients which make up a musical composition. It opens the door to fruitless aesthetic speculation, very different from that of H. Mersmann's brilliant 'Musikaesthetik' (1926), which demonstrates the possible value of aesthetic investigations and the attempt to explain a work of art from the philosophical and physiological standpoints.

In the systems which have been outlined in this article it is possible to distinguish two methods of approach. The first tries to collect all the facts pertaining to music in order to investigate, on the basis of natural science, the general laws of the process, from its first origins in the appearance of musical sound to the completed musical composition. The second starts from the work of art seen as part of the cultural achievement of the age to which it belongs. The musicologist is led to consider what such a work reveals to him about the period, but also to describe what gives it its special significance, its uniqueness as a work of art.

In order to examine the specific qualities of a work of art the student must first compare it with other works of its own period and with those of the preceding and following periods to discover in what respects it differs from other works of art and in what its significance lies. He will then try to describe as faithfully as possible its specific qualities. He must consider himself an historian, not a mere chronicler. The work of art must live in him; he must — to quote Benedetto Croce¹ — apprehend its individuality by thinking himself into it. This is the supreme task of the musicologist.

When, towards the end of the 19th century, systematic study of the history of music began and more and more works of art were discovered and transcribed from manuscripts, the student was principally concerned to explain the development of the various schools of composers. For this pioneer work the stilkritische Methode was an excellent means of studying the technique of composition in various periods, and this method must still remain the basis of our investigations.

However, once this task is achieved, the musicologist must operate as an historian. It will depend upon the greatness of his own experience of them how far he will succeed in presenting as living things the works which he studies.

E. J. W.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ADLER, G., 'Methode der Musikgeschichte' (Leipzig, 1919).
 BERNHEIM, E., 'Lehrbuch der historischen Methode' (Leipzig, 1908).
 COLLINGWOOD, R. G., 'The Idea of History' (Oxford, 1946).
 CROCE, B., 'Theory and History of Historiography' (London, 1921).
 GÉROLD, TH., 'Les Pères de l'Église et la musique' (Paris, 1931).
 'La Musique au moyen-âge' (Paris, 1932).
 PFITSCH, G., 'Die Klassifikation der Musik von Boetius bis Ugolino von Orvieto' (Halle, 1929).
 'Die Musik im Erziehungs- und Bildungsideal des ausgehenden Altertums und frühen Mittelalters' (Halle, 1932).
 RICKERT, H., 'Kulturwissenschaft und Naturwissenschaft: die Grenzen der naturwissenschaftlichen Begriffsbildung' (Tübingen, 1913).
 RIEMANN, H., 'Geschichte der Musiktheorie im IX.-XIX. Jahrhundert' (Leipzig, 1898).
 'Grundriss der Musikwissenschaft' (Leipzig, 1914).

¹ 'Teoria della storia della storiografia' (Bari, 1917), p. 119, Eng. trans. (London, 1921), pp. 134-35.

WAGNER, P., 'Zur Musikgeschichte der Universität' (A.M.W. III).
WELLESZ, E., 'Die Grundlagen der musikgeschichtlichen Forschung' (A.M.W. I).

MUSIKALISCHE OPFER, DAS (Ger. = 'The Musical Offering'). The title of one of Bach's works, containing various treatments of a subject given him by Frederick the Great to extemporize upon during his visit to Potsdam in May 1747. The work, as published by Breitkopf & Härtel (Nov. 1831), contains two ricercari, one in three parts and one in six parts (the latter in score), one Fuga canonica in two parts, a Sonata for flute (the king's own instrument), violin and continuo, and eight canons. The work was published by Bach with a dedication dated 7 July 1747 — a curious medley of five sheets oblong folio and one sheet upright folio, containing the Ricercar a 3 and a canon perpetuus (the third in B. & H.'s edition), five canons and the Fuga canonica. In the dedication copy, in the Amalienbibliothek of Berlin, Bach wrote "Regis Iussu Cantio Et Reliqua Canonica Arte Resoluta" — "the theme demanded by the king with other things developed by canonical art". Four more oblong folio sheets seem to have been added afterwards, containing the Ricercar a 6 and two canons, and lastly three sheets containing the Sonata and one canon. G.

BIBL.—SPITTA, PHILIPP, 'Bach', Eng. trans., III, 191-97, 233, 292, 294.

MUSIKALISKA KONSTFÖRENINGEN.

The Swedish "Society of Musical Art", founded in Stockholm in 1859 for the purpose of printing works by Swedish composers. Its publications, which are issued annually, comprise vocal, instrumental and operatic works and incidental music by composers of the 19th and 20th centuries; also a few works dating from an earlier period, and one composition by Grieg. The dates given in brackets denote the years of issue.

Hallström, I., 'Blommornas undran', idyll for solo voices, chorus & pf. (1860).
Söderman, J. A., 'Tannhäuser' [sic], ballad for baritone & orch. (Geibel) (1860).
Boom, J. van, Grand Sonata for pf. (1861).
Stenhammar, P. U., 4 Songs with pf. (1861).
Wennerberg, G., 'The Birth of Christ', oratorio (1862).
Bauck, C. W., String Quartet (1863).
Gille, J. E., Mass No. 7, A ma. (1863).
Gille, J. E., Trio for vn., cello & pf. (1863).
Lindroth, A. F., 5 Studies for vn. solo (1864).
Andrée, E., Pf. Quintet (1865).
Lindegren, J., Fugue in free style for pf. (1866).
Söderman, J. A., 'Quamruinen', ballad for baritone & orch. (1866).
Lindegren, J., Grand Sonata, canon, for pf., Op. 2 (1867).
Grieg, E. H., 'In Autumn', fantasy for pf. duet, Op. 11 (1869).
Hyllen, O. W., String Quartet (1870).
Heintze, G. W., Grand Sonata for pf. (1871).
Norman, F. V. L., Symphony No. 2, E♭ ma., Op. 40, arr. for pf. duet (1873).
Dannström, J. I., 3 Songs for tenor & mixed chorus (1875).

MUSIKALISKA KONSTFÖRENINGEN

Andersen, A. J., Sonata for cello & pf. (1877).
Arlberg, G. E. F., 'I skogen', tone poem for orch., Op. 10 (1877).
Arlberg, G. E. F., the same, arr. for pf. duet (1877).
Maier, A., Sonata for vn. & pf. (1878).
Sjögren, J. G. E., 7 Songs for voice and pf., Op. 3 (1880).
Söderman, J. A., Catholic Mass for four solo voices, chorus & orch. (1881), vocal score.
Klint, F. W., String Quartet, Op. 25 No. 2 (1882).
Berwald, F., 'Estrella de Soria', grand romantic opera (1883), vocal score.
Lindroth, A. F., Andante and Bolero for vn. & pf. (1884).
Andrée, E., 'Snöfrid', ballad for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1884).
Norman, F. V. L., Symphony No. 3, D mi., for full orch., Op. 58 (1885).
Lindblad, A. F., Quintet for 2 vns., 2 violas & cello (1885), parts only.
Lindblad, A. F., the same, arr. for pf. duet (1885).
Norman, F. V. L., Symphony No. 3, D mi., Op. 58, arr. for pf. duet (1885).
Valentin, K. F., 8 Songs for voice and pf., Op. 7 (1886).
Rubenson, A., 'En Natt bland fjellen', operetta (1887), vocal score.
Andrée, E., Trio for vn., cello & pf. (1887).
Aulin, L. V., String Quartet (1888).
Jacobsson, J., 'Cavatina' for tenor and orch. (1888).
Åkerberg, C. E. E., Pf. Quintet (1889).
Andersson, R., Sonata for pf. (1889).
Dente, J., Symphony, D mi. for full orch. (score) (1890).
Dente, J., the same, for pf. duet (1890).
Lundh, L. A., Requiem for chorus & orch. (1891).
Söderman, J. A., 'Ode to Joy' (Schiller) for men's chorus & orch. (1891).
Hallén, J. A., 'En Sommersaga', symph. concert piece for orch., Op. 36, arr. for pf. duet (1892).
Lindblad, A. F., 'Allegro, Andante, Scherzo' for vn. & pf. (1892).
Söderman, J. A., 'Signe Lills fard', concert poem for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1892).
Beckman, B., Sonata for vn. & pf., Op. 1 (1893).
Berwald, F., Grand Septet for vn., viola, clar., bassoon, horn, cello & double bass (parts) (1893).
Berwald, F., the same, arr. for pf. (1893).
Wennerberg, G., 'Stabat Mater' for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1894), vocal score.
Back, K., Theme and Variations for pf., Op. 2 (1895).
Norman, F. V. L., Concert Overture, E♭ ma. for full orch., Op. 21, arr. for pf. duet (1895).
Jacobsson, J., 3 Pieces for clar., viola & pf., Op. 45 (1896).
Korling, S. A., 'Hätunaleken', ballad for solo voices, chorus & pf. (1896).
Bystrom, O. F. B., Symphony for orch., arr. for pf. duet (1897).
Hallström, I., Cantata for the 25 years' Jubilee of the reign of King Oskar II, for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1897), vocal score.
Berwald, F., Duo for vn. & pf. (1898).
Hallén, J. A., 'Skogsrädet', for tenor-baritone & orch., Op. 33 (1898).
Sjöberg, S. L., Sonata, A mi., for vn. & pf., Op. 2 (1899).
Stenhammar, P. U., 'David och Saul', oratorio for solo voices, chorus & organ (1900).
Back, K., 'Tomten', for baritone & orch., Op. 5 (1900), vocal score.
Rubenson, A., Selection from the music to 'Halte-Hulda', a play (1902).
Rubenson, A., Symphonic Intermezzo No. 1 for orch. (1902), pf. score.
Andersen, A. J., Symphony, D ma. for full orch., arr. for 2 pfs. (1903).
Sjögren, J. G. E., Sonata No. 2, A ma., for pf., Op. 44 (1904).
Beckman, B., 'Om lyckan', tone poem for orch., Op. 10 (1904).
Berwald, F., 'Symphonie singulière', C ma., for full orch., version for pf. duet (1905).
Berwald, F., Symphony, G mi. ('Symphonie sérieuse') arr. for pf. duet (1905).
Hallén, J. A., A Christmas Oratorio, for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1905).
Alfvén, H., 'Vid sekelskiftet' (E. A. Karlfeldt), cantata for solo, chorus & orch., Op. 12 (1906).
Stenhammar, W., 'Ithaka', poem for baritone & orch., Op. 21 (1906).
Sjögren, J. G. E., 6 Hymns and Psalms for solo voices, chorus & organ (1908).

¹ Sometimes wrongly translated as "sacrifice", another sense of the German word Opfer.

- Lindgren, J., Quintet for 2 vns., 2 violas & cello (1908).
 Alfvén, H., 'Herrans Bon' (Stagnelius), for solo voices, chorus & orch., Op. 15 (1910).
 Fryklof, H., Fugue for pf. (1910).
 Norman, F. V. L., 3 Overtures for orch. (1911).
 Norman, F. V. L., Trio No. 2, B mi., for vn., cello & pf., Op. 38 (1911).
 Olsson, O. E., 'Te Deum' for chorus, stg. orch., harp & organ, Op. 25 (1912).
 Olsson, O. E., String Quartet No. 2, G ma., Op. 27 (1913).
 Sjogren, J. G. E., 5 Poems for voice and pf., Op. 63 (1914).
 Alfvén, H., 'Uppenbarelsekanter', Op. 31, for bass and baritone, 2 choirs, organ, harmonium, stg. 4tet, harp & celesta (1916).
 Lundberg, L. A., Pf. Sonata, Op. 33 (1915).
 Hallén, J. A., 'Den unge Herr Sten Sture', melodrama and funeral march for full orch., Op. 35 (1916), pf. score.
 Henneberg, K., 'Serenade', octet for flute, oboe, 2 clars., 2 horns & 2 bassoons (1916).
 Rangstrom, T., 6 Songs (1916).
 Atterberg, K., String Quartet, Op. 11 (1919).
 Olsson, O. E., 6 Latin Hymns for chorus a cappella (1917).
 Jonsson, J., 'Koralrevet', symphonic poem for baritone, chorus & orch., Op. 10 (1919).
 Fryklof, H., 'Sonata à la legenda' (3), for vn. & pf. (1919).
 Alfvén, H., Cantata for the Reformation Festival at Uppsala, 31 Oct. 1917, Op. 36 (1921), vocal score.
 Berwald, F., 'Älvlek', tone picture for full orch. (1921), arr. for pf. duet.
 Bratt, L., 6 Intimate Songs for voice and pf. (1923).
 Stenhammar, W., 'Sängen', symph. cantata for solo voices, chorus & orch., Op. 44 (1924), pf. score.
 Sjogren, J. G. E., 'Islandsfard' (Holger Drachmann), for men's chorus & orch., Op. 18 (1925), vocal score.
 Fryklof, H., Symphonic Piece for organ (1926).
 Berg, N., 'Hoga Visan' ('The Song of Songs'), for solo voices, choruses & full orch. (1926).
 Skold, Y., 'Preludio e fuga' for pf., Op. 20 (1927).
 Skold, Y., Sonatina for vn. & pf., Op. 23 (1927).
 Stenhammar, W., String Quartet No. 6, D mi., Op. 35 (1928), parts only.
 Stenhammar, W., 5 Songs for voice and pf. (1928).
 Fryklof, H., Passacaglia for organ (1929).
 Lindberg, O., Requiem for solo voices, chorus, orch. & organ (1929), vocal score.
 Atterberg, K., Sonata for a string instrument, cello, viola, vn. & pf., Op. 27 (1930).
 Hakanson, K., 10 Variations and Fugue for pf., Op. 37 (1930).
 Rangstrom, T., 4 Poems (songs) (1930).
 Hagquinius, A., String Quartet (1931).
 Nordquist, G., 'Dryaden', 3 songs (1931).
 Frausén, O. N. (editor), Funeral music on the occasion of Gustav II Adolf's death: T. Bolzius, 'Threnodier', 1632; A. Düben, 'Pugna triumphalis', 1634 (1932).
 Melchers, H. M., Sonata for vn. & pf., Op. 22 (1932).
 Alfvén, H., 'Unge Herr Sten Sture', for baritone, men's chorus & orch., Op. 30 (1933).
 Lindberg, O., 'Jungfru Maria', song (E. A. Karlfeldt), pf. score (1934).
 Ohlsson, R., String Quartet No. 3 (1934).
 Frumerie, G. de, 4 Chinese Poems (1935).
 Frumerie, G. de, Sonata for vn. & pf. (1935).
 Alfvén, H., Cantata in celebration of the quinquenary of the Swedish Riksdag (1936), vocal score.
 Mankell, H., Barcarole for pf., Op. 60 No. 1 (1936).
 Bystrom, O. F. B., String Quartet No. 2 (1937).
 Rangstrom, T., 'Hennes ord', 3 songs for voice and pf. or orch. (1937).
 Rangström, T., 'Trolltyg', 2 ballads for voice and pf. or orch. (1937).
 Jonsson, J., 'Missa solemnis' for chorus, orch. & organ, Op. 37 (1938), vocal score.
 Rangström, T., 'Den Utvalda', lyrical scena for soprano & orch. (1939), vocal score.
 Lilja, B., 'Andante religioso' for organ (1940).
 Melchers, H. M., Sonata for cello & pf. (1940).
 Skold, Y., Fantasy for viola & organ, Op. 12 (1941).
 Peterson-Berger, W., Cantata for the 150 years' Jubilee of the Royal Theatre, Stockholm, for solo voices, chorus & orch. (1942), vocal score.
 Mankell, H., Andante and Variations for pf., Op. 57 (1943).

- Heintze, G. H., pf. Trio, Op. 17 (1944).
 Hallnas, H., Sonata for viola & pf., Op. 19 (1945).
 Koch, E. von, String Quartet No. 2, Op. 28 (1946).

K. D.

MUSIKFORSCHUNG, GESELLSCHAFT FÜR. See PUBLIKATIONEN DER GESELLSCHAFT FÜR MUSIKFORSCHUNG.

MUSIL, František (b. Prague, 5 Nov. 1852; d. Brno, 28 Nov. 1908).

Czech organist and composer. From his boyhood he devoted himself to music and was educated mainly in the Proksch Institute in Prague. From 1865 to 1868 he studied at the School for Organists there. Having completed his student years he worked in Prague and in 1870 was appointed cathedral organist at Brno, a post he held until his death. He was an excellent organist, particularly celebrated as an extemporizer, and at the same time an influential teacher and a well-esteemed composer. His works, mainly in the field of church and organ music ('Stabat Mater', 15 masses, 2 Requiems, sonatas, preludes, fugues), but also including valuable writing for orchestra and chamber music as well as choruses and songs, were warmly recognized for their sober inventiveness and perfect workmanship. Next to Janáček Musil was the outstanding factor in the musical life of the Moravian capital before the first world war.

G. Č.

MUSIN, Ovide (b. Nandrin nr. Liège, 22 Sept. 1854; d. Brooklyn, N.Y., Nov. 1929).

Belgian violinist. He entered the Liège Conservatory in 1863 and was a pupil of Hyneberg, taking a first prize for violin playing. In 1870 Henri Léonard was appointed professor at the Liège Conservatory; Musin studied with him, and eventually followed him to the Paris Conservatoire, where he was awarded the gold medal. He made his début replacing Léonard at a concert. After touring in France he visited Holland in 1875 and, meeting the impresario Jarreth, was engaged by him for a prolonged tour. Under Mapleson's direction he went to London in 1877, remaining for five years. Finally he made a tour round the world, returned to Liège in 1897 and succeeded César Thomson as violin professor at the Conservatory. His last appearance in London was on 6 May 1888, at the Prince's Hall, where he played Leopold Damrosch's 'Concertstück' for violin and orchestra under the baton of Walter Damrosch. Subsequently his residence was divided between Brussels and New York.

E. H.-A.

MUSIQUE MESURÉE (Fr., measured music). Music set to words by French 16th-century composers in a way that rated verbal metre above musical rhythm. The verse furnished the rhythm for the music, which was not written out in longer and shorter note-values, but followed the natural declamation of the words closely. Balf, Le Jeune and Mauduit were among the chief exponents of musique mesurée, which did not long survive, nor spread to other countries.

Musset, Alfred de. See Barraud (orch. suite for comedy). Bedyts ('Il ne faut jurer', incid. m.; songs). Bizet ('Djamileh', opera; 2 songs). Chausson ('Caprices de Marianne', opera). Chopin (acquaintance with). Debussy ('Rondeau', song). Delibes (songs). Djamileh (Bizet). Franck (C., song). Gil-Marchex (song). Gneccchi ('Rosiera', opera). Goossens (3, 2 songs). Honegger ('Fantasio', incid. m.). Huré (do.). Lalo (E., 4 songs). Lesur ('Andrea del Sarto', overture). Liszt (No. 327, song). Messenger ('Fortunio', operetta). Monpou (songs). Moór ('Pompadour', opera). Nottara ('On ne badine pas', opera). Offenbach (song in 'Chandelier'; 'Chanson de Fortunio' & 'Fantasio', operettas). Pierné ('On ne badine pas', opera; 3 songs). Puccini ('Edgar', opera). Rey ('Faire sans dire', opera). Saint-Saëns ('On ne badine pas . . .', incid. m.). Sauguet ('A quoi rêvent . . .', do.). Smyth (E., 'Fantasio', opera). Tchaikovsky (song). Wood (R., 'Vision' for voice & chamber m.). Zecchi ('Barberine', incid. m.).

MUSSORGSKY, Modest Petrovich (b. Karevo, Govt. of Pskov, 21 Mar. 1839; d. St. Petersburg, 28 Mar. 1881).

Russian composer. He was the youngest son of a well-to-do landowner, but had peasant blood, his paternal grandmother having been a serf. According to a not altogether reliable autobiographical sketch written in 1881 in the third person, under his nurse's influence he became familiar with Russian fairy-tales, and it was mainly this contact with the spirit of the life of the people which impelled him to improvise music before he had learned even the most elementary rules of pianoforte playing. His mother gave him his first lessons and he made such progress that at seven he played small pieces for Liszt and at nine a concerto of Field's before a large audience in his parents' house. Beginning in Aug. 1849, he had piano lessons from Anton Herke, a pupil of Henselt. His general education was continued first at a preparatory school, then with a tutor, and in 1852 he entered the Cadet School of the Guards in St. Petersburg, where, according to his surviving elder brother, he was specially interested in history and German philosophy. During his first year at the Cadet School he composed a 'Porte-Enseigne Polka', dedicated to his schoolfellows, which was published at his father's expense. He was in the school choir, and the religious instructor, Father Krupsky, encouraged him to study the church music of Bortniansky and other Russian composers of the early 19th century. The pianoforte lessons with Herke ended in 1854. Mussorgsky had learned nothing of harmony or composition; nevertheless in 1856 he tried to write an opera based on Victor Hugo's 'Hans d'Islande'. The same year he left the Cadet School and entered the Preobrazhensky Regiment of Guards. Borodin, who met him at this period, describes him as an elegant pianoforte-playing dilettante.

In 1857 Mussorgsky made the acquaintance of Dargomizhsky, already an established composer, and César Cui, like himself a young military officer dabbling in composition; through them, in turn, he met Balakirev and the art critic V. V. Stassov. Before long he induced Balakirev, his senior by only three years, to give him lessons in musical form based mainly on Beethoven's symphonies (which they played in four-hand arrangements), but also on compositions by Schubert, Schumann, Glinka and others. From this period date a song, 'Where art thou, little star?', and a 'Souvenir d'enfance' for piano, and in 1858 he wrote more songs, piano Sonatas in E♭ major and F♯ minor, and the introduction to an opera based on Ozerov's play 'Oedipus in Athens', a project finally abandoned only in 1860. During the summer of 1858 he passed through a nervous or spiritual crisis and on 17 July he resigned his commission; work with Balakirev was resumed later in the year and in Nov. Mussorgsky composed two Scherzos, one in C♯ minor for pianoforte, the other in B♭ major which he orchestrated with Balakirev's assistance. A visit to Moscow in the summer of 1859 fired his patriotic imagination and provided him with one of the deepest experiences of his youth: "You know I have been a cosmopolitan", he wrote to Balakirev, "but now — I have undergone a sort of rebirth: I have been brought near to everything Russian." But this mood was not reflected in his next compositions, a mildly Schumannesque 'Impromptu passionné' for piano, suggested by two characters in Herzen's novel 'Who is to Blame?', and a cantata, 'Shamil's March', for solo voices, chorus and orchestra. On 23 Jan. 1860 his Scherzo in B♭ was conducted by Anton Rubinstein at a concert in St. Petersburg of the newly founded Russian Music Society.

The year 1860 was marked by another nervous crisis: "during the greater part of this time, from May to Aug., my brain was weak and in a state of violent irritability". But in the autumn he announced his recovery and his intention to put all his "musical sins" in order and begin a new period of his musical life. He had already toyed with the idea of an opera based on Gogol's story 'St. John's Eve', and he now seems to have thought of using material originally intended for this in a setting of the witches' sabbath scene on the Bare Mountain from a completely unknown play, Mengden's 'The Witches'. Shortly afterwards (Dec. 1860–Jan. 1861) he produced an Allegro in C major for four hands, a dyet transcription in C minor of his Scherzo in C♯ minor, the beginnings of two movements of a Symphony in D major and an "essay in instrumentation", 'Alla marcia notturna'. That his nervous irritability was not entirely calmed appears from his petulant complaints that Balakirev was "keeping him in leading-strings" and his rejection of an opportunity to have the temple scene from his 'Oedipus' performed by the Russian Music Society. The scene was, however, given a concert performance in the Maryinsky Theatre, St. Petersburg, on 18 Apr. 1861, under K. A. Liadov.

The emancipation of the serfs in Mar. 1861 involved Mussorgsky in family difficulties. He was obliged to spend a great part of the next two years in the country, assisting his only surviving brother in the management of the family estate of Karevo. The projected D major Symphony came to nothing, like the 'Oedipus' opera, and both Stasov and Balakirev regretfully agreed that "Mussorgsky is almost an idiot". Yet he had already written the characteristic 'Intermezzo in modo classico' (inspired by a country scene) in its original form for piano solo (wint. r 1861), and in the summer of 1863 he composed two songs, a setting of 'An die Türen will ich schleichen' from 'Wilhelm Meister' and a translation of Byron's 'Song of Saul before the Battle', which announce the imminence of artistic maturity. 'King Saul' may have been written under the influence of Serov's opera 'Judith', which Mussorgsky had recently heard; under the combined impact of 'Judith' and the reading of Flaubert's 'Salammbô' he began in the autumn of 1863 to write the libretto of an opera on 'Salammbô', interweaving his own verses with borrowings from Heine and from Russian poets, and taking his stage directions wholesale from Flaubert. The music of 'Salammbô', on which he worked intermittently until the summer of 1866, includes a certain amount of salvage from 'Oedipus', but some of it, in turn, could later be transferred with little alteration to 'Boris Godunov'.

Financial straits now obliged Mussorgsky to enter the Civil Service. On 13 Dec. 1863 he was posted to the Chief Engineering Department of the Ministry of Communications, with the rank of collegiate secretary, and on the following 1 Feb. he was appointed assistant head clerk of the Barracks Section of the Department. This period of service lasted less than four years; on 13 Dec. 1866 he was promoted to the rank of titular councillor, but a few months later (10 May 1867) dismissed from the Ministry. Even before entering the service and beginning 'Salammbô' Mussorgsky had settled again in St. Petersburg (autumn 1863) in conditions that, under the influence of Tchernishevsky's recently published novel 'What is to be Done?', had suddenly become popular among the younger Russian intellectuals: he joined a "commune" with five other young men, living in the same flat and ardently cultivating and exchanging advanced ideas on art, religion, philosophy and politics.

(One member of the "commune", V. A. Loginov, provided him with the theme of a 'Reverie' for pianoforte.) 'Salammbô' was one of the books read by the "commune" and, according to Stasov, it was during the years of "communal" life that Mussorgsky absorbed those views (put forward above all in the writings of Tchernishevsky and Dobroliubov) on "artistic truth" and the necessity of subordinating art to "life", which he spent his remaining years in working out. The earliest evidence of the new tendency was the first version of the song 'Kalistratushka'. Further essays in the same direction were the two piano pieces 'From Memories of Childhood', written in Apr. 1865, after his mother's death. That last event was the probable cause of Mussorgsky's first serious bout of dipsomania, which ended in an attack of delirium tremens necessitating his removal from the "commune" to his brother's flat (autumn 1865).

Work on 'Salammbô' seems to have been abandoned in the summer of 1866, although 'The Destruction of Sennacherib' for chorus and orchestra (Jan. 1867; performed in St. Petersburg, under Balakirev, two months later) belongs to the same circle of ideas. But between 14 Sept. and 9 Oct. 1866 Mussorgsky had written three songs - 'Darling Savishna', 'You drunken sot' and 'The Seminarist' - which unmistakably mark the beginning of the full stream of musical naturalism and ironic, realistic comedy in song, and the flow of songs in this vein continued throughout 1867. In that year two of them, 'Darling Savishna' and 'Hopak', were published by Johannsen: the first of Mussorgsky's works to appear in print since the 'Porte-Enseigne Polka'. Freed from government service and living in the country at his brother's house at Minkino during the summer of 1867, Mussorgsky occupied himself with orchestral composition and the pianoforte transcription of movements from Beethoven's posthumous quartets; the orchestral works were: (a) a piece based on the old 'Witches' music, 'St. John's Night on the Bare Mountain' (not to be confused with the well-known piece constructed by Rimsky-Korsakov after the composer's death); (b) an orchestral version of the 'Intermezzo in modo classico', with an additional trio; (c) an unfinished symphonic poem 'Podélbrad of Bohemia', written under the excitement of the Pan-Slav Congress held earlier in the summer.

Returning to St. Petersburg in the autumn, Mussorgsky, in common with the other members of the Balakirev-Stasov circle (who had just been ironically dubbed "the mighty handful"), became specially interested in Dargomizhsky, then engaged on his most extreme experiment in operatic naturalism, 'The Stone Guest'. Mussorgsky found his own tendencies strongly reinforced, and on 23

June 1868 embarked on his own most daring essay, a setting of Gogol's prose comedy 'The Marriage'; the first act was completed by 20 July, but the work was carried no farther. The completed act was privately performed at Cui's on 6 Oct., the composer himself singing the part of the hero; but even Dargomizhsky and his other friends felt that experimentalism had been carried too far. Stassov alone was roused to closer interest in Mussorgsky's work and from that time onward became his adviser and champion. Mussorgsky was by this time interested in a fresh project, in which he was able to blend realism with his older strain of romantic lyricism, an opera on the subject of 'Boris Godunov', the libretto (by himself) being based largely on Pushkin's play. The first scene was completed in vocal score on 12 Nov. On 2 Jan. 1869 Mussorgsky re-entered the government service as assistant head clerk in the third section of the Forestry Department of the Ministry of State Property; he was able to live with old friends, the brother and sister A. P. and N. P. Opochinin; and in these settled conditions the original version of 'Boris', in seven scenes, was completed in vocal score by the end of July 1869, and in full score on 27 Dec. A fortnight before the completion of the full score Mussorgsky was promoted to the rank of collegiate assessor.

In July 1870 Mussorgsky began negotiations for a production of 'Boris' and embarked on the composition of a new opera, 'Bobil', of which the music of one completed scene was later transferred to 'Khovanshchina'. In the period Sept.—Dec. he wrote four naturalistic studies of child life, songs to his own words, which with one earlier piece in the same vein were published as a cycle, 'The Nursery'; two more were added in the second edition. But Mussorgsky was soon obliged to return to 'Boris'. On 22 Feb. 1871 the opera committee of the Maryinsky Theatre rejected his score and, very easily offended though he was, he began with unusual meekness to recast his work: introducing the present third act and the final scene of revolutionary anarchy, eliminating the scene before St. Basil's Cathedral and making other drastic changes. This second version, consisting of a prologue and four acts, was completed in full score on 5 July 1872. During the latter part of the work (autumn 1871 onward) Mussorgsky shared an apartment with another composer of the Balakirev group, Rimsky-Korsakov, then engaged on his opera 'Pskovitianka', and in the spring of 1872 both composers interrupted their operas to collaborate with two others of their circle (Borodin and Cui) in a projected opera-ballet, 'Mlada', which remained uncompleted. For part of his contribution to 'Mlada' Mussorgsky again drew on his old 'Oedipus' music and his 'Night on the Bare Mountain';

'Mlada' in turn yielded material for later compositions. From that period the Balakirev circle tended to disintegrate.

On 17 Feb. 1872 the finale of the first act of 'Boris' was performed at a concert of the Russian Music Society in St. Petersburg, under Nápravnik, and on 15 Apr. Balakirev conducted the polonaise at a concert of the Free School of Music. But in the autumn the opera committee of the imperial theatres rejected the second version as it had done the first. Nevertheless, on the initiative of some of the singers and in defiance of the committee, three scenes from 'Boris' were performed as part of a benefit performance for the stage manager of the Maryinsky Theatre on 17 Feb. 1873, and met with great success. A month or two later the publisher Bessel announced that he had acquired the rights in the opera and opened subscriptions for the vocal score. This was issued in Jan. 1874—it represents a modification of the "second version" proper—and on 8 Feb. 1874 'Boris Godunov' was produced at the Maryinsky Theatre, St. Petersburg, for the benefit of the singer Platonova. It was repeated a week later, and eight more performances were given in the course of the season.

In the meantime, since June–July 1872, Mussorgsky had on Stassov's suggestion been collecting historical and musical materials for another historical opera, 'Khovanshchina', dealing with the political disturbances under the regency which preceded Peter the Great's full accession to the throne. Instead of writing a complete libretto, or at least preparing a scenario, he appears to have confused himself by overmuch study of historical sources and then to have written fragments of libretto with too little reference to a definite plan. From this period date most of Mussorgsky's dicta on the function of art, the value of technique and so on, all expressed in letters to his confidant Stassov. In the summer of 1873 he formed a close friendship with a family connection, Count A. A. Golenishchev-Kutuzov, a poet of some ability, and agreed to share a flat with him. At the same period he began the music of 'Khovanshchina' on which he continued to work intermittently until Aug. 1880, the bulk of the composition being done in 1873 and 1875–76. He was no longer capable of sustained effort; under the influence of heavy drinking his character had begun to deteriorate seriously, and he confessed to "fits of dementia". Stassov failed to induce him to visit Liszt, who had expressed admiration of the 'Nursery' songs, and this friend's temporary absence in western Europe removed a restraining influence. Nevertheless Mussorgsky earned official promotion (13 Dec. 1873) to the grade of court councillor and was made senior head clerk of his department (17 Mar. 1875).

Even the successful production of 'Boris' had an unfortunate effect on the composer personally: it inflated his self-esteem and at the same time, owing to several unlucky circumstances, wounded it. Little was done to 'Khovanshchina' in 1874, although the familiar "introduction" dates from Sept. of that year. Between 31 May and 19 Nov. Mussorgsky composed the song-cycle 'Sunless', to poems by Golenishchev-Kutuzov, and during June the set of piano pieces 'Pictures from an Exhibition', suggested by a memorial exhibition of the architectural drawings, stage-designs and water-colours of his friend Victor Hartmann, who had died the year before. A more serious deflection from 'Khovanshchina' was the idea of a comic opera based on Gogol's short story 'Sorochintsy Fair', which occurred to him that summer, though he temporarily abandoned the project early in 1875. During the first half of 1875 were written the first three numbers of a new song-cycle to Golenishchev-Kutuzov's words: 'Songs and Dances of Death'. Mussorgsky then appears to have been temporarily estranged from the poet—who married a few months later—and was given a home by a retired naval officer, P. A. Naumov. At the same time he had drifted away from his earlier musical friends, Cui and Rimsky-Korsakov, partly because of their pursuit of different musical ideals, partly because of their very different ways of life.

During the spring of 1876 Mussorgsky was much concerned (with Liudmila Shestakova, Glinka's sister) in organizing the jubilee celebrations of the famous gypsy bass O. A. Petrov, the first Varlaam in 'Boris'. This event seems to have turned his thoughts back to 'Sorochintsy Fair', which had from the first been associated in his mind with that singer, and during the latter part of 1876 he worked at both the Gogol opera and 'Khovanshchina'. In the following year the latter was entirely thrust aside in favour of the 'Fair', but after Petrov's death (14 Mar. 1878) he cooled towards that in turn. At this period he was experimenting with a type of compromise between lyrical melody and subtly accurate, naturalistic declamation: "the incorporation of recitative in melody. . . . I should like to call it 'intelligently justified' melody." The results are apparent in some passages of the two operas and, more immediately, in a group of songs to poems by Alexey Tolstoy composed between 17 Mar. and 2 Apr. 1877. Later in the same year (14 July) he completed a short choral piece, 'Jesus Navin', based on two numbers of 'Salammbô'. During the earlier part of 1878 Mussorgsky appears to have led a more respectable life. Balakirev, just beginning to show himself again in the musical world after six years of retirement, was "pleasantly surprised" on meeting him. On 4 June he was promoted to collegiate councillor. Later in the summer there was a serious relapse but, thanks to the efforts of Stasov and Balakirev, Mussorgsky was transferred from the Forestry Department to a temporary post in the Revision Commission of Government Control, of which the director, the folksong enthusiast T. I. Filippov, proved an exceedingly lenient chief.

The following year Filippov was even so complaisant as to allow Mussorgsky leave for a three months' concert tour in the Ukraine, Crimea and the Don and Volga towns. An old acquaintance, the contralto Daria Leonova, invited him to make this provincial tour as her accompanist, and between 11 Aug. and 29 Oct. they gave concerts at Poltava, Elizavetgrad, Nikolayev, Kherson, Odessa, Sevastopol, Yalta, Rostov-on-Don, Novochevassk, Voronezh, Tambov and Tver.¹ Besides accompanying Leonova, who naturally included some of his songs in her programmes, Mussorgsky appeared as soloist in transcriptions of excerpts from his operas, including the coronation scene from 'Boris', the march of the Preobrazhensky Guards from 'Khovanshchina' and the 'Bare Mountain' music (now described as "a musical picture from a new comic opera, 'Sorochintsy Fair'"). At the later concerts he also played a "grand musical picture, 'Storm on the Black Sea'", which was never written down. Two slighter travel impressions for piano, 'On the Southern Shore of the Crimea', were published the following year.

On 13 Jan. 1880 Mussorgsky was at last obliged to leave the government service, but Filippov and other friends guaranteed him a monthly pension of a hundred rubles on condition that he finished 'Khovanshchina'. Unfortunately, shortly afterwards another group of well-wishers offered him a sum of eighty rubles on condition that he finished 'Sorochintsy Fair' within a year. (They also pressed him to make piano arrangements of excerpts from it for the publisher Bernard, and the popular 'Hopak' first appeared in this form.) In consequence both operas remained unfinished. During this last year of his life Mussorgsky made further appearances as Leonova's accompanist; she also took him with her to her summer villa at Oranienbaum and employed him as accompanist, theory teacher and factotum in the music school which she instituted in St. Petersburg.² Besides working at his two operas, he contemplated the composition of an orchestral suite on oriental themes and wrote (Jan. or Feb. 1880) a trio alla turca for a processional march on a Russian folksong, originally part of the 'Mlada' music. This "new" march, intended to accompany one of a series of "living pictures" of the reign of Alexander II, was performed under the title 'The Capture of Kars' by Nápravnik at a concert of the Russian Music Society in St. Petersburg on 30 Oct.

¹ The full programmes are given in 'M. P. Mussorgsky: K. Pyatidesyatiletiyu so dnya smerti', pp. 315-21 (see Bibl.).

² A number of folksong arrangements and vocalises written for the pupils are published in the Complete Edition of Mussorgsky's works, Vol. V, part x, Moscow-Leningrad, 1939.

On 15 Feb. 1881 Mussorgsky made his last public appearance, when Rimsky-Korsakov conducted 'The Destruction of Sennacherib' at a concert of the Free School of Music, and he acknowledged the applause. Eight days later he went to Leonova (according to her own account) "in a state of great nervous excitement", saying "that there was nothing left for him but to go and beg in the streets". That evening he had a fit of alcoholic epilepsy. He spent the night at Leonova's house and next day (24 Feb.) had three more fits. On 26 Feb. he was removed by his friends to the Nikolayevsky Military Hospital. During 14 to 17 Mar. there was a temporary improvement, during which Repin painted his famous portrait. On 28 Mar., at five o'clock in the morning, he died. He was buried two days later in the Alexander Nevsky Cemetery.

PUBLICATIONS.—Comparatively few of Mussorgsky's works were published during his lifetime; they include the vocal scores of the 1874 edition of 'Boris Godunov' (Bessel, St. Petersburg) and the first version of 'The Destruction of Sennacherib' (Büttner, St. Petersburg, 1871, in an 'Album of Choral Pieces' edited by A. I. Rubets). Of the songs seven were published by Johannsen of St. Petersburg:

'Tell me why', 'Darling Savishna', 'Hopak' (1867); 'Hebrew Song', 'Gathering Mushrooms', 'The Feast', 'The He-Goat' (1868);

one, 'The Classicist', by Bernard of St. Petersburg in 1870, nine by Bessel in 1871:

'King Saul' (2nd version), 'Night' (2nd version), 'The Magpie', 'The Ragamuffin', 'The Orphan', 'Eremushka's Lullaby', 'Child's Song', 'The Peepshow'.

In 1872 Bessel published the first five numbers of 'The Nursery', in 1873 Marfa's song from the third act of 'Khovanshchina', in 1874 the complete 'Sunless' cycle. Of the piano pieces the boyish 'Porte-Enseigne Polka' was published by Bernard in 1852; the same firm published the scherzino, 'The Seamstress', in the musical magazine 'Nouvelliste' in 1872, and 'Capriccio', 'Gurzuf' and 'Meditation' in Nos. 2, 6 and 11 of the 'Nouvelliste' for 1880. In 1873 Büttner published 'Ein Kinderscherz' and the first version of the 'Intermezzo in modo classico' (both in the 'Frühlingsblüthen-Album' edited by A. I. Rubets).

The editing of the posthumous publications was mainly — at first solely — carried out by Rimsky-Korsakov; the works were issued by Bessel. In Rimsky-Korsakov's opinion¹ Mussorgsky, though "so talented, original, full of so much that was new and vital", revealed in his manuscripts technical clumsiness: "absurd, disconnected harmony, ugly part-writing, sometimes strikingly illogical modulation, sometimes a depressing lack of it, unsuccessful scoring of the orchestral things. . . . Publication without some setting in order by a skilled hand would have had no sense, except a biographical-historical one"; if an "archaeologically exact edition" was called for after fifty years, one could always be produced; "what was needed at the moment was an edition for performance, for practical artistic aims, for familiarization with his enormous talent, not for the study of his personality and artistic transgressions". Accordingly every composition that passed through Rimsky-Korsakov's hands was to a greater or lesser degree "corrected" by him. In the case of the 'Bare Mountain' music he entirely rejected the completed (orchestral) version of 1867 and composed a fresh orchestral piece on Mussorgsky's various materials — approximating most nearly to the version with chorus which Mussorgsky had prepared for 'Soro-chintsy Fair'. The most important, and most necessary, of Rimsky-Korsakov's immediate tasks was the completion and orchestration of 'Khovanshchina', which was produced by an amateur group in St. Petersburg on 21 Feb. 1886; the vocal score of the Rimsky-Korsakov version was published by Bessel in 1883.²

Rimsky-Korsakov later turned his attention to the compositions published in Mussorgsky's lifetime and produced editions which for a number of years supplanted the authentic texts. When in 1898 Belayev reissued the seven songs originally published by Johannsen thirty years earlier, they were anonymously edited by Rimsky-Korsakov; he also edited for Bessel in 1908 new editions of the songs originally published by that firm, making few changes but producing a "free paraphrase" of the first number of 'The Nursery'. All these re-editions are of minor importance compared with his versions of 'Boris Godunov'. As early as 1888 he rescored the polonaise, in 1891-92 the coronation scene; in 1896 he produced a completely new version of the opera with drastic cuts, wholesale rewriting and complete rescoring of the surviving text, insertion of a certain amount of new music composed by himself and transposition of the order of the last two scenes. This version was produced privately in the Great Hall of the Petersburg Conservatory on 10 Dec. 1896, by the Mamontov Opera Company with Shaliapin (Moscow, 19 Dec. 1898; St. Petersburg, 19 Mar. 1899), and by the Imperial Theatres, again with Shaliapin (Moscow, 26 Apr. 1901; St. Petersburg, 22 Nov. 1904). The vocal score was published by Bessel. During 1906–8 Rimsky-Korsakov prepared a fresh version, also published in vocal score by Bessel, in which he restored the cuts but not the original text and left in his own additions. For the Paris production of 'Boris' (19 May 1908), the first in western Europe, he composed two fresh passages in the coronation scene.

¹ See his 'Record of my Musical Life', chap. xviii.

² For the first Paris production of 'Khovanshchina' (5 June 1913) passages omitted by Rimsky-Korsakov were orchestrated by Ravel and Stravinsky and inserted; Stravinsky composed the first chorus afresh from Mussorgsky's themes. (This first chorus was published by Bessel in 1913.) These insertions in the Rimsky-Korsakov version were balanced by drastic cuts.

Rimsky-Korsakov left the fragmentary 'Salammbô' untouched, but a year or two before his death he decided on the publication of the single act of 'Marriage', and the vocal score, edited by him with the relatively few changes mentioned in the preface to the score, was published by Bessel in 1908. Rimsky-Korsakov also began the orchestration, but completed only a few pages; the single act was subsequently orchestrated by the Soviet conductor Hauk and by Ravel. In 1931 Ippolitov-Ivanov composed and orchestrated the three remaining acts of Gogol's comedy. Rimsky-Korsakov made no attempt to edit 'Sorochintsy Fair' (except the 'Bare Mountain' music inserted in it); on his suggestion the completion of the libretto was entrusted to Golenishchev-Kutuzov, of the music to A. K. Liadov. Little was done, but in 1886 Bessel published Khivria's song and Parassia's dumka with piano, and the hopak for piano solo (all three in practically pure texts), and during the period 1904–14 a series of further numbers:

- (a) The parobok's dumka, edited and orchestrated by Liadov, with a vocal score (1904);
- (b) Liadov's orchestration of the hopak (with "piano arrangement" essentially identical with 1886 edition) (1904);
- (c) Liadov's rewritten version of the introduction, in full score and piano arrangements;
- (d) Introduction and fair scene, edited by V. G. Karatigin (vocal score) (1912);
- (e) Scene between Cherevik and the kum, edited by Karatigin (vocal score) (1912);
- (f) Comic scene from Act II, edited by Karatigin (vocal score) (1912);
- (g) Parassia's dumka, orchestrated by V. A. Senilov (1912);
- (h) Khivria's song, orchestrated by Liadov (with vocal score essentially identical with the 1886 edition) (1914).

Karatigin's edition and completion of the finale of Act II was engraved but never published. Of the Liadov-Karatigin numbers (c), (d) (fair scene only) and (f) were first performed as illustrations to a lecture on 'Sorochintsy Fair' by Karatigin, given privately at Count Osten-Drizen's in St. Petersburg, with piano and without chorus, on 29 Mar. 1911; they were repeated in public and with costumes and scenery, with the addition of the finale of Act II, in the Comedia Theatre, St. Petersburg, on 30 Dec. of the same year. On 21 Oct. 1913, a pastiche of all the available numbers in the Liadov and Karatigin editions, with Rimsky-Korsakov's version of the 'Bare Mountain', was produced at the Moscow Rice Theatre, the lacunae in the action being filled with spoken dialogue by K. A. Mardzhanov; the numbers edited by Karatigin were orchestrated by Y. S. Sakhnovsky, who also composed a few additional passages. This production caused legal action by Bessel on a point of copyright, and Sakhnovsky's score was suppressed. In 1915 César Cui prepared a complete musical version, using all the available numbers and in some cases Liadov's orchestration, and composing additional music — partly on Mussorgsky's themes — as required; the vocal score of Cui's version was published by Bessel in 1916, and on 26 Oct. 1917 it was produced at the Theatre of Musical Drama, Petrograd. Another complete version was prepared in Paris after the Russian Revolution by N. N. Tcherepnin; this is based on the existing editions by Liadov, Karatigin and Cui, but Cui's additions are not used; Tcherepnin filled the lacunae with music borrowed from 'Salammbô', Mussorgsky's songs, etc. Tcherepnin's version, the one usually performed outside Russia, was produced at Monte Carlo on 17 Mar. 1923 and published in vocal score by Bessel in 1924.

One other garbled text must be mentioned: that of the collection of songs entitled by Mussorgsky himself 'Years of Youth. Volume of Songs (from 1857 to 1866)', acquired by Charles Malherbe, archivist of the Paris Opéra, in 1909. The collection consists partly of songs hitherto unknown, partly of variants of published songs. Four of the former were published as a supplement to the 'Bulletin français de la S.I.M.' (1909, No. 5) and, edited by Karatigin, by Bessel in 1911. In 1923 Bessel issued in Paris the whole collection minus the last number (a duet arrangement of Gordigiani's 'Ogni sabato'): four songs being reprinted from Karatigin's edition, twelve inaccurately copied from the Paris autograph and one ('Kallistrat') reprinted from the Rimsky-Korsakov edition of the variant not in the Paris collection.

From about 1908 onwards growing dissatisfaction with the Rimsky-Korsakov versions of Mussorgsky's music, particularly that of 'Boris Godunov', was felt both in Russia and in western Europe, and a vigorous campaign for the publication and performance of the true texts was carried on by Russian and western critics, led in England and France by M. D. Calvocoressi. At last, in 1928, the Russian State Music-Publishing Corporation embarked on a "complete collected edition" of Mussorgsky's music in accordance with the composer's manuscripts, embodying all textual variants and provided with elaborate critical apparatus. This edition, of which Paul Lamm is editor-in-chief, was interrupted in 1939 by the outbreak of war. It is planned as follows (some volumes being as yet uncertain [1954]):

Vol.

I. 'Boris Godunov.'

II. 'Khovanshchina.'

III. 'Sorochintsy Fair.'

IV. Fragmentary Operas

1. Salammbo.

2. The Marriage.

3. Mlada.

V. Songs with piano

1-2. Years of Youth.

3. Songs of 1866.

4. Songs of 1867-74.

5. The Peepshow.

6. The Nursery.

7. Sunless.

8. Songs of 1875-79.

9. Songs and Dances of Death.

10. Notes, folksong arrangements, etc.

VI. Choral Works (in vocal score).

VII. Orchestral Works (including songs and choral works with orchestra in full score)

1. Triumphal March.

2. Marfa's Song ('Khovanshchina').

3. Night.

4. Scherzo in B \flat major.

5. Intermezzo in modo classico.

6. Hopak.

7.

8. Chorus from 'Oedipus in Athens'.

9. Destruction of Sennacherib (first version).

10. St. John's Night on the Bare Mountain.

11.

12. War Song of the Libyans ('Salammbo').

13.

14.

15. Destruction of Sennacherib (second version).

VIII. Piano Works (including arrangements of Mussorgsky's orchestral works by the editors)

1. Triumphal March (arr. for piano duet by P. Lamm).

2. Pictures from an Exhibition.

3. Scherzo in B \flat major (arr. for piano duet by Kabalevsky).

4. Intermezzo.

(In 1939 Vol. VIII was issued as a whole, including all Mussorgsky's own piano works, but excluding the duet arrangements.)

At the same time 'Khovanshchina' was completed by Paul Lamm and B. V. Assafiev and orchestrated by Assafiev in a version faithfully embodying everything left by Mussorgsky, and 'Sorochintsy Fair' was completed in the same spirit in 1930 by V. Y. Shebalin. Mussorgsky's 1869 version of 'Boris' was produced in Leningrad on 16 Feb. 1928 and in London (at Sadler's Wells) on 30 Sept. 1935.

MUSSORGSKY'S WORK.—During the last year of his life Mussorgsky wrote an autobiographical sketch, inaccurate in many respects but concluding with a statement of his artistic position that could hardly be bettered:

Mussorgsky cannot be classed with any existing group of musicians, either by the character of his compositions or by his musical views. The formula of his artistic profession de foi may be explained by his view of the function of art: art is a means of communicating with people, not an aim in itself. This guiding principle has defined the whole of his creative activity. Proceeding from the conviction that human speech is strictly controlled by musical laws (Virchow, Gerwinus), he considers the function of art to be the reproduction in musical sounds not merely of feelings, but first and foremost of human speech. Acknowledging that in the realm of art only artist-reformers such as Palestrina,

Bach, Gluck, Beethoven, Berlioz and Liszt have created the laws of art, he considers these laws as not immutable but liable to change and progress, like everything else in man's inner world.

But if Mussorgsky could not class himself with any existing group of musicians, he could very easily have placed himself beside artists in other fields, beside the great Russian novelists of the same period and beside such painters as Kramskoy, Surikov, Gay and Repin. He shared with these, and particularly with the painters, a disdain for formal beauty and technical polish and every other manifestation of "art for art's sake"; the desire to relate his art as closely as possible to life in general and the life of the Russian masses in particular, to nourish his art on actuality and in turn to employ it as a medium for communicating human experience; a somewhat self-conscious and aggressive Russianness and an intense sympathy with the Russian peasant, newly freed from serfdom. The philosophical basis of their outlook was stated most satisfactorily by Tchernishevsky in his dissertation 'The Aesthetic Relationship of Art and Actuality' (St. Petersburg, 1855) and his own criticism of it in the journal 'Sovremennik'.

Mussorgsky's earlier, lyrical and romantic compositions, written before he had reached this viewpoint, reveal the influences of Glinka, Balakirev and (in the case of 'Salammbo') Serov, of Schumann and (a little later) Liszt and Meyerbeer. Their harmonic language is limited and conventional, their facture amateurish; the instrumental pieces reveal the structural weaknesses — squareness, primitiveness, lack of organic cohesion — that mark even his mature essays in instrumental music. Yet more personal traits soon begin to show themselves. The main theme of the 'Intermezzo in modo classico' (1861) is doubly characteristic in that its origin was pantomimic (it was suggested by the sight of peasants plunging heavily through deep snowdrifts on a sunny winter day) and that, although the composer himself described it as "in modo classico" and "à la Bach", its separate motives show an affinity with Russian folk melody. In the song 'Kalistratushka' (1864), of which the first version is actually called "study in folk style", the voice-part — already fully typical of Mussorgsky's mature type of free, unsymmetrical lyrical melody — is very close to folk melody, while the cadential dissolution of the harmony into bare octaves (e.g. at the end of the first vocal phrase) is also typical of the Russian folk polyphony recorded by Melgunov, Kastalsky and others; an actual folk tune appears in the piano part in the tranquillo section.

This predominantly lyrical strain in Mussorgsky's style was never completely submerged at any period; but, side by side with the lyrical songs of 1866-68, 'Hebrew Song',

'The Garden by the Don', 'A Child's Song' and others, sharply opposed tendencies appear. Instead of lyrical melody the voice-parts of such songs as 'Darling Savishna', 'The Seminarist' and 'You drunken sot' (all 1866) are attempts at quasi-phonographic representation of human speech; not of speech in general but the peculiar speech of sharply realized individuals — a village idiot babbling out his amorous plea to the village beauty, a theological student allowing erotic thoughts to creep into his memorizing of Latin nouns of the third declension, a woman scolding a drunken husband. Some degree of stylization is inevitable in the musical representation of speech, but Mussorgsky aimed at the possible minimum; when here and there he abandons represented speech he naturally lapses into his lyrical folksongish idiom or, as in 'The Seminarist', deliberately imitates the music of the Orthodox Church. At the same time the piano-parts are contrived to underline the characterization of the vocal line with pantomimically inspired motives and unorthodox and empirical but often strikingly evocative harmony. In his songs of this type Mussorgsky shows not so much subjective "sympathy" with his subjects as ability to put himself entirely in their place ('Savishna', 'The Ragamuffin', 'The Orphan' and the 'Nursery' cycle). Even a comic character, as in 'The Seminarist', is rendered with only slight exaggeration, as a good actor might play the part. But a little later, perhaps under the influence of Dargomizhsky's songs, this ironic-comic element became exaggerated into less objective and consequently less effective satire ('The He-Goat', 'The Classicist' and 'The Peepshow', the last two being lampoons — 'The Peepshow' an elaborate one — of the composer's musical enemies). These tendencies — "recorded" speech with the minimum of stylization, pantomimic instrumental motives and empirical, expressionistic harmony, satirical comedy — are manifested in their most extreme forms and with no lyrical relief in the unfinished opera on Gogol's 'The Marriage'.

In 'Boris Godunov' these two tendencies — the lyrical and the naturalistic — exist side by side in nearly perfect equilibrium. In 'Khovanshchina' and the later songs they tend to be fused rather than opposed, and the lyrical element tends to gain the upper hand. In the 'Sunless' cycle a new element of subjective pessimism makes its appearance, though in no work of Mussorgsky is his empirical harmony more subtly effective. The 'Pictures from an Exhibition', dating from the same year as 'Sunless' (1874), reveal the characteristic juxtaposition of lyrical and pantomimic (and comic) elements. After 1874 a gradual falling-off in quality is perceptible in all Mussorgsky's work, though even the fragments of 'Sorochintsy Fair' show him still striving to learn from folk music and the intonations of folk speech (in both cases here those of the Ukraine), still mingling pure lyricism with satirical comedy.

'Boris Godunov' and 'Khovanshchina' are, like all the Russian historical operas of that period, offshoots of Meyerbeerian "grand opera", however much they may differ from the prototypes in musical language, in musical and dramatic technique and in aesthetic point of view. Mussorgsky's originality as a dramatic composer is most easily gauged by reference to that standard. In place of well-made theatrical plots he gives cross-sections of the life of a whole people; instead of conventionalized characters he gives in 'Boris', though hardly in 'Khovanshchina', sharply realized individuals. The personal tragedy of Boris is heightened, not weakened, by setting it against a wholly living background not only of the court circle (his children, the treacherous boyar Shuisky) but of the Russian people generally, represented by individuals such as the various monks, the police-officers, the idiot, the innkeeper, even the anonymous members of the crowd; as a result Boris himself becomes the type of the entire suffering nation. In 'Khovanshchina' the same thing is attempted much less successfully; neither the elder Khovansky nor Dosifei is presented in the round as Boris is, and the forces opposed to them are shown only in the person of the lay-figure Shaklovity while the forces opposed to Boris are personified in the very human Pretender. Even "the people" in 'Khovanshchina' have less vital representatives. The score of 'Khovanshchina' contains some of Mussorgsky's best lyrical writing (e.g. the introduction and Golitsin's departure into exile), one of his finest strokes of musical irony (the snatch of folksong sung by Shaklovity over the elder Khovansky's dead body) and some typical pantomimic effects (such as the scribe's "writing" figure); but it lacks the dramatic incisiveness of the earlier work. Few operas contain so little dead matter as 'Boris', particularly in its earlier version of 1869; apart from the grandeur and depth of the treatment as a whole — episodic as that whole is — the score is full of singularly effective subtleties of every kind. Mussorgsky does not use Leitmotive in the Wagnerian way, only in the more limited way common to a good many composers in the third quarter of the 19th century; but he uses the device in a quite peculiar manner, to make points that could hardly be made by other means. A single theme serves in 'Boris' both for the real, murdered tsarevich and for the pretender, the false Dimitry, and so reflects the superstitious doubt and confusion in Boris's mind; in 'Khovanshchina' the theme of Marfa's conjuration scene is later linked in turn with the fates of the elder Khovansky, Golitsin and Andrey Khovansky — all the Tsar Peter's enemies are doomed. Of the innumerable very different subtleties of harmony and orchestration in 'Boris' it must suffice to mention the simple, solemn trombone chords in scene ii of the Prologue, just before Boris's call to "pay a solemn tribute to the tombs of Russia's rulers", the grating harmonies of the high string tremolo of the hallucination scene, the bare open fifths on the second syllable of the word "Siberia" in the map scene, the harmonic setting of the treacherous Shuisky's account to the Duma of the tsar's hallucinations. Mussorgsky's orchestration is seldom beautiful for its own sake; his harmony would often be nonsensical as absolute music; but he uses both with infallible instinct as instruments of dramatic expression. Indeed no musician has been more completely a dramatic composer than Mussorgsky; as a musical translator of words and all that can be expressed in words, of psychological states and even physical movements he is unsurpassed; as an absolute musician he is hopelessly limited, with remarkably little ability to construct pure music or even a purely musical texture. G. A.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ABRAHAM, GERALD, 'Mussorgsky's "Boris" and Pushkin's' (M. & L., XXVI, 1945, p. 31).
 "The Fair of Sorotchintsy" and Cherepnin's Completion of It', in 'On Russian Music' (London, n.d.), p. 216.
 'Tolstoy and Mussorgsky', in 'Studies in Russian Music' (London, n.d.), p. 87.
 BARZEL, CHARLES, 'Moussorgsky' (Paris, 1939).
 BELAYEV, VICTOR, 'Mussorgsky's "Boris Godunov" and its new version' (trans. S. W. Pring) (London, 1928).
 BROOK, D., 'Six Great Russian Composers' (London, 1946).
 CALVOCORESSI, M. D., 'Moussorgsky' (Paris, 1908; revised and enlarged edition, 1911; English translation, London, 1919).
 'Mussorgsky', completed by Gerald Abraham (London, 1946).
 CALVOCORESSI, M. D. & ABRAHAM, GERALD, 'Mussorgsky', in 'Masters of Russian Music' (London, 1936), pp. 178-248.
 CHIESA, MARY TIBALDI, 'Mussorgsky' (Milan, 1935).
 FEDOROV, V., 'Moussorgsky' (Paris, 1935).
 FRIED, E. L., 'Modest Petrovich Mussorgsky: k 100-letnyu co dnya rozhdeniya' (Leningrad, 1939).
 GARCIA MORILLO, R., 'Mussorgsky' (Buenos Aires, 1943).
 GLEBOV, IGOR, 'K vosstanovleniyu "Borisa Godunova" Musorgskovo' (Moscow, 1928).
 GODET, ROBERT, 'En marge de Boris Godounof', 2 vols. (London, 1926).
 GOLENISHCHEV-KUTUZOV, A. A., 'Vospominaniya o M. P. Musorgskom' (published in 'Muzikal'noe Nasledstvo', Vol. I, Moscow, 1935).
 HANDSCHIN, JACQUES, 'Moussorgsky' (in German) (Zurich, 1924).
 HOFMANN, ROTISLAV, 'Moussorgski' (Paris, 1952).
 KARATIGIN, V., 'Mussorgsky' (Petersburg, 1922).
 KELDISH, Y., 'Romansovaya lirika Musorgskovo' (Moscow, 1933).
 LEYDA, JAY & BERTENSON, S., 'The Mussorgsky Reader: a Life of Modest Petrovich Mussorgsky in Letters and Documents' (New York, 1947).
 LUKASH, IVAN S., 'Biednaya liubov Musorgskago' (Paris, 1940).
 MONTAGU-NATHAN, M., 'Mussorgsky' (London, 1916).
 'M. P. Musorgsky: Pis'ma i dokumenty', edited by A. N. Rimsky-Korsakov (Moscow, 1932).
 'M. P. Musorgsky: Pis'ma k A. A. Golenishchev-Kutuzovu' (Moscow, 1939).
 'M. P. Musorgsky: k pyatidesyatiletiyu co dnya smerti. Stat'i i materialy' (articles by Y. Keldish, P. Lamm, Igor Glebov, I. Bryusova, V. Yakovlev, E. Sabelova and M. V. Ivanov-Boretsky, iconography, annotated list of works and full bibliography of books and articles on Mussorgsky in all languages from 1860 to 1928) (Moscow, 1932).
 'Mussorgsky: "Boris Godunov" — Stat'i i issledovaniya' (articles on 'Boris' by Victor Belaiev, Igor Glebov, M. D. Calvocoressi, P. S. Kogan, P. A. Lamm, A. A. Khokhlovkina and V. Yakovlev) (Moscow, 1930).
 'Mussorgsky i ego "Khovanshchina"' (articles by S. Lopashev, V. Yakovlev and V. Belaiev) (Moscow, 1928).
 MUSSORGSKY, M. P., 'Pisna k A. A. Golenishchev-Kutuzovu', ed. by U. Keldisha. (Moscow & Leningrad, 1939).
 Mussorgsky number of 'Muzikalny Sovremennik'. ('Autobiographical Note' and articles by V. Komarova, I. Lapshin, Andrey Rimsky-Korsakov and V. Karatigin, and annotated list of works.) (Petrograd, 1917).
 Mussorgsky number of 'Sovetskaya Muzika'. ('Autobiographical Note' and articles by A. Alshvang, G. Khubov, Y. Kremlev, V. Protopopov, I. Kubikov, V. Steinpress, Andrey Rimsky-Korsakov, I. Remezov and Mussorgsky's letters to Golenishchev-Kutuzov.) (Moscow, 1939).
 NILSSON, KURT, 'Die Rimskij-Korsakoffsche Bearbeitung des "Boris Godunoff" von Mussorgskij als Objekt der vergleichenden Musikwissenschaft' (Munster i/W., 1937).
 OLDENBURG-ERMKE, FRANS VAN, 'De laatste Herberg: Herinneringen aan Modest Petrovitsch Moussorgsky' (Rotterdam, 1936).
 OLENINE-D'ALHEIM, M., 'Le Legs de Moussorgsky' (Paris, 1908).
 ORLOV, GEORGY, 'Letopis zhizni i tvorchestva M. P. Musorgskovo' (Moscow, 1940).
 RIESEMANN, OSKAR VON, 'Mussorgski' (Monographien zur russischen Musik, Vol. II) (Munich, 1926; English trans., London, 1935).
 STASSOV, V. V., 'Modest Petrovich Mussorgsky' (St. Petersburg, 1881).
 'Stat'i o Musorgskom' (Moscow, 1922).
 TUMANINA, N., 'M. P. Musorgsky: zhizn' i tvorchestvo' (Moscow, 1939).
 WOLFF, KURT VON, 'Mussorgskij' (Stuttgart, 1926).

CATALOGUE OF WORKS

STAGE WORKS

Title	Libretto	Composed	Production
'Han d'Islande', projected opera.	Based on Victor Hugo's novel.	1856.	—
'Oedipus in Athens', projected opera (choruses only).	Based on Ozerov's play.	1858-60.	—
'St. John's Eve', projected opera.	Based on Gogol's story.	1858.	—
'Salammbô', unfinished opera.	Based on Flaubert's novel.	1863-66.	—

¹ This monumental annotated collection of Mussorgsky's letters, etc., supersedes the earlier separate collections of letters to Balakirev, Stassov, etc. It contains all surviving letters except those to Golenishchev-Kutuzov.

Title	Libretto	Composed	Production
'The Marriage' (1st act only).	Gogol's comedy.	1868.	St. Petersburg (Hall of the Suvorin Theatre School), 1 Apr. 1909 (with pf. only).
'Boris Godunov', opera.	Based on Pushkin's play and Karamzin's 'History of the Russian State'.	1st version, 1868-69. 2nd version, 1871-72.	Leningrad, 16 Feb. 1928.
'Bobil' ('The Landless Peasant'), projected opera.	Based on Spielhagen's novel 'Hans und Grete'.	1870.	St. Petersburg, Maryinsky Theatre, 8 Feb. 1874 (first performed in Moscow, Bolshoy Teatr, 28 Dec. 1888).
'Mlada', scenes for the 2nd and 3rd acts of a collective opera-ballet.	V. A. Krilov.	1872.	—
'Khovanshchina', unfinished opera.	Composer.	1872-80.	St. Petersburg, Kononov Hall, 21 Feb. 1886 (finished by Rimsky-Korsakov).
'Sorochintsy Fair', unfinished opera.	Based on Gogol's story.	1874-80.	Moscow, Free Theatre, 21 Oct. 1913.
'Pugachevshchina', projected opera.	? based on Pushkin's 'History of the Pugachev Rising' and 'The Captain's Daughter'.	1877.	—

CHORAL WORKS

Title	Composed	First Performance
'Shamil's March' for solo voices, chorus & orch.	1859.	St. Petersburg, 18 Mar. 1867.
'The Destruction of Sennacherib' (after Byron) for chorus & orch.	1st version, 1867. 2nd version, 1874.
'Jesus Navin' (or 'Joshua') for contralto, bass, chorus & pf.	1874-77.
3 Vocalises for 3-part female voices.	1880.	—
5 Russian Folksongs (No. 5 unfinished) arr. for 4-part male voices.	1880.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS

Scherzo in B \flat ma.	1858.	St. Petersburg, 23 Jan. 1860.
'Alla marcia notturna.'	1861.
Andante, Scherzo and Finale of Symphony in D ma.	1841-62.
'St. John's Night on the Bare Mountain' (after Gogol's 'St. John's Eve').	1867.	St. Petersburg, 30 Oct. 1880.
'Intermezzo symphonique in modo classico.' ¹	1867.
'Poděbrad of Bohemia', projected symphonic poem.	1867.
Triumphal March 'The Capture of Kars' (also known as 'March, with trio "alla turca"' and as 'Triumphal March', partly based on the 'Procession of Princes' from 'Mlada').	1880.
'Transcaucasian Suite', projected work for orchestra with harps & pf.	1880.

PIANOFORTE SOLO

Title	Dedication	Composed
'Porte-Enseigne Polka' (lost).	"Comrades in the Cadet School." N. Obolensky.	1852.
'Souvenir d'enfance.'		*:37.
Sonata in E \flat ma.: scherzo and finale (lost).	L. M. Boubé (first version); A. Izvol'skaya (second version). N. P. Opochunina. L. A. Levashev.	1858.
Sonata in F \sharp mi. (lost).		1858.
Scherzo in C \sharp mi.		1858.
'Impromptu passionné.'		1859.
'Ein Kinderscherz (Children's Games: Puss in the Corner).'	"To the memory of my Mother."	1859; rev.
'Preludium in modo classico' (lost).		1860.
'Intermezzo in modo classico.' ²		1860.
'Menuet monstre' (lost).		1861.
Scherzo of a Sonata in D ma. (lost). ³		1861.
'From Memories of Childhood'		1862.
1. Nurse and I.		1863.
2. First Punishment: Nurse shuts me in a dark room.		—

¹ Orchestral version of the pf. piece, with additional trio.

² There also exists a pf. arrangement, by the composer (1867), of the orchestral piece based on this; it is dedicated to Borodin.

³ Possibly identical with the lost scherzo of the Symphony in D ma.

Title	Dedication	Composed
'Duma (Réverie)' (on a theme by V. A. Loginov).	V. A. Loginov.	1865.
'La Capricieuse' (on a theme by Count L. Heyden).	N. P. Opochinina.	1865.
Scherzino, 'The Seamstress'.		1871.
Suite, 'Pictures from an Exhibition'.	V. V. Stassov.	1874.
Fantasy, 'Storm on the Black Sea' (lost).		1879.
'On the Southern Shore of the Crimea', 2 pieces known as		1880.
1. Gurzuf.
2. Capriccio.	D. M. Leonova.
'Meditation (Album Leaf)'.		1880.
'Une Larme.'		1880.
'Au village (Quasi Fantasia)'.	I. F. Gorbunov.	? 1880.
Fair Scene and Hopak (from 'Sorochintsy Fair') (arr. by the composer). ¹

PIANOFORTE DUET

Allegro and Scherzo of a Sonata in C ma. (1860).²

SONGS

Title	Words	Dedication	Composed
'Where art thou, little star?'	Grekov.	I. L. Grunberg.	1857; rev., with orch., 1858.
'Tell me why.'	Anon.	Z. A. Burtseva.	1858.
'Meines Herzens Sehnsucht.'	Anon.	Malwina Bamberg.	1858.
'Hour of Jollity.'	Koltsov.	V. V. Zakharin.	1858; 2nd version, 1859.
'Sadly rustled the leaves.'	After Pleshcheyev.	M. O. Mikeshein.	1859.
'What are words of love to you?'	Ammosov.	M. V. Shilovskaya.	1860.
'I have many palaces and gardens.'	Koltsov.	P. T. Borispolits.	1863.
'Old Man's Song' (also known as 'The Harper's Song': "An die Türen will ich schleichen" from 'Wilhelm Meister').	Goethe, trans. by ?.	A. P. Opochinin.	1863.
'King Saul.'	Byron, trans. by Kozlov.	A. P. Opochinin.	2 versions, 1863.
'But if I could meet thee again.'	Kurochkin.	N. P. Opochinina.	1863.
'The wild winds blow.'	Koltsov.	V. A. Loginov.	1864.
'Night.'	Based on Pushkin.	N. P. Opochinina.	2 versions, 1864; 1st orch., 1868.
'Kalistratushka.'	Nekrassov.	A. P. Opochinin.	2 versions, 1864.
'Prayer.'	Lermontov.	Y. I. Mussorgskaya.	1865.
'The Outcast': essay in recitative.	I. G. M.	—	1865.
'Cradle Song' (or 'Peasant's Lullaby').	Ostrovsky (from the play 'Voyevoda').	Y. I. Mussorgskaya.	2 versions, 1865.
'Why are thy eyes sometimes so cold?' ('Little One').	Pleshcheyev.	L. V. Azareva.	1866.
'Ich wollt' meine Schmerzen ergössen.'	Heine.	N. P. Opochinina.	1866.
'Aus meinen Tränen.'	Heine (trans. by M. Mikhailov).		1866.
'Darling Savishna.'	Mussorgsky.	C. A. Cui.	1866.
'You drunken sot.'	Mussorgsky.	V. V. Nikolsky.	1866.
'The Seminarist.'	Mussorgsky.	L. I. Shestakova.	1866.
'Hopak.'	Shevchenko (from 'Haydamaky', trans. by Mey).	N. A. Rimsky-Korsakov.	1866; rev., with orch., 1868.
'On the Dnieper' ('Yarema's Song').	Shevchenko (from 'Haydamaky', trans. by Mey).	S. P. Naumov.	1st version (lost), 1866; 2nd version, 1879.
'Hebrew Song.'	Mey.	F. P. & T. P. Mussorgsky.	1867.
'The Magpie.'	Pushkin (2 poems).	A. P. & N. P. Opochinin.	1867.
'Gathering Mushrooms.'	Mey.	J. V. Nikolsky.	1867.
'The Feast.'	Koltsov.	L. I. Shestakova.	1867.
'The Ragamuffin.'	Mussorgsky.	V. V. Stassov.	1867.
'The He-Goat: a worldly story.'	Mussorgsky.	A. P. Borodin.	1867.
'The Classicist.'	Mussorgsky.	N. P. Opochinina.	1867.
'The Garden by the Don.'	Koltsov.	—	1867.
'The Orphan.'	Mussorgsky.	K. S. Borodina.	1868.
'Eremushka's Lullaby.'	Nekrassov.	A. S. Dargomizhsky.	1868.
'Child's Song.'	Mey.	—	1868.
'The Nursery', cycle	Mussorgsky.
1. With Nurse.		A. S. Dargomizhsky.	1868.
2. In the Corner.		V. A. Hartmann.	1870.

¹ Other transcriptions from his operas, though performed by him in public, were never written down.² The scherzo is a transposed version of that in C# mi. for pf., of 1858.

Title	Words	Dedication	Composed
3. The Cockchafer.		V. V. Stassov.	1870.
4. With the Doll.		T. & G. Mussorgsky.	1870.
5. Going to sleep.		Sasha Cui.	1870.
6. On the Hobby-horse.		D. V. & P. S. Stassov.	1872.
7. The Cat "Sailor".		—	1872.
'The Peepshow.'	Mussorgsky.	V. V. Stassov.	1870.
'Evening Song.'	? Pleshcheyev.	S. V. Serbina.	1871.
'Sunless', cycle	Golenishchev-Kutuzov.	Golenishchev-Kutuzov.	1874.
1. Between four walls.
2. Thou didst not know me in the crowd.
3. The idle, noisy day is ended.
4. Boredom.
5. Elegy.
6. On the river.
'Forgotten.'	Golenishchev-Kutuzov.	V. V. Vereshchagin.	1874.
'Epitaph' (unfinished).	Mussorgsky.	N. P. Opochinnina.	1874.
'The Nettle Mountain' (unfinished).	Mussorgsky.	—	1874.
'Songs and Dances of Death', cycle	Golenishchev-Kutuzov.
1. Lullaby.		A. Y. Vorobieva-Petrova.	1875.
2. Serenade.		I. I. Shestakova.	1875.
3. Trepak.		O. A. Petrov.	1875.
4. The Field-Marshal.		A. A. Golenishchev-Kutuzov.	1877.
'The Sphinx.'	Mussorgsky.	M. I. Kostyurina.	1875.
'Not like thunder, trouble struck.'	Alexey Tolstoy.	F. A. Vanliarskv.	1877.
'Softly the spirit flew up to heaven.'	Alexey Tolstoy.	—	1877.
'Pride.'	Alexey Tolstoy.	A. E. Palchikov.	1877.
'Is spinning man's work?'	Alexey Tolstoy.	—	1877.
'It scatters and breaks.'	Alexey Tolstoy.	O. A. Golenishcheva-Kutuzova.	1877.
'The Vision.'	Golenishchev-Kutuzov.	E. A. Gulevich.	1877.
'The Wanderer.'	Ruckert, trans. by Pleshcheyev.	—	1878.
'Mephistopheles's Song of the Flea.'	Goethe, trans. by Strugovshchikov.	D. M. Leonova.	1879.

ARRANGEMENTS OF WORKS BY OTHER COMPOSERS

- Balakirev's Overture and Entr'actes to 'King Lear' (arr. for pf., 4 hands) (1860).
- Balakirev's Overture on Three Russian Themes (arr. for pf., 4 hands) (1860).
- Balakirev's Georgian Song (with orchestra) (accompaniment arr. for pf. solo) (publ. Stellovsky, St. Petersburg, 1862).
- Berlioz's 'Fête chez Capulet' and 'Queen Mab' (from 'Romeo et Juliette') (arr. for two pfs., 8 hands) (1862).
- Beethoven's Allegretto (from Quartet, Op. 59 No. 2) (arr. for pf. solo) (1867).
- Beethoven's Andante (from Quartet, Op. 59 No. 3) (arr. for pf. solo) (1859).
- Beethoven's Presto (from Quartet, Op. 131) (arr. for pf. solo) (1867).
- Beethoven's Lento and Vivace (from Quartet, Op. 135) (arr. for pf. solo) (1867).
- Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 130 (first four movements and part of finale) (arr. for 2 pfs., 8 hands) (1862).
- Glinka's Persian Chorus (from 'Russlan and Liudmila') (arr. for pf., 4 hands) (1858).
- Glinka's 'Night in Madrid' (arr. for pf., 4 hands) (1858).
- Gordigiani's 'Ogni sabato (canto popolare toscano)' (arr. as a duet for mezzo-soprano and baritone) (1864).
- D. M. Leonova's 'Après le bal' for voice and pf., text and probably piano part by Mussorgsky (publ. by Bernard, St. Petersburg, 1879).
- Lodizhensky's 'Eastern Cradle Song', edited (1874).
- Sart's 'Early Reign of Oleg' (excerpts from) (arr. for chorus and pf.) (1874).

See also Funtek (orch. arr. of 'Pictures at an Exhibition'). Gopak. Khovanshchina (Ravel's & Stravinsky's alterations). Lamm (ed. of works by M.). Minkus (collab. in 'Mlada'). Ravel (orch. of 'Pictures at an Exhibition'). Song, p. 946. Tcherepnin (A., completion & orch. of 'Marriage'). Vuckovic ('Testament of M.', symph. work).

MUSTAFA, Domenico (b. Fellano nr. Spoleto, 14 Apr. 1829; d. Montefalco nr. Perugia, 18 Mar. 1912).

Italian male soprano singer and composer. He was the last male soprano in the Sistine Chapel in Rome, which he entered in 1848. Later on he became maestro di cappella there, a post he retained until 1902, when he was succeeded by Lorenzo Perosi. His works include a 'Miserere', a 'Dies irae' for 7 voices, 'Tu es Petrus', 'Laudate' and other church music.

E. B.

MUSTEL, Victor (b. Le Havre, 13 June 1815; d. Paris, 26 Jan. 1890).

French manufacturer of harmoniums. His several inventions resulted in the instrument known as the Mustel Organ.

Left an orphan at the age of twelve, he was apprenticed to a shipbuilder and in 1838 set up in business for himself in that trade at the little hamlet of Sanvic. Endowed from youth with a peculiarly constructive genius, he first attempted to make musical instruments by devoting himself to the improvement of an accordion which he had bought at Le Havre. Elated with his success, he disposed of his workshop in May 1844 and set out for Paris with his wife and two children. For the next nine years he worked in several different workshops, but never obtained high wages. In 1853 he determined to start in business for himself as a harmonium maker, and in 1855 he exhibited his harmonium with "Double Expression" and a new stop "Harpe éolienne", for which he gained a medal of the first class. For the first year after this Mustel (now assisted by his two sons) did fairly well, but business rapidly declined, and he would perhaps have been obliged to succumb but for the sale of a little land which he had inherited from his father. Even in 1866 his receipts did little more than cover the costs, but since that date the firm of Victor Mustel et ses Fils has gained a reputation that has been as noteworthy in England as in France. The present name of the firm is Mustel et Cie.

The inventions due to the Mustels are "La Double Expression" (patented 1854), whereby the natural preponderance of the bass notes over those of the treble is, with complete power of increase and decrease in either half, brought under direct control of the player by means of knee pedals (genouillères) that control the energy and pressure of the wind; "Le Forté expressif", a divided swell governed by pneumatic agency; and "La Harpe éolienne", a tremolo register of two ranks of vibrators, 2-ft. pitch, which offer a gently beating variation to the unison by being slightly less and more than the normal pitch of the instrument, the impression of which remains unimpaired. Mustel subsequently invented "Le Typophone" and "Le Métaphone". The first of these is a keyboard percussion instrument made of tuning-forks in resonance boxes of the proper acoustic capacity. The principle is very similar to that of the Celesta. The Métaphone (patented in 1878) is an invention to soften at pleasure the somewhat strident tones of the harmonium. The softening effect is produced by a sliding shutter of leather to each compartment and governed by draw-stops, as with other modifications of tone and power. A. J. H.

MUSURGIA UNIVERSALIS. See KIRCHER, ATHANASIOS.

MUTA (Ital. imper. = change). A word often seen attached to horn parts — "muta in Es", "muta in B", etc., meaning simply "change to E♭ or B♭", etc.; that is, take off the crook in which you are playing and put on that which will make the horn sound in E♭ or B♭. The word is also used for changes in the tuning of kettledrums during the progress of a work. G.

MUTATION (Lat. mutatio, from muto = "I change"). (1) When in the solmization of a plainsong melody it becomes necessary to pass from one hexachord to another, the process by which the transfer is effected is called a mutation.

(2) The term is also applied to the change which takes place in a boy's voice when it passes from treble or alto into tenor or bass. The period of this transformation is uncertain; but it generally declares itself between the ages of fourteen and sixteen, and is very rarely deferred later than the completion of the seventeenth year.

(3) More rarely the word is used to denote that change in the position of the hand upon the violin which in English is called the shift.

W. S. R.

See also Hexachord. Shift. Solmization.

MUTATION STOPS. The name of those organ stops which do not produce a sound agreeing with the name of the key pressed down, but either the twelfth or the seventeenth to it, as G or E on the C key. The former are called fifth-sounding or quint stops; the latter third-sounding or tierce stops. The proper relative size of the largest fifth-sounding stop is one-third that of the foundation stop from which it is deduced; as $10\frac{2}{3}$, $5\frac{1}{3}$ or $2\frac{2}{3}$ from the 32, 16 or 8-ft. stops respectively. The largest tierce-sounding stops are one-fifth the size of the foundation stops from which they are deduced; as $6\frac{2}{5}$, $3\frac{1}{5}$ and $1\frac{2}{5}$ ft. respectively. The third-sounding rank on the manual has been much more sparingly used since the introduction of equal temperament, as it does not sound agreeably with that system of tuning; and an additional rank of pipes consequently becomes available for some other purpose.

The only mutation stop in use in England before the arrival of Smith and Harris (1660) was the twelfth ($2\frac{2}{3}$ ft.). After that date the tierce ($1\frac{2}{5}$ ft.), larigot ($1\frac{1}{5}$ ft.) and their octaves (among the small mixture ranks) became not uncommon. E. J. H.

The name "Mutation" is applied loosely to all soft stops of harmonic pitches which are useful for building synthetic tones such as are needed in the choir or positive divisions of organs. Here the change may be regarded as one of tone rather than of pitch. The chief mutation ranks are nazard (12th), tierce (17th) larigot (19th), septième (♭21st) of $2\frac{2}{3}$, $1\frac{2}{5}$, $1\frac{1}{5}$, $1\frac{1}{5}$ -ft. pitches respectively on the manuals; but in view of their use in synthetic tone-building the 2-ft. and 1-ft. separate ranks are sometimes called "Mutations". On the pedal organ the mutation ranks have double or quadruple the pitches given above. W. L. S. (ii).

See also Mixture. Mutation.

MUTE (Fr. sourdine; Ger. Dämpfer; Ital. sordino).¹ A mechanical device for restricting the tone of instruments. Another word is "damper", but this is normally used only in connection with the pianoforte.

PIANOFORTE.—The first pianofortes, as we find Cristofori's and Silbermann's, were made without stops. In course of time a practice common with the harpsichord was followed in the pianoforte and led the way to the now indispensable pedals.

¹ It will be noticed that the metaphors at the root of the French and Italian terms is deafness, while in English it is dumbness.

The first stops were used to raise the dampers; and by two brass knobs on the player's left hand the dampers could be taken entirely off the strings in two divisions, bass and treble. C. P. E. Bach, in his 'Versuch', makes few references to the pianoforte; but in the edition of 1797 he remarks (p. 268) that the undamped register of the Fortepiano is the most agreeable, and that, with due care, it is the most charming of keyed instruments for improvising ("fantasiren"). The higher treble of the piano is not now damped. These short strings vibrate in unison with the upper partials of deeper notes and, as a distinguished pianoforte maker has said, give life to the whole instrument.¹ The terms senza sordini and con sordini applied to the damper stops were used exclusively by Beethoven in his earlier sonatas. He did not use the now familiar "Ped." or "Pedal", because the pedal was then of recent introduction and less commonly employed than the stops which the little square pianos then had. The genouillère, or kneepedal, replaced the damper stops in the German grands. For the Italian words signifying without and with dampers the signs ⊕ and * were substituted by Steibelt and eventually became fixed as the constant equivalents.

The earliest dated square pianoforte still in existence, one of Zumpe's of 1766, has the damper stops; as to the genouillère, Mozart tells us (letter, Oct. 1777) how Stein had one in his improved grand, and Mahillon's Stein of 1780 or thereabouts accordingly has one. There is one in Mozart's (Walther) grand at Salzburg, and in each of the two (Huhn, Berlin) grands of 1790, or earlier, preserved at Potsdam. The action of the genouillère consists of two levers which descend a little below the key-bottom of the pianoforte and meet opposite the knees of the player, who, pressing the levers together, by an upward thrust moves a bar which takes the whole of the dampers off the strings.²

Contemporaneous with the employment of the genouillère was that of the piano stop (Fr. céleste, Ger. Harfenzug), afterwards transferred, like the dampers, to a pedal. An interesting anonymous Louis XV square piano belonging to the painter Gosselin of Brussels had this céleste as a stop. Its origin is clearly the harp-stop of the harpsichord, the pieces of leather being turned over so as to be interposed between the hammers and the strings.

A note of directions for the use of the pedals prefixed to Steibelt's three Sonatas, Op. 35, gives an approximate date to the use of the pedals becoming recognized, and put under the composer's direction, instead of being left entirely to the player's fancy. He says:

The Author wishing to make more Variety on the Piano Forte finds it necessary to make use of the Pedals, by which alone the Notes can be united, but it requires to use them with care, without which, in going from one chord to another, Discord and Confusion would result. Hereafter the Author in all his Compositions will make use of the following signs to denote the Pedals:

- ⊕ The Pedal which raises the dampers.
- * The Piano Pedal.

Steibelt's Op. 35 was published in 1799, by Longman, Clementi & Co.³

The leather was applied in one length to mute the strings more effectually and was then called in French sourdine. John Broadwood was the first to put the "sordin" --- as it is called in his patent of 1783 --- upon a foot-pedal; he put the dampers upon a pedal at the same time, and for fifty years the pedal-foot was cloven, to divide the dampers into bass and treble sections, as the stops had previously been divided for the same purpose. The use of the pianissimo mute was indicated by the Italian word sordino. This term is used in the sense of a mute as late as Thalberg's Op. 41.

The Verschöbung, or shifting pedal, for shifting the hammer first to two strings and then to one (una corda), ultimately gained the day over the muted pedals or stops. The effect of the una corda was charming and is expressly indicated by Beethoven in his G major Concerto, in Op. 106, etc. The pp and ppp soft pedal in course of time shared the fate of the divided damper-pedal; such refinements were banished as being of small service in large rooms. In the six-pedal Viennese grand of Nannette Stein at Windsor Castle, the Verschöbung and Harfenzug co-exist.⁴ The latter for a time came forward again at the end of the 19th century, at first in oblique pianos that could not shift and afterward more generally. The material used was cloth or felt.⁵

VIOLIN, etc.--The muting of violin, viola, cello and double bass is effected by fixing a three-pronged appliance on the bridge, the split prongs of which grip firmly and damp the vibrations of the strings. It is also possible to mute by slipping a coin or piece of horn between the strings on the tail-side of the bridge. Mutes are made of metal, wood, ivory or bakelite and vary somewhat in their effect according to the substance employed; but the chief variation in the tone depends upon the firmness with which the prongs grip the bridge.

³ Steibelt gives a description of the pedals, with his signs for them, in his 'Méthode de piano', first published by Janet, Paris, 1805. He names Clementi, Dussek and Cramer as having adopted his signs. They differ from and are better than Adam's ('Méthode de piano du Conservatoire'), also published in Paris, 1802. Steibelt calls the "una corda" céleste.

⁴ The remaining pedals in Nannette Stein's grand are the Fagotzug, by which a piece of card or stiff paper is brought into partial contact with the strings, and the "Janissary" drum and triangle. See STEIN.

⁵ See also the glossary of terms in Hipkins, 'History of the Pianoforte', p. 123.

¹ Even in Virdung (1511) we find the practice of leaving sympathetic strings in the clavichords, as he says to strengthen the resonance.

² See Hipkins, 'History of the Pianoforte', pp. 93, 108 and 110 (footnote).

The mute is less satisfactory on the cello and double bass owing to the difficulty in devising one of the requisite weight and gripping power.

F. C.

WIND INSTRUMENTS. (1) Woodwind.—The flute is not muted. Neither is the oboe to-day, but in the first part of the 18th century, when the oboe was the chief instrument in military bands, it was muted in various ways for funeral music. In the St. Luke Passion wrongly ascribed to Bach the burial aria, for tenor solo and strings marked con molto lamento, is punctuated by the plaintive strains of a chorale played on the typical military band of the period—two oboes, tenor oboe and bassoon—thus: “piano, und zwar die Hoboen mit Papier gedämpft”. Porpora and Linike are two composers of this date who wrote for oboes con sordini. Cotton-wool, as well as paper, was inserted into the bell for this purpose, and specimens have survived of the wooden oboe mute of the 18th century.

FIG. 1

This (Fig. 1) is a pear-shaped piece of hardwood 3 ins. long and 1 in. across its wide end, and is jammed, wide end first, into the bell of the oboe. It imparts a curious veiled quality throughout the range, though most evident in the notes which issue through the lower holes. A specimen is exhibited at the Herts County Museum, St. Albans.

FIG. 1 The bassoon is occasionally muted when an extreme pianissimo is demanded on the lowest notes. The French practice is to place a pocket handkerchief in the bell, for instance for the low D on the 3rd bassoon with which Debussy opens ‘Pelléas et Mélisande’. The Germans use a mute consisting of a short brass cylinder a little smaller than the bore of the bell and wound round with some soft material to fill the interstice and hold the cylinder in place (Fig. 2); sometimes the outer end is covered with a disc of wire gauze. It softens the lowest fifth without altering the quality.

FIG. 2

Berlioz's idea of muting the clarinet by wrapping it in a bag of cloth or leather he tried out in his monodrame ‘Lélio’. The effect (he writes in his ‘Traité d'instrumentation’)

“always forcibly struck the hearers”. His example does not seem to have been followed, though something similar is the large cardboard megaphone which was in vogue among dance musicians about 1930. The megaphone is long enough completely to enclose the clarinet, with a mouth about a foot across and two slots for the player's wrists. It helped to give the loose-embouchure quality known as “sub-tone”, but this has since been found to be just as easily produced without the megaphone. Some kind of clarinet mute must have been known in the 18th century, for the accounts of the Mechlin firm of Tuerlinckx, instrument makers, mention in 1785 “23 clarinets with A-joints and sourdine” sold to a military band (‘Bulletin du cercle archéologique de Malines’, 1914).

FIG. 3

FIG. 4

(2) Brass.—The prototype of mute for brass instruments is the trumpet mute mentioned by Praetorius (1619) and illustrated in Mersenne's ‘Harmonie universelle’ (1636; Fig. 3). It is of wood and hollow throughout, and was used by some armies for sounding signals when the enemy stood close by, and also in funeral music. All the old writers agree that it raised the pitch of the trumpet by a whole tone, which had to be compensated for in the orchestra by inserting a whole-tone crook. Altenburg (1795) adds that it made the trumpet sound like an oboe and describes three different designs. It was used in the orchestra in many instances ranging from Monteverdi's 'Orfeo' to Haydn's Symphony No. 102 in B \flat major and, with timpani coperti, in the second finale of Mozart's 'Magic Flute'. The modern orchestral trumpet mute (and also the trombone mute) is of fibre or compressed cardboard, in the shape shown in Fig. 4. The wide end is closed and the air-stream passes between the mute and the bell. It has no effect upon the pitch. Variety and dance musicians use many different mutes, most of them aluminium cups of various shapes ("cup", "hush-hush", "torpedo" and "wa-wa" being the principal), some open and some closed at the outer end. In the "torpedo", a pear-shaped aluminium vessel, is retained the form of a common 19th-century trumpet and cornet mute.

FIG. 5

FIG. 6

Cross section of mute No. 5, showing the inner tube, open at both ends.

At one time it was fashionable to fit cornets with an "echo attachment". This is a built-in alternative bell ending with a fixed muting device instead of with the normal flare. It is switched into operation by means of a rotating valve.

Of the horn mute in old times nothing definite is known. Corni sordinati are specified in several scores of the early 18th century (by Telemann, Zelenka, etc.), and since at that time the horn was held with its bell up in the air, some kind of mute, perhaps like the old trumpet mute, would have been obligatory. From late in the century pasteboard- and leather-covered metal mutes are mentioned.¹

¹ Fig. 2 a pasteboard conical mute in 1786 mentioned in de Pomécoulant's 'Organographie'. Fröhlich ('Vollständige Musiklehre', Bonn, 1811) describes the "usual" horn mute as a 6 ins. diameter hollow sphere of papier-mâché with a conical spout. In order that the advantage of hand-stopping might not be lost when the mute was in use, a leather-covered ball attached to a wire could be placed within the sphere; by means of the wire, the ball could be pulled against the neck of the spout, thereby stopping the horn.

Hand muting was then possible, but use of a mute is clearly to be assumed when an entire movement is marked con sordini (as in Haydn's Symphony No. 102, in which the horns as well as the trumpets are so marked in the slow movement) and in cases where the horns are open for one note and muted for the next (as in Beethoven's Rondino for wind). The latter cases would be impossible by hand-stopping, since no time is allowed for changing the crook to compensate for the semitone rise in pitch occasioned by hand-stopping. On the valved horn this compensation is effected instantaneously by the valves, and in modern works isolated notes marked "stopped" or distinguished with a "+" are made by hand-

FIG. 7

Trumpet cup mute of aluminium. The screw thread is for removing the cup or for adjusting it as close as is desired to the bell of the instrument.

FIG. 8

Trumpet "wa-wa" mute of aluminium. The sound is emitted through the inner tube as in mutes Nos. 3 and 5. Movement of the hand across the outer end produces the effect from which this mute's name is onomatopoeically derived.

stopping, while for passages marked con sordino the mute is inserted. The mute does not affect the pitch, and the old brass type (Fig. 5) has been generally abandoned in favour of a cardboard conical mute like the trumpet mute shown in Fig. 4.

Tuba mutes are of no standard pattern and are largely home made. An excellent mute is made on the pattern of Fig. 4; it is most effective in notes on and above the bass stave, imparting to them much the same quality as the mute does on the other brass instruments. Muted tuba is demanded by several 20th-century composers.

Average dimensions of orchestral conical mutes of the type shown in Fig. 4 are (in inches):

	Outside Diameter		Length
	At Narrow End	At Wide End
Trumpet	0.8	2.7	6.8
Tenor	1.1	3.9	9.8
Trombone	1.8	4.2	8
Horn	4.5	10	19
F Tuba

A. B.

See also Lebrun (J., invention of horn mute).

MÜTHEL, Johann Gottfried (b. Mölln, Lauenburg, 17 Jan. 1718; d. Riga, 17 Jan. 1788).

German organist and composer. He became a pupil of J. P. Kuntzen at Lübeck and in 1738 received the appointment of chamber musician and court organist at Schwerin, in which capacity he also gave musical instruction to the members of the ducal family of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. Provided with a letter of introduction from the duke he went to Leipzig in May 1750 to perfect himself in playing and composition under the tuition of Bach. It was the last year of Bach's life, but he received Müthel into his house, and Müthel was with him in his last illness and at his death. He then went to Naumburg to Bach's son-in-law Altnikol, and afterwards visited Dresden and Potsdam, at which latter place he made the acquaintance of Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach, with whom he continued on terms of close friendship. In 1753 he accepted a call to Riga, where he remained for the rest of his life as organist to the Lutheran church.

Müthel is described as one of the best organ and clavier players and composers of his time. Burney speaks of his clavier works in the highest terms, describing them indeed as more difficult than those of Handel, Scarlatti, Schobert and C. P. E. Bach; but as characterized by so much novelty, taste, grace and contrivance as to entitle them to be ranked among the best productions of the kind.¹ Only a few of Müthel's works were published, among them two Concertos, C minor and D minor, for clavier with accompaniment of strings, published at Riga in 1767; three Sonatas and two Ariosi with variations published by Haffner at Nuremberg; a 'Duetto für 2 Claviere, 2 Flügel, oder 2 Fortepiano', Riga, 1771, which appears to be the earliest work with "fortepiano" on the title. In Madame D'Arblay's Diary mention is made of this duet as played by two members of Burney's family at many of his house concerts. If Müthel's clavier works have that originality which Burney and Schubart² ascribe to them, it is surprising that in these days of revivals none of them has ever been republished.

J. R. M.

MUTI, Giovanni Vincenzo Macedonio di (b. ?; d. ?).

Italian 16th-17th-century composer. He lived at Naples in the early 17th century and held the title of Cavaliere. Two books of his madrigals were published in 1603 and 1606.

E. v. d. s.

MUTIO SCEVOLA (Opera). See CAVALLI.

MUZIO, Claudia (b. Pavia, 1892; d. Rome, 24 May 1936).

Italian soprano singer. She was the daughter of a man employed in opera who at various times acted as assistant stage manager at the Covent Garden Opera in London and at the Metropolitan Opera in New York. Showing musical gifts, she at first studied the harp and pianoforte, but the teacher with whom she took pianoforte lessons at Milan, who was also a voice-trainer, advised her to take to singing and taught her the art. She made her operatic debut in the title-part of Puccini's 'Manon Lescaut' at Arezzo on 7 Feb. 1912. This led to various engagements in Italy, and after appearing at Covent Garden during two seasons, she sang for the first time, as Tosca, in New York on 4 Dec. 1916, with Caruso and Scotti. Also at the Metropolitan she sang Giorgetta in the same composer's 'It tabarro' when the 'Trittico' was first produced at the Metropolitan on 4 Dec. 1918. After this she appeared for several years in New York, giving a first hearing of a number of parts there, and on 7 Dec. 1922 she appeared as Aida at Chicago. She also sang frequently in South America, Mexico and Havana, while in Italy she made periodical appearances, particularly at the Teatro alla Scala at Milan, as a specially engaged star.

E. B.

MUZIO SCEVOLA (Opera). See AMADEI. ARIOSTI. BONONCINI (G.). HANDEL. MATTEI (F.).

MYCIELSKI, Zygmunt (b. Przeworsk, 17 Aug. 1907).

Polish composer. He studied with Mme Wysocka in Poland and later with Dukas and Nadia Boulanger in Paris. His compositions

¹ 'Present State of Music in Germany', II, 328-29.

² 'Ideen zur Ästhetik der Tonkunst' (1784).

include music for Euripides' 'Alkestis' (trans. by Jan Kasprowicz); 'Narcissus', ballet in 3 parts; 'Portrait of a Muse', recitation with mixed chorus and 15 instruments; a Symphony, 5 Symphonic Sketches, 'Lamento di Tristano' for small orchestra, in memory of Szymanowski; Trio for violin, cello & pianoforte; Suite for violin and pianoforte; 'Cinq Pièces enfantines' for pianoforte; many songs.

G. R. H.

MYERS, Rollo (Hugh) (b. Chislehurst, Kent, 23 Jan. 1892).

English critic. He was educated privately and at Balliol College, Oxford, and he also had one year at the R.C.M. in London. From 1919 to 1934 he lived in Paris as music correspondent first to 'The Times' and later to the 'Daily Telegraph'. In 1935-44 he was on the staff of the B.B.C. in London, and in 1945-46 he was music officer for the British Council in Paris. After that he lived in London again, where he became editor of the 'Chesterian' in 1947 and of 'Music Today' in 1949. Apart from his musical career, he was in the League of Nations Secretariat at Geneva in 1920-21 and was Pro-Consul of the British Consulate-General in Paris in 1933-34.

The books published by Myers are:

- 'Modern Music: its Aims and Tendencies' (London, 1923).
- 'Music in the Modern World' (London, 1939).
- 'Erik Satie' ('Contemporary Composers' series) (London, 1948).
- 'Debussy' (London, 1949).

TRANSLATIONS

- 'Cock and Harlequin' (Jean Cocteau) (London, 1921).
- 'A Call to Order' (Cocteau) (London, 1926).

• He has also composed songs to words by Gautier, Jules Renard and Jean Cocteau, published in Paris and London.

E. B.

MYRIELL, Thomas (b. ?; d. ?).

English 16th-17th-century musician. He made a most important collection of 16th- and early 17th-century English and Italian compositions, including apparently some of his own. It has an engraved title-page, 'Tristitiaie remedium', and the year is 1616. Another manuscript collection in the Fétis Library, Brussels, bears his autograph signature.

E. V. d. s.

BIBL.—DAVEY, HENRY, 'History of English Music' (London, 1921), p. 164.

MYSLIVEČEK (Mysliweczek), Josef (b. Prague, 9 Mar. 1737; d. Rome, 4 Feb. 1781).

Bohemian composer. He was the son of a wealthy miller, who wished him and his brother to follow his trade. He was given a good education and allowed to learn the violin. But after the Prussian wars the family fortunes were much diminished, and Mysliveček relinquished his claim in the family business to his brother after their father's death, the more readily because he was anxious to devote himself to the study of music. He became a pupil of Habermann and Seger. After many attempts at composition and much wandering he went to Venice in 1763, making further studies with Pescetti, particularly in the setting of Italian words and the conventions of Italian opera. He then lived for a time at Parma, where he had a love affair with the singer Lucrezia Aguiari, whose incredible vocal tricks and high range were to astonish the boy Mozart so much in 1770.

Mysliveček's first operatic success was with 'Bellerofonte' at the Naples Teatro San Carlo on 29 Jan. 1767. It was so great as to make his reputation, and though he returned to northern Italy, he was recalled to Naples no less than nine times. 'Motezuma', at the Teatro della Pergola at Florence in Jan. 1771 spread his reputation beyond Italy. It was given at Munich¹, and so were several other operas of his. 'Ezio' was produced at Naples in 1775. Many of his parts were written for the singer Caterina Gabrielli, who said nobody could write so well for her voice. With her he had another love affair, and she is said to have ruined his character, her own having already earned her the worst personal reputation, apart from her great fame as an artist.

In 1771 Mysliveček received the diploma of the Accademia Filarmonica of Bologna. His fame having preceded him to Munich, he was invited by the Elector of Bavaria in 1777 to go there in person, and he there produced the oratorio 'Abramo ed Isacco', which was for some time ascribed to Haydn. Mozart, who had already met him at Bologna in Nov. 1772, again saw him at Munich in 1777, but found him desperately ill in hospital, evidently suffering from venereal disease. Mozart's mother forbade her son to visit him, but he disregarded her instructions and went to the hospital, where Mysliveček gave him a letter of recommendation to Count Pachta of Prague.

After great sufferings Mysliveček was eventually able to return to Italy. But he was afflicted with a sorry disfigurement by the loss of his nose, due to the clumsiness of a surgeon. He still had some success, however. On 4 Nov. 1778 he produced his setting of Metastasio's 'Olimpiade' at the San Carlo, Naples, and it threw every one into transports of enthusiasm; and 'Armida' appeared at the Milan Teatro alla Scala on 26 Dec. 1779. It was an Italian translation of Quinault's 'Armide'² and Mysliveček's last opera. After that, having lived in great splendour in Rome for a time, he fell upon evil days. He died in misery—it is said naked in a shed; but a young English friend named Barry buried him in San Lorenzo di Lucina and erected a monument to him there.

¹ 'Motezuma' ('Montezuma') was revived at the Prague Conservatory as late as 1931.

² Set by Lully in 1686.

The Italians, in despair at the pronunciation of his name, called him Venatorini or, more intimately, "il divino Boemo". He was clearly very gifted. Mozart says of his sonatas that "they are bound to please, not difficult and very effective", and urges his sister to learn them by heart.¹ Elsewhere he speaks of him as a prize difficult to replace.² He was undoubtedly very fascinating³ but, with all his engagements, unable to keep himself respectable.⁴

His works include about 30 operas, 4 oratorios, many symphonies (including a set entitled 'January', 'February', 'March', 'April', 'May' and 'June'), concertos, harpsichord sonatas, arias, etc.⁵ G., adds.

BIBL.—NETTL, P., 'Mozart in Böhmen' (Prague, 1938).
SAINT-FOX, G. DE, 'Un Ami de Mozart' (Rev. Mus., Vol. XII, No. 2).

See also Suda (opera on M.).

MYSTÈRES D'ISIS, LES. A French arrangement of Mozart's 'Zauberflöte', words by Morel, music adapted by Lachnith; produced Paris, Opéra, 20 Aug. 1801. G.

¹ Letter, 13 Nov. 1777.

² 7 Aug. 1778.

³ 11 Oct. 1777.

⁴ 22 Feb. 1778.

⁵ A detailed if not quite complete list of works is in the Moravian Musical Archives at Brno, which also contains numerous photostats of MSS.

BIBL.—SERVIÈRES, G., 'Épisodes d'histoire musicale' (Paris, 1914).

MYSZ-GMEINER, Lula (b. Kronstadt, 16 Aug. 1876; d. ?, 7 Aug. 1948).

German mezzo-soprano singer. She first studied violin under Olga Grigorovich at Kronstadt in 1882-92 and then singing under Rudolf Lassel there in 1892-96 afterwards with Gustav Walter in Vienna, En ilie Herzog, Etelka Gerster and Lilli Lehmann in Berlin, and Raimund von Zur Mühlen in London. She toured as a concert singer from 1900 onwards and that year married Ernst Mysz, a retired naval officer. In 1920 she was appointed professor of singing at the Berlin High School for Music and in 1926 she toured in the U.S.A.

E. B.

MYSZYŃSKA - WOYCIECHOWSKA, Leokadia (b. Łowicz, Poland, 1858; d. Warsaw, 1930).

Polish composer. She was a pupil of Żeleński at the Warsaw Conservatory. She won many prizes for her songs with a piano-forte accompaniment and her partsongs. She also wrote several orchestral pieces, 'Variations sérieuses' in A major, a Sonata for violin and pianoforte, and a pianoforte Trio.

C. R. H.

